The recuperating power of the South is a marvel to us all. Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturer's Record, of Baltimore, in a revised edition of his pamphlet, "Facts About the South," opens our eyes on this subject. He shows that at the beginning of the civil war, 1860, the South contained one-fourth of the white population of the United States, and owned 44 per cent. of its wealth. Her agricultural products that year were more than half the agricultural products of the whole country. At that time we had more than 30 per cent. of the banking capital; and Georgia's wealth was more than that of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island. But the war came and swept most of this vast wealth away. During the struggle the loss was $2,100,000,000. The loss during reconstruction days was $300,000,000 more. To these amounts the loss to business by the death of her sons, and her part of the war debt are added, making a grand total of $5,000,000,000. So great was the poverty of the South, and so rapidly did the wealth shift to the North, that in 1870 Massachusetts had $1,590,000, while the entire South only had $3,000,000,000. But the period of recuperation now began. In 1880, fifteen years after the was, we had $7,600,000,000 worth of property, and ten years later this had increased $3,800,000,000, which only lacked $1,000,000 of being equal to the increase of New England and the Middle States combined. Our present annual agricultural products are about $1,000,000,000. But the South is no longer simply an agricultural country. In 1890 she had $2,500,000 invested in manufactories, and now that sum has grown to almost $1,000,000,000. She almost has a monopoly of the manufacture of coarse cotton goods, and is beginning to compete with New England in the production of finer qualities. In coal and pig-iron she seems destined to lead the world. Mr. Edmonds estimates her mining and manufacturing wealth for 1897 to be $1,200,000,000 which, added to her agricultural wealth, makes a total for last year of $2,100,000,000. Railroads have also been built since 1880 to the amount of 28,000 miles. To all this must be added the fact that one-half of the standing timber in the United States is in the South. And when the Panama Canal is built, which will be in the near future, our progress will receive a new impetus. The reader must overlook a little unpardonable pride on the part of Texas, when he learns that in all these mighty strides forward the Lone Star state has been in the vanguard.

"Summering in the South" is a rather pleasant sounding phrase, and thus far this summer it is all right for the pleasure-seeker. The weather has been delightful, and I have not heard of a single sunstroke. Rains have been frequent, but not heavy, which secures us both a pleasant climate and an abundant crop. Any one acquainted with Texas will understand the situation when I tell him that there has not been a crack in the ground this summer, and that like the man of the Scriptures, our farmers are puzzled about how to store their crops.

B. B. Sanders has just closed a great meeting at Garland with 51 additions. But he is one of our best evangelists and he had the support of a first-class church and a model pastor, C. L. Cole. Of course the Douthits were with him to sing.

Geo. B. Ranshaw is encouraged with the outlook at San Antonio. Audiences steadily increasing, with five additions the first month.

E. B. Challener, of Taylor, one of our purest and most useful men, has gone home to God. Though frail for years, he has been a hard worker in the vineyard of the Lord.

"Whitecapism" must be stamped out in Texas. This wholesale brutality to the negro must be stopped. Why shoot down women and children because some man has sinned? Why not run down the transgressor and punish him according to law? It is unworthy of the white man, and while it continues we need not be surprised that foreign capital gives us the "go by." But let the reader from abroad understand that the people of this state as a whole have no sympathy with this barbarism, and it will soon be a thing of the past. As proof of this, the Democratic party, which rules here with an immense majority, in its convention at Galveston a few days since, adopted UNANIMOUSLY a strong resolution against it.

Letter from D. L. Moody.

I would like to remind those who are interested in the work of the Army and Navy Christian Commission that the negotiations that are now going on with a view to peace with Spain by no means make the opportunity to reach the soldiers with the gospel any less imperative in its demands upon the church. The soldiers, both volunteers and regulars, are still together in the camps with the prospect that many of them will be for months to come. This will probably be the case in this country and certainly will be in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines. The sailors in the navy are still perfectly accessible to the work of the Commission. It seems to me that we shall make a serious mistake if we lose our grip upon this work now. God has given us wonderful access to the hearts of men and we must hold right on.

We have sent General Howard to Cuba to arrange for work there and expect daily to hear from him, asking that workers be sent right on. We have the permission of the War Department to go there, and propose to put in some good men at once.

Mr. Ferdinand Schiverea and Rev. Dr. Hatcher, of Richmond, Va., are preaching at General Lee's camp at Jacksonville; Rev. Charles Herald, of Brooklyn, is preaching to the sailors and marines at Key West. Hundreds of them are continually accessible there and we look for a great work among them. Over twenty of the war vessels have been supplied with good literature, and measures are being taken to reach all the others as rapidly as possible.

And so the work is going right on along all lines. There is no cessation of the intense interest in the camps. Just read this extract from one of the last letters I have had from there:

Last night was one of the grandest we have had yet. I wish you could have looked in upon the scene at the 160th Indiana. It was their last night before leaving for Porto Rico. The large tent wouldn't hold one-half of them, but away back on the hill they stood through it all. At the close, when I asked all to come forward that wanted to accept Christ, there were almost 200 men came. It was a solemn and blessed scene. Just in front of me stood a young man with a broken and contrite heart. As we closed he took my hand and said, "I am a minister's son; am twenty-four years old. I have been pleaded with many times to take this step, but never have before."

One of the delegates reports:

As I came up to the hospital this morning and asked the surgeon if there was anything that I could be allowed to do among the men, he answered me most earnestly, "Yes! for God's sake go in with this woman who has just arrived and who will find her boy dying—I have not told her." I passed into the hospital tent following a lady dressed in black, who had just alighted from the carriage which had brought her from the station. She had come from Illinois to nurse her sick soldier boy. As we stood by the cot I told her from the doctor that he was unconscious and would live but a few minutes. God helped the mother to maintain her composure and to stand with her hand upon the brow of her son as he passed away without opening his eyes to give her a last parting look. After he had breathed his last, I told the mother of my visit to the hospital the previous day, and that I had asked her son if he was a Christian, and that with a bright, happy face he had said most earnestly, "You bet I am," and pointed to the badge of the Epworth League pinned upon his undershirt. I told her of my prayer with him and of the comfort I was sure he had in the presence of his Savior. The mother turned back the sheet from the form of her son and as she saw the badge still pinned where the nurse at his request had placed it, she bent over her boy with sobs that moved all our hearts; the doctor, nurses and patients sobbed with her.

I hope that the Christians will continue to pray and give for this work. I believe if we are faithful to God in it that we may see many hundreds more of our soldiers and sailors brought to Christ. I want to say also that we have some money sent us for the purpose of giving the Word of God to the Spaniards. The War Department has given us permission to work among the prisoners at Portsmouth, and we shall send them Spanish Testaments, Scripture portions, etc., at once.

Contributions sent to me at East Northfield, will be promptly acknowledged.

China Letter.

POLITICAL.

Politically, China's case seems more hopeless than that of Turkey. Russia is slicing away her territory on the north and west, France and Japan on the south and east. From present indications, her political salvation lies in moving her capital south to Nankin, and having her autonomy guaranteed by Anglo-Saxondom. For America has suddenly loosened up as a "world-power." This political question is vital to Protestant missions, for where Russia goes there goes the Greek Church and intolerance, and where France goes there goes the Catholic Church and intolerance. Protestant mission work is impossible where the former holds sway, and extremely difficult under the latter. When such vast interests are at stake we should like to see our government take a strong stand against the partitioning of China.

CHINA'S STRENGTH.

Inch by inch China is being lifted out of her slough of despond. For while politically she seems so hopeless, her real strength is economic and moral in the lives and character of her common people. China contains the largest and most contented, hard-working population of any country in the world. They are fitted to become the manual servants of the race. Moreover, they have had centuries of training in a noble system of ethics. (Noble compared with non-Christian systems.) They revere learning and honor scholarship. By these signs she will conquer.

Her antiquated and evil systems are being undermined by modern scientific thought and Christian teaching and example. To these she is yielding. And it has been predicted that even if she were to-day partitioned among the nations, in one hundred years she will have "conquered her conquerors" by the process of absoption, so infinitely patient is she, so persistent and peaceful, and withal so massive and moral. These things are encouraging to us, for it is such qualities as these which make possible a high type of Christian character and an enduring church.

SHANGHAI NOTES.

We had some difficulty in getting possession of our newly purchased building. It had been an "opium-palace," and the dealer offered me fifty dollars a month to go on with his business. But he is out now, and several carpenters are at work remodeling the building. We are having seats made for the "chapel" room for about 150 people. The capacity of this room can easily be increased to 300.

There is not a good baptistery in Shanghai, but our plans are about completed for a good one. We also expect to put a brick front to the building. We hope to send a photograph of the building when completed.

On April 26 we had six baptisms.

One child in the day-school died of smallpox lately. We have this disease ever lurking about.

Our Shanghai preacher has been illl with fever for four weeks, but is now better.

On June 14 we had two baptisms.

Several have asked us to open English classes in the institute.

We have many faithful attendants at regular prayer-meetings.

The women's work is encouraging.

One of our members married a "heathen" wife, but he thinks she will not remain long out of the fold.

I hope to find room in the building for a Chinese "study" for myself, where I can be at "headquarters" all the time.

At our chapel at Tsaseo, twenty-five miles from Shanghai, our preacher opens the doors each forenoon to any children who wish to study Christian books.

And so the good work goes on. The lot and building complete will represent about $4,000. Pray for us. W. P. BENTLEY.

The Missouri Christian Lectureship and the M. C. M. A.

Perhaps the best session of the Lectureship ever held in the state was the recent one at Carrollton, July 18-21. While the attendance was not as large as in some former years, yet all the lectures were of a very high order, and a lively interest was manifested by all in attendance throughout the entire session. J. T. Ogle the beloved pastor of the Carrollton church makes an admirable host, and every one was made to feel at home. The principle features of the Lectureship were the two able lectures of Prof. J. D. Forest, of Irvington, Ind. His first lecture on "The Church and Organized Labor" teemed with helpful suggestions and was not composed entirely of cold theoretical deductions as is usual on such occasions. His lecture on "Social Christianity" also abounded in good things, but by many it was not so highly appreciated as his first lecture.

One thing was impressed upon the minds of those present, and that is that the "up-to-date" preacher must be a student of sociological questions. Neither of the reviewers of Prof. Forest's lectures were present. Bro. C. H. Winders, of Columbia, reviewed his first lecture, and Bro. F. V. Loos, of Liberty, his second, and both did exceedingly well under the circumstances. Bro. Plattenburg, who was to have delivered a lecture on "The Uses of the Old Testament in the New," was not present, neither was the lecture as in the case of Bro. Garrison. But Bro. Ely, of Kirksville, was there with a lecture on "The Creed of the Church" that was clear, pointed and loyal to the Word of God. His reviewer was M. M. Goode, of St. Joseph, who convinced all present that if anything was contained in a lecture worthy of criticism he could certainly find it. Bro. J. H. Garrison's lecture on "Modern Changes in Theological Thought" was read by Bro. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City. This lecture was of a high order, as was also the review of it by President Clinton Lockhart, of Christian University. Pres. Lockhart is justly regarded by the Missouri brotherhood as one of the very best thinkers. Bro. Procter attended the Lectureship, as he always does, and every now and then would regale the brethren with his advanced ideas on the religious questions of the day.

Prof. P. O. Powell's lecture on "The Development of the Idea of God as it Exists in Modern Thought"—a big subject and a big lecture. He showed much study and thought in the preparation of this lecture, though there was much in it that was not accepted by many present. Bro. Granville Snell, of Trenton, was his reviewer. Taken all in all it was a successful meeting and thoroughly enjoyed by all. The next meeting of the Lectureship will be at Huntsville and the time for holding it will be in March instead of July as heretofore. Bro. Stine, of Paris, was the presiding officer and he filled the position with grace and dignity.

The M. C. M. A. means the Missouri Christian Ministerial Association, that holds its annual meetings in connection with the Lectureship. This was the first meeting of the Association since its organization at Trenton last fall. The program that was prepared by the executive committee was fully carried out, and the addresses were all on live and important subjects. The first address was delivered by J. T. Ogle, his subject being "The Power of the Christian Ministry." President Lockhart's address was full of good things. So also was Bro. T. A. Abbott's, Davis Errett's and J. J. Morgan's. The Association asked that these addresses be published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, all but Pres. Lockhart's, which was ordered printed in pamphlet form and distributed among the preachers of the state, as it fully set forth the objects of the Association. This will shortly be done, and we trust that the addresses of the other brethren will appear in our religious papers soon.

The report of the secretary showed that 96 ministers had asked for membership in the Association and at this session they were duly elected. The treasurer showed a cash balance of $27.25. Clinton Lockhart was re-elected president, J. J. Morgan vice-president and C. C. Hill secretary and treasurer. The next meeting of the Association will be at Huntsville, immediately after the Lectureship, in March.

The members and friends of the Association are much encouraged with the start it has made and with the good it has already accomplished. We trust that all members will attend the next meeting, at Huntsville, and help to push the good work along. Remember, this is not an ecclesiasticism, but a movement inaugurated for the moral and intellectual advancement of the ministry of the state. No good, true minister can object to the purposes it seeks to subserve.

Brother preacher, if you have not paid your dues for 1898-'99 send them in at once (fifty cents a year) and the secretary will at once forward your new certificate which makes you credentials of which you may justly feel proud.

Walking the Floor.

When a business man gets to the point where he cannot sleep at night, where he is so shattered of nerve that it is torture to even remain in his bed, and he has to get up and pace the floor—it is time for that man to bring himself up with a round turn. If he does not, it means nervous prostration and mental, if not physical, death.

For a man who gets into this condition there is a remedy that will brace him up, put him on his feet and make a man of him again. It is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It goes to the bottom of things. It searches out the first cause. When a man is in this condition you can put your finger on one of two spots and hit that first cause — the stomach or the liver or both. This great medicine acts directly on these spots. It promptly transforms a weak stomach into a healthy one. It facilitates the flow of digestive juices and makes digestion and assimilation perfect. It gives a man an appetite like a boy's. It invigorates the liver. It fills the blood with the life-giving elements of the food, and makes it pure, rich, red and plentiful. The blood is the life current, and when it is filled with the elements that build new and healthy tissues, it does not take long to make a man well and strong. It builds firm, muscular flesh tissues and strong and steady nerve fibers. It puts new life, vigor and vitality into every atom and organ of the body. It cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. Nothing "just as good" can be found at medicine stores.

"I had suffered about eleven years with a pain in the back of my head and back," writes Mr. Robert Hubbard, of Varner, Lincoln Co., Ark. "I suffered for eleven years and spent a great deal of money for doctors and medicine, but did not get relief. Then I tried four bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and improved greatly. I sent for five more and now am glad to tell everyone that I am in good health."

Florida Letter.

For about a week the thermometer has been bobbing about among the nineties, and we have been trying to keep cool under the trying circumstances. Fortunately our warm days are invariably followed by delightful nights, which in a great measure compensate for the hot midday period. Yet if the thermometric reports published from other points be true, Florida has not suffered as much as many other more Northern states. There are now about fifteen thousand volunteers encamped in Jacksonville. The "boys in blue" have, all things considered, a good camping ground. One splendid advantage, always appreciated in a warm climate, is the fine pure water supply at the encampment. Jacksonville has a fine water system, supplied by natural flowing artesian wells. The pure liquid, clear as crystal, flows from a depth of from five hundred to a thousand feet, and is uncontaminated by any contact with surface water. Pipes bearing this precious boon have been laid throughout the camps, and water-taps and shower-baths are numerous.

In addition to the work done among the soldiers by the chaplains of the various regiments, the Army Christian Commission of the International Committee Young Men's Christian Associations are doing much for their spiritual and moral welfare. It has been my privilege to accept invitations to preach at the brigade tents, and more orderly and more attentive audiences I have never addressed. Invariably at the close of each service numbers of young men have come forward and introduced themselves as members of the Christian Church from various states. These young brethren, when off duty and when allowed passes through the lines, attend our services in the city. While on my way home from camps yesterday, and while waiting for a tram car, I was accosted by a fine-looking young soldier on sentry duty near the lines. He stepped up to me and thanked me for the service the night before, remarking that he had been present, and that he had fully decided to lead a better life. I allowed three or four cars to pass while I encouraged him to fully give his heart and service to the Lord Jesus. He had once been a Christian, he said, but had fallen back into the ways of sin. I left him, and as I cordially grasped his hand I felt to thank God that a word spoken by a humble servant had fanned in one young heart at least a spark into a flame of love and renewed determination. This is but one of many instances that might be related. God bless these dear boys! Doubtless many an anxious father and praying mother are daily petitioning the throne of grace on their behalf. I have visited and talked with many in their tents, at the request sent by fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, and shall continue to do so, being only too glad to aid in any way in the work of Christian love, sympathy and influence. The Baptism in the Holy Spirit.

Bro. Ira Billman's review of my articles on this theme does not call for more than a brief notice. I would like to say, if I could do it without discourtesy, as I certainly can without unkindness, that he does not understand what I have written. That this is not altogether my fault, the editor' note appended to his article seems to show. He did not read carefully the statements which he condemns as unscriptural, nor heed the reasons given to support them. His inaccurate quotations as well as the whole trend of his review seems to show this.

He sees clearly that the words "baptism in the Holy Spirit" are figurative, and yet he is so in bondage to this figure he cannot see that "baptism," "coming," "receiving," etc., figuratively describe the same "plain fact." It is a "baptism," and therefore it cannot be a "reception," or a "coming." Surely, an intelligent student should not fall into such a vice of interpretation as this.

There are not twelve or twenty ways of receiving the Spirit, or modes of "Holy Spirit baptism." There is only one "mode" of it as far as I know, but many modes of describing this transcendent fact. It would be well to inquire what are the limitations of this figure of baptism as applied to the gift of the Holy Spirit, and how is it that so many diverse figures can correctly describe the same thing. Such an inquiry would certainly suggest that it is possible to press the figure of baptism too far, and that in our ordinary easy explanation in which we fix attention on the baptism we may have missed the point altogether. All these figures were appropriate ways of communicating the great distinctive fact of the new dispensation, and do they not deal with the fact rather than with its mode or effect?

As to the "unscriptural use of the crucial word baptism," I have sought to guard against that by showing (1) that the word is not technical, as though used to describe a peculiar and special grace, but is only one of many words having equal authority setting forth the fact of the gift of the Spirit, and is not to be honored above other inspired words selected for the same purpose, nor to have any exclusive right over them. It would be better not to use it at all than so to misuse it; and (2) that the Scriptures do not warrant such a limitation of the word in its figurative use, as is common among us, but would be appropriately applied to the gift of the Holy Spirit to all Christians. The reasons for so thinking I have freely given.

The conception of baptism in the Holy Spirit given in the review will be sufficiently disposed of when it is clearly stated. It is a spiritual state in which a man is compelled, overwhelmed, loses his power of choice, is divinely hypnotized, completely overpowered by the Holy Spirit, put in a corner and from which he received no spiritual benefit, and for his conduct during the continuance of this state there is no praise or blame. Baptized in the Holy Spirit a man would be in an ecstasy, beside himself.

If this is what the Scriptures mean by baptism in the Holy Spirit, I confess I have missed it in my writing. But this is nothing but the old mechanical theory of inspiration. I need not discuss this understanding of the subject. But it might be well to say again that baptism in the Spirit is new and peculiar to Christianity. Neither inspiration nor miracles are new. If inspiration is the essential thing nor necessarily involved in this baptism, and the baptism occurred only at Jerusalem and Cæsarea, then it would seem to follow that no one was inspired who was not a partaker in one of these baptisms. But certainly there were men inspired who were not present on either occasion. And if so were there other cases of this baptism, or was there inspiration without the baptism?

I have stated my view about as clearly as I can in my essay. A full answer to my reviewer will be found there. There is one promise of the Holy Spirit which is to all believers. There is one gift of the Spirit according to this one promise. The essential thing of this gift is the personal communication of the Holy Spirit to the sons of God. There was no ordinary and extraordinary gift of the Spirit, that is, two distinct gifts, but there were extraordinary operations or manifestations of the one gift as there was need. Inspiration and other miraculous powers, together with all benefits of the Spirit's presence in the old dispensation with the enlarged blessings of his presence under the new, are all included in this one gift, but not in every case of it, except as the special need of the kingdom required. But these special fulfillments of the general promise were incidental to the essential meaning of the gift as set forth in Jno. 14:16, 17.

The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses.

B. Q. DENHAM.

The writer has yet to hear of a Society of Christian Endeavor which has given the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses a fair trial, where the testimony is anything but enthusiastically favorable to the courses. The old saying, "The proof of the pudding is in the the eating," applies here with force. Where there is any prospect of securing an efficient leader no society should hesitate to undertake the courses, even though but few can be enlisted in the first effort. Few things are so contagious as enthusiasm. If a few can start the work and enthusiastically talk it up with their acquaintances it will soon enlist others. The success of the plan does not, however, depend upon numbers. Numbers doubtless add somewhat to the interest, but are not essential to success. The real difficulty seems to be to get a start in our many societies. A good, earnest start will mean success, though the beginning be small. Let not our C. E. leaders hesitate. Being once certain they can start with a few who are in earnest, let them launch out.

The greatest cause with which Christians have to do in this age is the effort to reunite the forces of Christendom. To accomplish this it is not sufficient to have our members converted to Christ in the sense of giving up their wills, affections and lives to him. They must be intelligently posted as to his will in regard to Christian union. They must have a comprehensive conception of the movement, and its history, that is seeking to accomplish the reunion. There are members fully converted, so that their lives are an earnest effort to follow Jesus, who know little or nothing about the plea and its history for the reunion of Christians the world over. There are such personally converted souls who know almost nothing about the great effort to preach the gospel to every creature. It is necessary that education shall follow conversion. Because I know of no method so effective, for the masses, as the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, I heartily advocate the adoption of the plan by all our Y. P. S. C. E. organizations. Let us not forget that if "eternal vigilance is the price of of liberty," even so eternal agitation is the price of success here.

Minnesota.

Hurry forward the annual report!

See the program and confer with your neighbor.

Will all please bear in mind that the books close August 16th?

Do not forget the convention dates, August 23-26, and that the point is Mankato, the beautiful.

Will pastors make the best use possible of the program, published last week, laying its salient points before the congregation, and stirring up a large delegation?

J. G. Slick's meeting at Wyanette much strengthened the brethren, and increased activity may be looked for from that point. The meeting lasted but ten days and adjourned to fall because of the existing busy season.

H. D. Williams' successor at Mankato is to be Therman Hill, of Butte, Mont. Bro. Hill is highly spoken of and will be a distinct gain to the ministerial force of the state. Another important acquisition is on the tapis for one of the strongest churches.

Plans for the new church building have been drawn and ere this letter is at hand the brethren will have begun their church workshop. Bro. Moore reports audiences increasing and enthusiasm much increased.

A sister writes thanking the board and through the board the congregations of the state, for aid rendered in keeping the evangelist at that point till success is assured. Bro. Moore will remain for some weeks yet, likely.

Ho there, ye languid one! Here's the spirit carrying along one of the congregations of the state to undisputed victory (extract from letter): "All lines going along nicely. One of our girls who lives four miles in the country walked in yesterday morning (Lord's day), with the thermometer 94 degress in the shade, that she might not miss the Bible-school. I could relate many other examples of self-sacrifice equally as great."

The Canby meeting, held by G. W. Elliott, of North Dakota, continued from July 5th to July 24th with 17 confessions. The Antelope Hills congregation (five miles away) co-operated with the Iowa State Board in holding the meeting and the town was stirred as never before. The Iowa Board was presented with a sum of money by a sister at Pittsburg, Pa., for the express purpose of employing an evangelist and the board generously stepped across the line and aided in building up this co-operative work with Antelope Hills, for which will the board and the sister accept the sincere thanks of the Minnesota brethren? The Antelope Hills brethren srcrificed greatly, as might be expected, erecting the tabernacle, and dismantling their own church that there might be no question of success. E. J. Sias, of the Antelope Hills church is in charge.

Notes and News.

David Walk, pastor Broadway Church, Los Angeles, reports gratifying increase and advancement in the Chinese mission under his care, but laments the want of devoted teachers. "The absolute loyalty and devotion of many of these Mongolian brethren," he says, "would shame the average Caucasian disciple." Of his work on East Eighth St. he says: "It is only a question of time when we shall have another flourishing and self-supporting church in this rapidly growing city. I am putting seven days and six nights every week into the work committed to my care."

The churches of Christ of the Bitter Root Valley will hold a "camp meeting convention" at Florence, Aug. 16-20. A good list of living topics have been selected and able speakers to discuss them to the edification of those present. Every Disciple in Western Montana is expected at that convention. J. C. B. Stivers, of Missoula, Mont., says: "Bring your tent and enjoy yourself." Brethren from other states will also be heartily welcomed. Florence is on the Bitter Root Railroad, twenty miles south of Missoula.

C. E. Church, of Englishville, Mich., reports a debate recently held at Englishville, Mich., between E. K. Evans (Latter Day Saint) and F. G. Porter, pastor of the Christian Church at Ballards, Mich., in which he expressed the opinion that "Mormonism" in that section hereafter will be "a thing of the past." He highly commends F. G. Porter for the clearness and strength of his arguments, and believes that he succeeded in convincing the people generally of the errors, deceptions and weaknesses of the doctrine advocated by his opponent. The contrasts between the two disputants, as presented by Brother Church, were strikingly in favor of Brother Porter and of the cause which he advocated. We hope that much good may result to the people of that town, religiously and socially, from the debate.

A. Plunkett, who has been preaching for the church at Barnard, Ind., as opportunity afforded, reports the dedication of a handsome church house, free from debt. Work on the house began April 1st. The church is five years old, has had a hard struggle, but is succeeding. Twelve have been added to the church under the ministry of Bro. Plunkett. W. H. Knotts, of Zionsville, Ind., delivered the dedicatory sermon. We are informed that Bro. Knotts' second attempt in the ministry was made at Barnard, four years ago, while a student of Butler College. His sermon pleased the large audience present at the dedication. About one thousand people were present. Eld. Mayhall, of the Baptist Church, participated in the services. Eld. Stewart, an aged preacher from Wyoming, was present, as was also Eld. Brewer, of Danville, and O. E. Kelley, of Roachdale. Bro. Kelley preached in the afternoon. After his address Bro. Brewer made a few remarks, and thus ended a day long to be remembered by the Disciples at Barnard. Bro. Knotts is now assisting Bro. Plunkett in a meeting there.

Here is an excellent opportunity for Endeavor Societies to do practical Christian work. The Endeavor Society of the Christian Church at Chattanooga desires to organize a systematic and continuous Christian work at Camp Thomas for the soldiers. To do this they need a large and fully equipped tent on the ground, which they alone cannot furnish. They therefore ask the churches everywhere, and in our larger cities especially, to assist them in the establishment and carrying on this work. The Society at Chattanooga has been doing much work already at the camp, but cannot meet the emergency without the tent and supplies. Will not each Society arrange at once to donate some part of this outfit—the tent, seats, books, communion set, etc., etc. Write at once to Mrs. J. A. Setliff or I. S. Post, Chattanooga, Tenn., what you can send, or for information of any kind about the work, or any soldier in that camp. This is an important work, and should not lack for hearty and enthusiastic support.

District Convention.

The annual convention of the Christian Churches of the 6th Kansas district was held in Phillipsburg, July 19, 20 and 21. There are ten counties in the district, viz., Jewell, Smith, Phillips, Rooks, Osborne, Mitchell, Lincoln, Ellsworth, Ellis and Trego. Representatives were present from all but Lincoln, Ellsworth, Ellis and Trego. There were fifty delegates from abroad and a goodly number from the immediate vicinity.

The program was a strong one and was well carried out, the topics in the various departments being exceptionally well handled. The addresses by Mrs. Hazelrigg, Messrs. Hilton, Drummond and Smith, were especially strong. Much good was done for the cause of Christ, the church at Phillipsburg strengthened, and the new friendships formed were of a pleasing and lasting character.

The visiting delegates were met at the trains or received by committees as they drove in and assigned to homes in the city. Meals were served at a dining hall supplied by contributions of the brethren in common. At the close of the convention those who came by train were "brought on their way" to the Rock Island and Central Branch, where they took leave of us for their homes.

Some important resolutions were passed by the convention. F. C. JOHNSON.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

The program, for the C. W. B. M. session of the Nevada convention, is completed and will be published soon. We are fortunate in securing the promise of Miss Ada Boyd to speak at the time concerning the work in India. Miss Boyd has been one of our missionaries in India for fifteen years. Mrs. Helen Moses, one of the most spiritual women of the sisterhood, will also address this convention. Sister Bantz, of St. Louis, will speak of "Our Workers in the Field." Mrs. Mary Wisdom-Grant will lend her enthusiasm to the subject, "The Significance of Missions." Miss Mollie Berry will tell "The Story of a Life Membership." Mrs. Kate Ellis Peed will deliver the memorial address. Mesdames Vernon and Bowen and others share the program, and these with our president's address, and the reports of state workers, and the regular business, will make the C. W. B. M. session full, up to the rim. We hope that many delegates and visitors will attend and enjoy the feast.

Will the auxiliary treasurers remember, if they would receive full credit for the year's work, that they must collect closely, and send promptly all money by Sept. 21st, and send their reports to me on the same date? The convention meets Sept. 26-29.

Forty-seven life memberships have been pledged this year and at least one payment must be made on each, and we hope that the full amount ($25.00) will be paid on half of them by the middle of September. We ought to have fifty life memberships to report at Nevada and we will, if three more persons will put their hands in their pockets and draw out some of the Lord's money for this purpose.

The Kirksville auxiliary raised a large amount of money for C. W. B. M. pledges by giving an old ladies' missionary contest. Some of the elderly ladies recited missionary selections and thus instructed and entertained their audience. It was a unique entertainment, and would be even more so should young ladies dress in quaint old-time costumes and recite the same pieces. Other auxiliaries may try it. VIRGINIA HEDGES.

In the South.

There is one pleasant feature in the work here; and the same was true in many places in Texas.

We are continually meeting people who know nothing of us; never heard a sermon from one of our preachers, and these often express a willingness to know and to understand what our position is.

This taxes our ingenuity to properly lay before these people the same things that our fathers presented to others so effectively a half century ago. The wife of a very prominent physician said to me this week: "I have never heard one of you, and I confess I would like to hear your story. This led to a short sermon of perhaps ten minutes in a parlor, which was listened to by representatives of three differing religious peoples.

This will necessitate another call from me on that rich man from New York—rich enough to send free his tracts. So with this I mail a card to B. B. Tyler. I gave F. G. Tyrrell Errett on Our Position, and the next time I saw him he was ready to give up Methodism, and had so told his pastor; and we were ready to go down into and come up out of the waters of baptism.

'Tis pleasant to unfold such a plea to those who are willing to listen, for God hath said, "My Word shall not return unto me void." Our success as a people must have rested in his promise. We have here only a few members, but the Lord has blessed us in the past. Bro. Sapp's ministry here did much to lift us up in the estimation of the denominations and with many of those in the world also.

Several Things.

Bro. H. A. Northcutt recently closed one of the best meetings in the history of the church at Sturgeon. The church that secures Bro. H. A. Northcutt to hold its meetings can make no mistake. He will return next July and hold another meeting for us; then he will go to Madison and hold a meeting in August, 1899. The writer is also pastor of this church. Last Lord's day being a fifth Sunday, I visited my youngest sister, who lives at Bynumville, Chariton county, preached Lord's day morning and evening, also Monday evening, in the Christian church at that place. Bro. J. Jones, evangelist for the Brookfield district, preached Saturday evening. I had the pleasure of taking my sister's confession and burying her with her Lord in Christian baptism on Lord's day. At the close of the sermon Monday evening, Rev. James Ramsey, of the U. B. Church, came forward and was received into the Christian Church and ordained a minister before we left the house. Bro. Ramsey is a young man only 23 years of age, has been teaching school ever since he was 18 and preaching in the U. B. Church for three years. He is full of the missionary spirit, strictly in line with the best thought of the Christian Church and I believe will make a star preacher. EDGAR M. RICHMOND.

Of The Pekin Church.

One year ago last April the writer began to visit irregularly the church at Pekin, Ill. At that time it was almost ready to discuss with some uncertainty the question, "To be or not to be." By the middle of August it seemed to be about decided in the negative. But after two or three weeks' indecision and uncertainty it was resolved to try again. My somewhat irregular visits were continued till January 1st, after which time I was able to meet with them and preach every Sunday morning and evening with what degree of zest I was able to hold in reserve from my college work. The results were as follows: A new organization, and that accomplished without friction and consequent unhappy results; the entire harmony of the church; some additions to the membership; the reviving of all departments of church work; a Sunday-school enrollment of 200; an Endeavor Society of about 50, although that feature had retained its energy well; a Junior Endeavor Society organized; an old debt to their former pastor paid off; money raised for the location of a new pastor with them. Bro. F. E. Hagen, one of our graduate students, accepted the work and was duly installed July 17. The work is starting off encouragingly even in midsummer. We shall expect to hear good things of Bro. H. and the Pekin church after awhile. She is not dead yet, although the atmosphere is quite malarial. It is in that district whence flows the greatest stream of "sin and death" in the world. That much the more need of her "strengthening the things that remain" and being "faithful until death."

The Springdale Chautauqua.

Springdale is a beautiful little city of 2,500 souls, situated on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, 343 miles from St. Louis and in the very midst of the great apple producing belt of Northwest Arkansas. On July 17th, the first convention of the Springdale Chautauqua was concluded. This enterprise is under the management of and promoted solely by our brother, Prof. Josiah H. Shinn, ex-State Superintendent Public Instruction, and is the second Chautauqua in the West to be fostered and sustained by individual capital and pluck. Among the many popular lecturers who charmed our people with their sound logic, eloquence, wit and pathos were Hon. Geo. W. Bain, H. W. Ham, Rev. Sam. W. Small. A. W. Hawkes, John Temple Graves and John J. Ingalls, while the various churches were ably represented by eminent divines from all parts of the county. On July 10th Bro. E. T. Edmonds, of Fort Smith, Ark., delivered a most excellent sermon on "The Profit of Godliness," before a large and highly appreciative audience, and on the following Tuesday, which was Christian Church Day, Bro. F. G. Tyrrell, of St. Louis, gave two masterly addresses. A great deal of credit is due to our brother, Prof. Shinn, for his undauntable energy and enterprise in bringing before the citizens of Northwest Arkansas such rare opportunities for mental, moral and spiritual improvement, and we feel confident that through his efforts there has been disseminated an influence upon the entire community which shall bring forth much good fruit in coming days. The musical feature of the Assembly was under the direction of Prof. Wm. Apmadoc, of Chicago, and this is equivalent to saying it was a decided success. The Wagner Male Quartet was with us one week and won the hearts of all by their sweet songs. We hope to hear them again next year.

CHAS. E. FREEMAN, Pastor.

Mason City Notes.

We have recently enjoyed a visit from Chas. S. L. Brown, of Washington, Kansas, a brilliant young preacher of some four years' experience, whom I baptized into Christ in 1892. Being on the lookout for a location, and hearing from Bro. Haggard that De Witt, Iowa, was needing a man, he went there immediately and has been employed for a time, at least.

Two weeks ago Bro. R. A. Martin, who with his family tried to feed on the husks of the "Rainy River Colony" in Canada, came down here with his excellent wife and three small children to stay till a suitable church could be found to employ him. He is a man in the prime of life, with a noble Christian character and ten years' successful experience in the ministry to commend him to the favorable consideration of the churches. He is a younger brother of Sylvester M. Martin, whose evangelistic labors have been so wonderfully blessed. He should have a call very soon to some good church, for I believe he will render good service, and honor the cause of Christ by his life and labors.

On Thursday, July 25th, Bro. A. B. Moore, state evangelist of Minnesota, who is giving his whole time to the establishment of the cause in Austin, Minn., came down to visit us and to present the claims of Austin to the brethren and sisters assembled at the prayer-meeting. This he did in a manner at once so wise and winning that he carried away with him the fervent good-will of those he met, and about thirty dollars in cash and pledges to help the Austin church secure a lot and a house to worship in.

Our assistant, Bro. Walter L. Martin, is proving himself the right man in the right place, and we anticipate a most fruitiul ministry for him in this ripe field.

The home department of our Bible-school is growing, and promises splendid results in many directions. We have the city assigned to ten visitors in as many districts, and we will soon have 100 scholars enrolled who pledge themselves to a regular study of the Bible-school lesson at home. I wonder more schools do not inaugurate this needy and most fruitful work. For the first four Sundays in July our Main Street Bible-school reached an average attendance of about 340. In our main school, including the home department and the baby roll, with our three mission schools, we now enroll about 900 scholars. All departments of our work is flourishing, and in spite of the hot weather our audiences are large and the interest fine. The prayer-meeting fills the lecture-room, and the C. W. B. M. now numbers over 100. The spiritual life of the church is good, and the people have a mind to work. God is blessing us, and the people are happy in Christ and glad to be used in his service. I trust I may be believed when I say that in all the elements of a true Church of Christ I record my conviction that this congregation ranks the highest of any with which I am acquainted. May the church abide faithful, and the minister always have grace and gumption to keep out of the way of their progress, even when he cannot lead them in the way of truth.

SUMNER T. MARTIN.

August 6, 1898.

Illinois Mission Notes.

The encampment just closed was the greatest in the history of our organized work. There were over one thousand people present during the week.

The secretary of the I. C. M. C., besides holding one meeting, spent from three to 10 days with a number of churches, giving such service as he was able. He attended the district conventions, nine county rallies, conducted a number church institutes, arranged 35 protracted meetings and assisted to locate 60 preachers. He visited 93 churches and collected $737.35 in the field.

A summary of this year: 30 men were employed and served 3,047 days. They held 30 meetings, preached 1,585 sermons with a results of 448 conversions and 178 additions besides. Collections by evangelists in the field were $3,328. Five churches were organized and 10 reorganized.

The recommendations of the board were unanimously adopted and they promise bettter things for all missionary interests. Churches are asked to raise a certain sum in a year for missions, that four Sundays be set apart for instruction in the cause of missions and for the making of offerings, that a thorough canvass of the congregation be made for cash and pledges before these days and that the receipts be divided proportionately among the societies, our convention receiving one-fourth of all money raised. Several churches have adopted this plan already, including the Springfield church.

The report is in the hands of the printer and will be mailed soon.

The Canton church, J. P. Litchtenberger pastor, ran an excursion which brought 500 people from Canton and Fulton county. We shall bless Bro. Litchtenberger forever for this friendly movement, for we believe it means a host of people in attendance next year. He is not only a great preacher, but a fertile originator of sensible plans to forward the cause of his Master. He has shown the brotherhood of the state how to have an assembly worthy of a great people.

A hopeful feature of the convention was the presence of a number of business men. There were more than ever before and they brought great cheer to the hearts of their brethren.

While all on the program acquitted themselves nobly, special mention should be made of the address of J. T. Ogle, of Missouri. It will be printed and distributed among the churches.

Dr. Hardin presided with his usual dignity and grace and our people love him more than ever.

We hope to have three evangelists in the field by September 1st. It will depend entirely, however, upon the religious patriotism of brethren for our state. There is a growing conviction among the preachers that this great state should be saved for Christ and brethren should hasten to express this feeling in liberal offerings. Teach the churches to give one-fourth of all missionary offerings for the work in Illinois. The time has come to do this, and it must not be delayed. Let a strong pull be made.

Churches that are not ready to accept the plan of gathering the offerings as proposed by the convention are asked to observe Illinois Day as usual. It comes on the first Sunday in October. It is not too soon to lay your plans for a great collection now, and we urge you to do it. While 200 churches gave to state work, 400 gave to foreign missions. Is it right? Let the other 200 come to the front this year.

J. FRED JONES, Sec.

Stanford, Ill.

Ontario Christian Colony.

On Lord's day, July 10, J. L. Sharitt, of Knoxville, Ia., preached in the Baptist Church at Rat Portage. His sermon was highly appreciated by the congregation. The Baptists of Rat Portage have a gem in the person of Rev. Tapscott. A beautiful building has recently been dedicated. The Disciples always receive a hearty welcome, and many sermons have recently been delivered there. The services held by the members of the colony in this locality is the first that has been held in a radius of 500 miles of the place.

On Lord's day, the 17, Bro. A. M. Sweany, late of Oregon, preached the first sermon in the new township which was surveyed for the American colony. After the middle of August we expect to have regular services, as some special location will be arranged.

July 31, Bro. S. Baptist, late of Jacksonville, Ill., preached in the Presbyterian Church at Emo. He has filled the pulpit there very acceptably several times.

Another Offer.

A written proposition has been sent me by Bro. T. E. Bondurant, of Piatt county, Ill., to be one of the twenty-five to raise another $100,000 for the endowment fund of Eureka College. He will give $4,000 if twenty-four others will give each a like sum. Bro. Bondurant has already contributed $20,000 in productive property. He desires to see the endowment fund amount to half a million. He wants this proposition met by July 1st, 1898. Now, brethren, here is the opportunity for another splendid advance. Let us do this quickly in the fear of our God!

J. H. HARDIN.

Eureka, Ill.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

J. W. Boles, of Auxvasse, is to be our county Bible-school superintendent this year, and this assures us good reports from Callaway, while Miss Inez Terry, of Lamont, will kindly do the same for us in Pettis. But are there not others? And who will volunteer for some county from which we had no report last year? Write me.

Auxvasse shows her interest in our work by meeting the apportionment for the new year in full.

Giddens, at Delhi, has had a good meeting, with twenty-five additions; $500 for a new house, with the promise of a Bible-school as soon as the house is ready.

But in our rejoicings, brethren, let us not forget the state mission work and our beloved T. A. Abbott and family, now undergoing one of the severest trials of life. In the nearness to death of his faithful companion, who has borne with him the burdens and anxieties of this work, let us remember them at the throne of grace, asking his comfort and cheer whose presence surpasses all that of men. Then, too, as I think of them, we can show our sympathy in such a substantial way by sending in our apportionment to state missions immediately. Thank God for Christian sympathy and for its open manifestation in times of need.

At Jonesburg C. C. Hill has done one of the remarkable works of the state, so that the congregation is becoming strong and influential in the community. But he has had hearty supporters in many of the good people of the church, T. J. Mason and his devoted companion being in the lead. This is the home, too, of Uncle Jap Skinner, known and loved by all the preachers, a faithful friend of the younger men especially. Here is the benefit of the work, too, for when our evangelist, T. A. Abbott, undertook the revival of the cause at Jonesburg, good brethren shook their heads, but it was a success, and under its preacher is becoming more so all the time, and is now a regular contributor to state Bible-school work.

Illinois Bend has suffered by revivals, so that it is not so strong now as in the past; but they are still holding up the Christ, and in the school are honoring him by faithful work, as I witnessed in the teaching. Mrs. Martha McClanahan is the superintendent, the work is good and the results will be happifying. To our work those present were very generous, thanks to the leaders.

Lydia, where W. S. St. Clair is doing such good work, sends in her apportionment for this year in full, and a time when badly needed. Have never had a more ready and prompt co-operant in this work than is W. S., who leads the way in all his churches, and you know what that means.

Jno. W. Jacks has been school superintendent so long in Montgomery City that I dare not specify, and in all that time the school has not failed us. This year, as generally, I have the half of their apportionment and a promise of other assistance before the year closes, which means more than the pledge. I am told that in all the history of the school the treasury has never been empty, a record of which Brother Jacks may well be proud.

Brethren, help us this time by remitting at least the first quarter, and do not hold us off when we are needing the assistance immediately; and if possible do not send your personal checks, as they cost us fifteen cents for collection, while the exchange will not likely cost you anything, or much less.

At La Plata J. M. Smith is giving three Sundays to the work, and much time to the Bible-school and Endeavor, for so he does always. Mrs. Ernest Williams is the school superintendent, and is giving satisfaction, as all knew she would. But the church is not strong and zealous as in the past, though many faithful hearts are anxiously praying and working to see a revival in all the work there. The brethren did not see their way clear to do much for us, but a few did well. Bro. Smith, as hitherto, was ready for any part, and then gave with the others. Bless the Lord for such friendship and co-operation.

Before going to your county or district meetings, brethren, ask the schools to authorize you to notify me that the apportionment is accepted, then I make no other call for money. See? Please do this. H. F. DAVIS.

Minnesota Convention.

Did you note the program in last week's issue? If not, get the paper and look it through and plan not only to attend the convention, but to inspire others to attend. May it be made a record-breaker as well as a season of fellowship and counsel, "Minnesota for Christ" being a chief animating spirit.

A telegram from A. McLean says Dr. Butchart, of the China Mission, will take his place upon the program, which is a gratifying piece of information if Bro. McLean must needs be absent.

Were delegates chosen throughout the church and auxiliaries last Lord's day? If not, secure action next Lord's day, and forward names Monday by first mail. Notify C. H. Austin, Mankato, also. Will isolated brethren intending to be present likewise give notice?

J. G. Slick, of Amboy, and pastor of the Antrim and Willow Creek churches, who recently held a meeting at Wyanette, in the North district, thus writes of his visit to Wyanette: "Such consecration I have seldom seen. The brethren have 'grit, grace and gumption,' but lack greenbacks, and can you not visit them and induce the Church Extension Board to loan them $200, which I believe would be repaid dedication day?

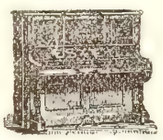
The New Commandment

Jesus said, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." The practical success of the Church of Christ has always and will always depend upon the perfect obedience of this commandment. The preacher with all his literary talents, culture, oratory and society influence may attract and entertain his audiences, but if he lacks that self-sacrificing love of his Christ, he becomes to the real Christian "sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal." I said real Christian, because there are some of the other kind. A Christian in name only is far more dangerous than an infidel. The Christian in name only is a hindrance to the propagation of the New Testament Christianity. He is the devil's game.

"Love one another, even as I have loved you!" This will prevent pulpit degeneracy. It will do away with bossing elders, or officers who are in the habit of acting on the "dog-in-the-manger" policy. Such divine language enforced is the compass which guides the weary soul out of all difficulties. It gives new life to him who recognizes its divinity. Organically it wills to imitate Christ's character by perfect obedience and submissiveness. Stubborness, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness and every evil thought and action could be cured by the obedience of this commandment. Why not live up to the command of our divine Commander? What would become of our nation if our army and navy would fail to respond to the command of our chief executive? The time has come for enforcement of divine discipline. There are men and women who have had "their own way" long enough. Heroic means should be used to bring the whisperers, backbiters, liars, etc., to repentance or withdraw from them. The new commandment is of no use to them because they willfully ignore it, and all men know, by their actions, that they are not the disciples of the Lord. To carry out the mission of this commandment would bring about prosperity. It would cause every church to employ a preacher and pay him a living salary. Old preachers would never be put on "the shelf." College students would have abundance of practice. All our missionary enterprises would so prosper that all men would find out that we are his disciples.

JOHN G. M. LUTTENBERGER.



The church at Clay Center, Kansas, is reported as prospering under the ministry of Otha Wilkison.

The 6th Kansas district churches enjoyed a convention recently held with the church at Phillipsburg.

The church at Mt. Ayr, Ia., reports a great success of their church rally and roll-call meetings. The sermons, by C. E. Wells and D. F. Sellards, were appropriate and listened to with rapt attention.

An outline of an interesting sermon, preached by J. B. Haston, Galveston, Texas. on "Territoral Expansion," was published in the Galveston Daily Aug. 8th. He distinguishes between "land grabbing" and "manifest destiny."

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S PRAYER MEETING, and Its Improvement.
By Cal. Ogburn.

This book is the offspring of experience and observation, setting forth how to make the Young People's Prayer-Meetings most interesting and profitable. It has been written, not for the young people of the past, but for those of the present and future—not for the experienced, but for the inexperienced; "and now, little book, may God bless your mission of usefulness to the young men and young women, to the boys and to the girls, who have pledged themselves to be loyal to Christ and the Church."

ILLINOIS.

Rossville, Aug. 8.—Four added at all points since last report.—A. R. JACKMAN.

Herrick, Aug. 13.—I am in an interesting meeting at this place with good audiences and good attention. I begin a tent meeting at Conden, Ill., Sept. 1. We have no church there. Our aim is to build a church. We need the prayers and assistance of our brethren.—HATTRESS H. SHICK, Evangelist.

Olney, Aug. 2.—I have not forgotten the good CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST even if it has not heard from my part of the battlefield of life for a year. My regular work has been forced to be given up because of the invalid condition of my mother, and other duties that a dutiful child will perform for parents, but I shall not leave the ministry, as I shall continue to do itinerant work, singing in meetings and evangelizing. I report 63 additions not yet reported in meetings and regular work at Robinson, Palestine and Maude. The above shall be my permanent address.—W. C. SWARTZ.

Taylorville, Aug. 12.—We have had two additions to the church at this place since last report. I will close my twelfth year's labor here the 1st of November, and it will be the close of my work here. My pastorate has been a very pleasant one. This is a good church and it occupies a prominent place in the religious work in this city.—W. W. WEEDON.

Hume, Aug. 15.—We are in a good meeting here with nine additions to date.—A. MARTIN.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Aug. 2.—At the North Park Church one confession, also at Broad Ripple Mission one confession.—J. M. CANFIELD.

MISSOURI.

Martinsburg, Aug, 10.—Six confessions here last night. All young men. Meeting will continue two weeks longer.—J. C. COGGINS.

Lawson, Aug. 9.—Closed a two weeks' meeting here last night with good results. Have received calls in last 30 days to keep me in the evangelistic field for 12 months, but I can only give one month out of the year to that line of work while I continue to preach for the church at California, Mo. Sometimes my desire and these invitations almost force me to resign my work as pastor and resume the work of an evangelist. The harvest is great and the laborers few.—BEN F. HILL.

Barnard, Aug. 6.—There have been five additions since I moved from Drake University to my fields of labor, Barnard and Palestine, the first of June. Of these two, the pastor and wife, by letter to the Barnard church, two by letter and one confession at Palestine. The ladies of the C. W. B. M. gave an open program Lord's day evening. The collection was more than double any former C. W. B. M. Day collection. The pastors of Nodaway County meet in the study of pastor, O. W. Lawrence, of Maryville, the 12th inst., to plan for a county convention. I preached my farewell sermon to the church at Belinda, Ia., last Lord's day and now divide my time equally between Barnard and Palestine.—F. E. BLANCHARD.

Publishers' Notes.

"KING SAUL."

Those who have read "In the Days of Jehu," by J. Breckenridge Ellis, will be pleased to know that his second book on Old Testament characters is now about ready for delivery. The title of this new book is "King Saul," and it fully ststains the author's reputation as a fascinating writer, and a close student of Bible history and character.

The Young Southron, of Atlanta, Ga., has given quite a lengthy review of our late publication, "Studies in Acts, or the New Testament Book of Beginnings," by W. J. Lhamon. On account of space we can only give the following extract from this commendation: "Dr. Lhamon is a clear thinker, well furnished as a scholar, and conversant with the writings of great thinkers of various schools who have handled the same themes. To these qualifications he adds a devout enthusiasm, a strong faith in the ultimate victory of New Testament truth,"

This book has 420 pages, cloth binding, and the price is $1.25.

Now is a good time to begin preparations to place a library in your Sunday-school and Endeavor Society. The long evenings are approaching when one will be inclined to turn their minds to books. Our special catalogue containing a list of suitable books for these kind of libraries will be mailed on application. As the Christian Publishing Co. publishes a large portion of the literature of the Christian Church, the selections are made from this large source and are wholesome books to place before the young.

The Daily Telegraph, of Kalamazoo, Mich., has the following to say in a review of W. J. Russell's late book, "The Wonders of the Sky," which is just from the press of the Christian Publishing Co.:

"The subject is a fascinating one, and as presented in this neat little volume is one we can apply with profit in our nightly star gazing. Mr. Russell is thoroughly conversant with astronomical literature, yet the magnitude of the study has been cleverly constructed by the author into simple, earnest language that can not fail to entertain as well as instruct."

"Wonders of the Sky" is bound in beautiful illminated cloth, and the price is 50 cents.

The Christian Publishing Co. is prepared to fill orders promptly for all kinds of Christian Endeavor supplies, such as Pledges, Badges, Topic Cards and cards for Applications, Invitations and Committees. Write us and we will mail you our special catalogue giving full particulars on all requisites for Endeavor Societies.

"After Pentecost, What?" by James M. Campbell, is a discussion of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit. The book contains 289 pages and the price is $1.00. Aside from the thought of the book its literary excellence is not surpassed in recent publications. From the Christian Messenger, Toronto, Ontario, Canada, we give the following extract concerning this book: "One thing, without doubt, the author has done for us: he has set the great day of Pentecost flashing before us historically in the light of the Holy Spirit as it flashed once literally 'with tongues of fire.'"

Church Extension Notes.

Send at once for literature and collection envelopes to G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo., and prepare for a rousing Church Extension Day in September.

The harvests are reaped, the summer is ended, God has blessed us in basket and in store, and we should be willing to show our gratitude in a large September offering for Church Extension.

Do not fail to get home from your vacation in time to aid our Church Extension work. It is your duty and the church so recognizes it.

"A suitable church building is one of the first requisites of the permanency, the prosperity and the efficiency of a congregation." So writes George Darsie, of Frankfort, Ky., whose congregation raises annually more than $300 for Church Extension.

Our Church Extension work has always appealed to good, hard American sense. As a successful work it appeals to enterprising Americans.

We have an independent church polity. Everything should be done to make strong our bond of unity. Let the strong and weak churches unite as one body in taking the September offering and the missions now wanting to build will be encouraged to put forth the best efforts to help themselves.

Every church aided by our Extension Fund will be heart and soul a missionary church. Freely it has received, freely it will give. In the day of its strength it will not forget the mother that helped it.

We should bestir ourselves and show a zeal hitherto unknown in Church Extension, because other religious bodies have long years the start of us in Church Extension and have accumulated large funds which enable them to seize points in great numbers. We should be patriotic in our plea.

Let us clasp hands with a tighter grip as we approach the September offering for Church Extension. Let us walk as one man to our duty and raise our proportion this year of the $250,000 for 1900.

We speak in no narrow spirit, but if other religious bodies, having from our standpoint a religious plea so inferior to ours, yet excel us in zeal and liberality, must it not humiliate us to think that the leading denominations like the Congregational, Presbyterian and Methodist churches raise more in one year for Church Extension than we have in our Fund altogether?

Before our Church Extension Fund was inaugurated all our efforts at aiding mission churches to build were weak and expensive. Men traveled half way across the continent in vain efforts to get money and appeals were published in our papers for aid to places we knew nothing about. Now every case is carefully looked into by our Board and, if worthy, aided at once in such a way that the loan made helps the mission to good beginnings in self-helpfulness and self-respect, and the money keeps going and coming in the same good way from year to year.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of the North leads all other bodies in results achieved in the field of Church Extension. During 1896 it aided 472 churches. In the first 32 years of its history its extension fund assisted in the erection of 10,184 Methodist church buildings, more than half the churches which that denomination to-day owns. It raised and expended in all for this purpose up to 1896 the sum of $5,725,000. GEORGE DARSIE.

W. C. Payne, of New York City, will address the church at Bethal, Indiana, on our Church Extension work, Sunday morning, August 28th.

Church Extension.

If the history of all the churches that have been organized and died, went out of existence, utterly perishing, could be written, it would be appalling. If the history of souls that have been thus ruined and forever lost could be written, it would be still more appalling.

Among the causes of the loss of these churches and souls would be found the lack of church homes, houses in which to meet and worship every Lord's day and into which to call all the people to hear the gospel preached.

Our Church Extension fund ought to be made large enough to secure the erection of a decent house in every county-seat where one is needed. Remember September 4th.

Words of Cheer for Church Extension.

In looking over date of organization of the Church Extension Boards of the different denominations, I was surprised to see the mighty strides our brotherhood has made in the cause of Church Extension. Grown-up Land.

Good-morning, fair maid, with lashes brown;
Can you tell me the way to Womanhood Town?

Oh, this way and that way—never stop;
'T is picking up stitches grandma will drop,
'T is kissing the baby's troubles away,
'T is learning that cross words never will pay,
'T is helping mother, 't is sewing up rents,
'T is reading and playing, 't is saving the pence,
'T is loving and smiling, forgetting to frown,
Oh, that is the way to Womanhood Town.

Just wait, my brave lad—one moment I pray;
Manhood Town lies where—can you tell me the way?

Oh, by toiling and trying we reach that land—
A bit with the head, a bit with the hand—
'T is by climbing up the steep hill Work,
'T is by keeping out of the wide street Shirk,
'T is by always taking the weak one's part,
'T is by giving mother a happy heart,
'T is by keeping bad thoughts and actions down;
Oh, that is the way to Manhood Town.

And the lad and the maid ran, hand in hand,
To their fair estates in the Grown-up Land.

OPPORTUNITY.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

And they kept the feast of tabernacles as it is written, and offered the daily burnt offerings by number, according to the ordinance, as the duty of every day required.—Ezra 3:4.

The corn rows seemed to stretch out into lengths interminable, and the sun shone down with a heat so oppressive that the faint breeze was barely noticed by George Lacy, who was toilsomely following the "double shovel" plow, thus laboriously cultivating the young corn.

Strange to say, George was not whistling to-day—strange, because his was one of those happy, sunshiny natures whose hopefulness makes one feel that there is something in life after all, or at least something to look forward to. But to-day his face was troubled. The heat was oppressive and the length of the corn rows was discouraging. Not that these would, as a general thing, have worried him, but to-day he was in one of those self-pitying moods that we all know so well, and taken together with other things of which he was thinking, they had power to greatly annoy him.

"What is the use of trying?" he said, half aloud. "Or what is the use of even thinking? I am tied right here—doomed to a life of unremitting and uncongenial toil. And I would like to make a stir in the world—even a small ripple. Now there is Robert Long—and if I do say it myself he is no more capable than I—who is to go to college next autumn and then to some Bible School. He expects to become a great preacher, just what I have so often hoped to be some day. Surely, it must be a glorious thing to be able to so preach the gospel as to lead people to repentance and the right way of living. 'And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forevermore.' That's what I want to do—to turn many to righteousness. I want to see my sermons in the papers and hear myself quoted on every hand. Ever since I was a very small lad that has been my ambition. But now—well, I don't mean to complain. Somebody must run the farm and look after mother's comfort, and I am all she has left." His thoughts journeyed to a grave in the neighboring churchyard wherein the husband and father had been laid to rest during the past winter. "No," he continued, "I won't complain. For so good a mother I can well afford to give up everything."

It is evident that a "small ripple" would not be sufficient to satisfy George as he tried to make himself believe. And it would seem, also, that his ambition was tinctured somewhat with a desire for the honor of men rather than the glory of God. But he was young, and we must therefore judge him leniently. And besides, he was only giving voice to the ambition of the heart, while you or I might be treasuring there an ambition no more worthy, though so secret that we would not even whisper it. Let us not condemn others while there is a mote in our own eye.

But I think we can see in George at least one most beautiful trait of character, one that may work wonders in time—that of devotion to his mother. When a lad of fourteen or thereabouts, his obedience to his mother's wishes to remain out of a school-boy escapade called forth the wrath of certain of his mates who tauntingly accused him of being "tied to his mother's apron strings." Not having the slighest suspicion that their remarks had been overheard, they were very much surprised and a great deal ashamed when their teacher said that afternoon just before dismissal:

"Boys, one of our greatest needs while journeying through this world is a guide. Your mother is your best friend, and it is no disgrace if you are tied to her apron strings. You cannot find a more gentle or a safer guide. The boy thus tied will never go far wrong. He may not know how to play cards or use profane language in a way calculated to call forth the applause of hoodlums, but he makes the sort of man that is called upon when somebody is wanted to fill a position of honor and trust. Boys, if you are tied to your mother's apron strings don't seek to untie the knot. It is an honor to you of inestimable value, and will lead you safely and surely to that supreme Guide which the psalmist had in mind when he said: 'Thou hast holden me by my right hand.'"

Somehow that little incident came back to George to-day as he followed the plow back and forth across the cornfield, and he continued:

"Yes, the teacher was right. A wise mother is her boy's best friend. I know from experience. My mother has always known the inmost secrets of my heart; and perhaps, because I never loosened the knot of her apron string, I had no secrets that I could not share with her. Any burden, no matter how heavy, cannot be grievous if borne for her sake. But it is greatly for her sake that I long to develop whatever talent I may have. How I should like to have it said of her: 'This is the mother of the great preacher, Dr. George Lacey.' How proud of me she would be!"

And then George remembered something else he had heard that particular teacher say. He had found it convenient one day to make use of that old and wise maxim, "Cut your coat according to your cloth," and then had gone on to say in his own peculiar way:

"My dear boys and girls, I want to call your particular attention to this old maxim. My understanding of it is that we had better come down a peg or two in our notions. Not that we should not be ambitious, but that we should not allow our ambitions to be so large as to completely swallow up the small opportunities that line our path. We cannot always be doing something in harmony with our condition and ability. If we would square our ideas with our circumstances, how much more contented we might all be. Happiness, that fleeting will-o'-the-wisp, might then be within our reach. It is not, after all, so much what we have or what we have not in this world that adds to or subtracts from our felicity, but the ever-present and overpowering longing for something else, and the envying of those who, as it seems to us, possess that something, and the great desire to appear in the eyes of the world as one of great consequence."

"Well," argued George aloud, as though in reply to the teacher whose voice had long been silent—thus does our influence live—"that may all be very well, and perhaps I deserve the rebuke, but how can I help it? The desire is there. I do want to do something noteworthy. As for the little opportunities, I do not see any along my path. I don't believe a search with a microscope would reveal them. I can't convert cornstalks; and Jerry and Joe," nodding to the lazy team of bays and smiling at the thought, "are about as good as horses can be. So where are my opportunities?"

"All around you," replied a voice so close that George was startled. So absorbed had he been that, unnoticed, the aforesaid Jerry and Joe had stopped under a shade tree and had been dutifully listening to the one-sided conversation of their master. But what astonished George more than any thing else, was the presence of his visitor. Who he could be or from whence he had come, he had not the slightest idea, and before he could sufficiently collect his wits to ask, his visitor continued:

"There are opportunities everywhere, my young friend, but it sometimes requires the closest scrutiny to recognize them. I went once into the studio of a sculptor and was admiring a statue which was nearing completion and which promised, when finished, to be a most beautiful piece of art. But I noticed that its face was hidden and asked the sculptor why this was so.

"'Because it is seldom recognized,' said he, 'it occured to me that position would be most appropriate. It's name is Opportunity!

"Here lies the trouble. We so seldom recognize our opportunities. But, my friend, that does not excuse us. We are obligated to look for them until we find them. A young lady desiring to do something noteworthy, confided to her pastor that she longed to go to India as a missionary. The pastor, who knew her well, looked at her over his spectacles and said:

"'My dear, who lives in that little house next to you?'

"The young lady was surprised, but answered:

"'I have never spoke to them, but they seem to be a family of ignorant German people.'

"'Who lives in the alley back of you?' asked the pastor.

"A poor Portuguese family,' was the reply.

"'And who lives in that old tumble-down house across the street form you?'

"'O, that you know, is occupied by three or four families, but of course I do not know them."

"'Are they Christians?' the pastor asked.

"I should say not," replied she. 'They do not seem to even know when the Lord's day comes. They do not send their children to Sunday-school, and I doubt if they are are ever inside a church themselves. Though, of course, I cannot say positively, as I have never spoken to them.'

"'My dear,' said the pastor, impressively, 'you do not need to cross the ocean to find the heathen.'

"It is not necessary, my boy, to go very far out into the world to look for opportunities, and, as I said before, we are obligated to look for them. There is a certain amount of obligation resting upon each individual. None of us live for self alone. We each have a certain amount of influence. Our lives are for a purpose, for life is not an incident, but is a part of the divine plan. You and I and every other individual are but expressions of the Divine Mind, wherein we have been latent since the beginning of time; and had there not been a reason for the expression of love as manifested in our being, our spirits would never have been sent to dwell here in this tabernacle of flesh. Our first and greatest obligation, therefore, is to God—seeing that we do not allow this temporary abode to destroy the soul and render it unfit to be received back to him from whence it came. Next to our obligation to God comes our obligation to our fellowmen—his creatures—and one of the most acceptable services to each is to make use of the little opportunities for doing good that are continually manifesting themselves to the earnest searcher therefor.

"We may not always be able to see God's purpose in our life; that is, all at once. But if we look for it, we will be permitted to see a small part, and by faithfully discharging our duty concerning that minute part, we will be enabled to see something further ahead. There will be a gradual unfolding of our duties and obligations and opportunities as God sees that we are prepared to meet them.

"You wonder what your opportunities are and what they can be. Well, in the first place, you have an opportunity to show whether you may become fitted for what you might call more congenial work, by faithful performance of the every-day, prosaic little duties that go a long way toward making up the sum-total of your life. Our lives, after all, are made up mostly of little duties, and if we do these well, they are just as acceptable in the sight of our Heavenly Father as though they were deeds to bring the world to our feet in homage. These little duties form a sort of discipline that goes very far toward character-forming, and unless we perform them as faithfully as we know how, we can never be ready for that to which we aspire, should God see fit to give it to us.

"In the account that Ezra gives of the life of the Jews at the time of which he writes, how they "offered the daily burnt offerings by number according to the ordinances as the duty of every day required," we can find a lesson of inestimable value.

"You say you want to turn sinners to Christ, but that your life is so restricted and narrow, and you are so tied to your daily labors that you can see no opportunity. It may not be the sort of opportunity you would like, still it is there. You may not see an account of how you recognized and performed it in the daily papers, but it will be recorded in the heavenly record if it is done 'In His Name.' You will remember it was not among the people of leisure where Jesus found his apostles, but among the busy, hard-working fishermen of Galilee. It is also true that it was the busy, toiling men whom God in the ancient times called into his special service. Elisha was called from the plow to become a great prophet and Moses was taken from his flocks to lead Israel.

"Another thing: Very often we forget to follow the example of Andrew who first went to find his brother that he might bring him unto Jesus. There may be some member of your family who is looking up to you and waiting for your word of encouragement. Or perhaps there may be some one of your associates—some of your young friends—who are needing just such help as you can give. Or possibly there may be in your community some outcast whom everybody shuns because of an evil life, and who is, therefore, being allowed to sink deeper and deeper into the mire of degradation. While such characters are always repulsive, we should try to remember that while our Master hated sin he loved the sinner, and that though he 'came to destroy the works of the devil,' he so loved, at the same time, the sinner, that he gave his life for him. If religion is something as we believe it is, which appeals to every chivalric impulse and every noble element of the heart, then the possessor thereof should be able to see beneath sin and to recognize the nobility, a portion of which—though it may be small—is in every heart, and the longing of better things, a little, at least, of which is in every soul.

"My young friend, look about you; You are surrounded by opportunities. And remember that even the hardest labor as the duty of every day may require, if well done, is a step onward and upward, and is preparing you for whatever else God may have in store for you after you have proven yourself 'faithful over a few things.'

"And now, if you will kindly direct me to B—— I will be going, but if anything I have said may be of help to you I shall be glad that I lost my way and came myself to ask directions instead of sending my driver."

George mechanically gave the desired information and was just about to find his tongue sufficiently to ask whom his visitor might be when the stranger spoke again:

"I know how to sympathize with you, my boy. I have been over the same road. But the grace of God will help you—something you can always have for the asking and keep for the fostering—and will prove to be an inexhaustible source of strength to you. Good-bye."

George was so dazed that for a momen the forgot to look at the bit of pasteboard left in his hand which, when he did glance at it called from him a cry of astonishment; for he had read thereon the name of one of the greatest preachers of the day.

Jerry and Joe were allowed to rest in the shade for sometime longer while George sat between the plow-handles and thought—thought harder than he had ever done before.

"And this from him," he finally said aloud, "whose sermons I have read with keenest delight. Whose words I have committed to memory and whose career I have longed to imitate. And he has been through it all, he says, and knows how to sympathize with me. Evidently he has won by hard work, inch by inch and step by step, the position he now occupies, while I had imagined that he was born to it or that it had been—well—sort of thrust upon him. God help me to hereafter perform my tasks faithfully and cheerfully as the duty of each may require; and forgive me, I pray thee, my ingratitude for all the blessings thou hast bestowed upon me!"

It was wonderful how different things seemed to George in the days that followed. The sun was hot, to be sure, but he was thankful for the health and strength that enabled him to endure it. The cultivation of the corn was toilsome and tedious, but he was glad that the rows were long and thanked God that the field was large.

The autumn harvest bountifully repaid him, but there was another and a better harvest—one that cannot be measured by gold—that came of that summer's work. And one of its results in after years was that the great preacher, Dr. Geo. Lacey, became a reality.

See! they come, as sure as fate,
Out of Santiago's gate;
Spaced along in grim array,
Dashing blue waves into spray—
Glaring at the ready foe
Fleeing, battling as they go.
Hissing shot and bursting shell
Fall on them like bolts of hell,
Hot with memories of the "Maine."
Vengeance cometh, haugty Spain!
One by one their desparate reach
Falls along the Cuban beach,
Now their wrecks in grim array,
Charred and shattered, strew the bay.
Liberty, thy beacon light
Over Cuba waxes bright;
Dark oppression fades away,
Daybreak broadens into day!

A Word To Parents And Teachers.

During the past year my duties as Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance have brought me into contact with the pastors of nearly two-score cities. In almost every city they have spoken to me of the deplorable prevalence of vice among children and young people. Facts have been brought to light which are shocking in the last degree. I am not speaking of children of the slums whose heredity and environment have both been vicious, but of the children who belong to good homes, often Christian homes, whose parents refuse to believe evil of them until confession forces conviction.

Statements have come to me from California, Minnesota, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Connecticut which indicate that this corruption is widespread and exceptional at the present time.

The exceptional cause of it would seem to be the wide circulation of vicious literature. Salacious French fiction whose sale has long been a crime in England, and is now outlawed even in Paris, may legally corrupt American youth. But doubtless the worse source of contamination is the obscene literature, often illustrated with photographs, which, though forbidden by law, finds easy access to the mails, and is surreptitiously distributed by hand often on the platforms of railway stations, sometimes on the playgrounds of children.

One who has never seen this obscene literature can form no notion of it. A Christian imagination simply cannot conceive of it. It might have come from the cesspool of perdition. This poison has repeatedly been found in public schools, academies and colleges. In some cases every boy and every girl in these schools has confessed to having read it; and the vice which pastors are deploring is the perfectly natural result.

Two things, it seems to me, can be done and ought to be. First, let parents and teachers break the conspiracy of silence, into which they seem to have entered. Rare are the parents who do not leave their children to learn from vicious companions the most sacred facts of their physical life. I do not believe one father in twenty does his duty by his boy, in this particular. If he does not know how to speak on so delicate and difficult a subject, let him put into his boy's hand a judicious book like "What a Young Boy Ought to Know," one of a series of dollar books by Sylvanus Stall, D. D., of Philadelphia, admirably adapted to meet the needs of parents and teachers, and which has received eminent endorsement everywhere.

Secondly, the curfew ordinance which has been adopted in many western cities with admirable results would throw a shield around the children during the hours of greatest temptation.

Pastor who have seen the working of this ordinance tell me that it has wrought a great reformation where it has been adopted, and city officials are loud in its praise.

If we give our children less libetry and more light, there will be less vice.

MORE IRISH BULLS.—Two laborers set out from Wexford to walk to Bublin. By the time they reached Bray they were very much tired with their journey, and the more so when they were told they were still twelve miles from Dublin. "Be me sowl," said one, after a little thought, "sure, it's but six miles apiece; let us walk on!" During a discussion at a meeting of the Trinity College Historical Society upon the slight consideration attached to life by uncivilized nations, a speaker mentioned the extraordinary circumstance that in China if a man were condemned to death he could easily hire a substitute to die for him; "and," the debater went on, "I believe many poor fellows get their living by acting as substitutes in that way!"—London Spectator.

A Song of the New.

BY MAURICE THOMPSON.

There's a new swell on the sea, and a new light in the sky;
The weather freshens and sings;
A spirit of power hovers on high,
And a waft comes down from its wings.

The old time is no more; its dust is blown away;
Its broken ships went down
In a tidal wave at Manila Bay
And Santiago town.

Oh the ships have shaken the world, and the flag is soaring high
Over isles made suddenly dear
By our dead who died so valiantly,
And our heroes who hold and cheer.

Now the old may dote on the past, and the weak may pule and cry,
And shrink from the change that comes;
But the young and the strong, with their hearts beating high,
Have the pulse of the trumpets and drums.

Their guns have spoken the word, and their trumpets have borne it far
In triumph from shore to shore;
Our flag on the isles where our heroes are
Shall be held there for evermore.

The Burial of Mr. Gladstone.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

In the center of the historic Westminster Hall, bound up with all the associations that have made for the greatness of England, lay the greatest of England's sons in the simple casket made of the oak grown on his own estate by the hands of his own laborers. There was no adornment, nothing to indicate the position of the man who was to be laid to rest—just the plain oak casket, the four burning candles, the gleaming cross—that was Gladstone's resting-place, whence the people came to do him homage. Away across the Thames, over the Westminster Bridge, across Parliament Street and Parliament Square to the courtyard of the House of Commons, the dense crowds stretched, representing all classes of society, from the very poorest to the strong artisan and members of the wealthier classes. They poured in one continuous stream for two days, and in the great halls there reigned absolute silence, save for the constant tramping of feet as they passed, a hundred and twenty a minute, through those long two days.

In the early morning light, on Saturday, May 28, the sunlight shone through the windows of the abbey and touched here and there the historic tombs and marble statues that spoke of the great dead that had rested there for long years. But there was one open grave to which all thoughts were turned, the last resting-place waiting to receive the greatest Englishman of our generation. Already in the gray gloom of choir and chancel, those who were privileged to obtain admittance were beginning to assemble. In little knots the distinguished visitors arrived, foreign ambassadors, the immovable Chinese, the white-haired Russian, the tall Dane. Then a vivid flash of color, and the Lord Mayor, in his robe and chain, walks up the Abbey with his attendants, and as each little group enters, keen interest is manifested by those who are waiting for the supreme event. Suddenly the whole congregation rises, and a hush steals over the crowd, which betokens that this is no ordinary greeting. Presently a tall figure in black, bowed and feeble, leaning on the strong arm of her son, walks up the Abbey. It is Mrs. Gladstone, associated through all these long years as the truest wife and the most devoted woman with whom a great man's life was ever blessed. Behind her walks the little curly-headed girl, who has been the joy of her grandfather's later years, and then in groups the sons and daughters, and as they pass we cannot but remember that amongst all the tributes that can be paid to this great man none, perhaps, is higher than the beautiful example of family life which his home always held out to the nation. By and by comes the Princess of Wales and the Duchess of York, both dressed in deep mourning, and then the silence is broken, and the solemn notes of Beethoven's Funeral March Equale breaks on the air. The slow measure gives place to Schubert's March in B minor, and then the magnificent opening chords of Beethoven's Funeral March, which seems to celebrate the triumph of life rather than to speak to us of the sadness of death. Then two heralds, both in black, arrive, to head the funeral possession, and by and by the long-trained, white-robed choristers and the clergy file past. Following comes the sergeant-at-arms, carrying the mace, the speaker in his robes, surrounded by his different officers, the members of the House of Lords, headed by the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of York, then the members of the House of Commons. The organ gives place to the beautiful slow chanting of the choir, and "I am the resurrection ann the life" sounds out, as it always does, the great triumph note that lifts all mourners and tells them that death is swallowed up in victory.

The supreme moment comes when the coffin is borne past, and among the pall-bearers are seen those who have striven against one another in the field of politics—the Marquis of Salisbury and Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Mr. Balfour and Lord Rosebery. All differences are laid aside now, and hands are clasped across those quiet hands folded in eternal prayer. The Prince of Wales and the Duke of York are among those who bear the dead. Slowly the beauiiful service goes forward, and by and by the familiar sound of "Rock of Ages" thrills out, and a thousand voices gather up the well-known strains of the great statesman's favorite hymn. Then all is over. The great man has been laid to rest by the nation that loved him. Mrs. Gladstone is seated at the head of the grave, and then the most touching scene came upon that great audience with almost unbearable intensity. The Prince of Wales went toward her, and taking her hand in his, bent low over it and reverently kissed it. All the pall-bearers in turn followed his example, and long she held the hand of her husband's great rival, Lord Salisbuy, as with tenderness the old man paid her his respect.

Gladstone has done many great things; he has stood for the freedom of our country, he has championed the oppressed, he has believed in the good of the many against the privileges of the few; but he has never done anything greater for the home, never anything that spoke more truly of his deep sense of the oneness of the most sacred tie that God ordained, than when he made the stipulation that if the nation buried him, Mrs. Gladstone must rest by his side in Westminster Abbey.

The impression that this great pageant left upon one's mind seemed to me to be one that brought home perhaps more than any other the elementary truths which are the foundation stone of all those great lives, and through the chanting psalm and the sweet refrain of the hymns and the clear voice of the dean as he read those last solemn words, in the benediction of the archbishop—there seemed to me to run one quiet refrain, "The best thing in the world is to be good." Others have been great, others have weilded magnificent power over this great nation, other voices have been eloquent, other patriots have stood for the freedom of humanity, but in Gladstone there is on attribute which stands out pre-eminently—he was good because he loved and reverenced his God.—Union Signal.

A Good Weather Receipt.

St. Nicholas gives the following helpful "Weather Receipt," which all grumblers would do well to ponder:

"When if it drizzles and drizzles,
If we cheerfully smile,
We can make the weather,
By working together,
As fair as we choose in a little while.
For who will notice that clouds are drear
If pleasant faces are always near,
And who will remember that skies are gray
If he carries a happy heart all day?"

Castilian Pride and Madness.

AN ENGLISHMAN.

Why is this war prolonged, this deadly strife,
These scenes of carnage and this loss of life,
These moans and cries of wretched, mangled men,
Driven like beasts into a slaughtering pen,
And far from home surrendering their breath
On field of battle meeting bloody death?
For what is Spain contending? Can they hope
With free America in arms to cope?
Ere this can they not learn all hope has flown?
In all their struggles not one victory won.
The pride of all their navy, 'neath the waves,
Where twice a thousand seamen found their graves.
With insane madness why do they contend?
Rush onward to their ruin, to defend
What they call "Spanish honor" — effete pride,
Void of all reason, wisdom's voice denied.
Does honor say, contend unto the last
With every prospect blighted, each hope past,
Consign to fruitless death ten thousand sons,
Change songs, once full of joy, to dying moans?
Does honor bid, defy the lightning stroke,
Or stand on Etna's crater, midst the smoke
And burning lava of volcanic fire,
Curse, and defy, and in the midst expire?
To tread this path is honor's path to miss.
What honor found in folly such as this?
With chaos threatening, this sole hope they have
A feeble, tottering dynasty to save.
That young Alfonso, Christina's son,
May rule, a king, ascend the Spanish throne!
That one may be upraised, must thousands die?
That one may wear a crown, thousands must lie
In unmarked graves, upon a foreign shore;
One heart beat proudly, many to beat no more.
And what is young Alfonso? Just a boy
Like other boys, a mother's hope and joy,
And her ambition is to see him reign,
Crowned king, and sway the scepter over Spain.
That this may be, poor mothers shed a flood
Of tears as their sons shed their blood.
Yet shed in vain, for trembling to a fall
Is throne and dynasty, one ruin threatens all!
Oh, maddened rulers of a once great land,
What defense will ye make when ye shall stand
Before the bar of God, on that great day,
When justice shall be done, what can ye say
When myriads plead against you, show their scars
And gaping wounds, received in bloody wars
Ye forced them to; when all the widows' cries
And orphans' wails, against ye accusing rise?
A dark and bloody trail has marked your path,
A fearful reckoning waits, a day of wrath,
This now remains to you, and this alone,
A tarnished honor and a tottering throne.

A Young Man's Vision.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The relations between the courts of Damascus and Samaria varied with the fortunes of the two nations. The Syrians were naturally inclined to warfare, like most people of Semitic stock, and when there was no more serious enterprise on hand they usually stood ready to engage in a struggle with Israel, their nearest neighbor on the west. When left to themselves the Hebrews did not seek war. They were for the most part a peaceful, agricultural people, but capable of stout resistance when beset by an enemy. The periods of war were, therefore, those in which Syria was strong.

In one of these campaigns the king of Syria whose name, as well as that of the reigning king of Israel, is not preserved by the author of the narrative, had planned to station his army at a certain strategic point, probably capable of being used for an ambush against the king of Israel as he came out to battle. The success of the plan depended on its being kept secret from the opposing side, and the utmost care was taken to prevent the movement from being discovered. But the scheme utterly failed. In some mysterious manner the king of Israel seemed to know the location of the hostile camp, and gave no occasion for advantage. This was repeated until the Syrian king was convinced that nothing but treachery in the camp could account for the skillful conduct of his enemy. Some of his trusted officers, he thought, must be secretly supplying information to the Hebrew army. He accordingly called a council of war, and charged his subordinates with the crime, demanding to know who was the guilty man. But these soldiers had learned more than their king of public affairs in the land they were invading, and had heard the marvelous stories that were told regarding the power and might of Elisha. When courts are ignorant of such things, the common people may be well acquainted with them, as we saw last week. It was easy to see that this great prophet who lived in Samaria was spoiling all the plans of the Syrians by his messages to king Jehoram, though the latter had not even known enough of him to think of his help when Naaman came to be healed. Thus the prophet of God was proving, as so often before and since, the safeguard of the nation.

The words he had applied to Elijah (2:12), and which were afterward applied to Elisha himself by King Joash (13:15), were literally true of him now. He was chariots and horsemen to Israel. No army could have been a greater safeguard to the nation than was he. It is a fatal mistake for a people to dream that its strength lives merely in military and naval equipments. Back of all these and greater than they, must be the manhood of the nation, with its trust in God; who must be "Lord of its far-flung battle line," as well as director of its quieter and more secret purposes. It is the supreme danger that God will be forgotten when success perches on the banners of a nation, victorious amid the smoke of battle.

"For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard;
All valiant dust that builds on dust,
And guarding calls not thee to guard;
For frantic boast and foolsh word
Thy mercy on thy people, Lord!"

The fact spoken to Benhadad by his officer, that the man of God knew all that passed in his most secret chamber, is in its larger significance the message that needs to be impressed upon every child, and should be borne in mind through life. God's knowledge of us, his perception of all our conduct and purpose, is at once the most blessed and most terryfying of thoughts. It is delightful to one who seeks to fulfill his highest ideals of life. No matter how unappreciated he may be, or how little there may be to show for his effort, there is ample reward in the assurance, "Thou God seest me" (Gen. 16:13). But to the one whose life is a constant defiance to the divine will the thought has terror. There is no evil purpose but what is seen by an eye that never closes, and that looks in sorrow upon the foolish refusal of any man to be led into the light. "Thou God seest me" should be a thought of delight, not dread. Whether or not it is, may be regarded as a true indication of one's relation to God.

Such a man as Elisha must not be left at large. He was too dangerous an opponent; too valuable an ally of the king of Israel. Dothan was learned to be the place of his temporary abode. His pastoral visits as a preacher of rigteousness took him to many places in Israel. Dothan was accordingly invested with a force strong enough to prevent his escape. In the morning his servant, the successor of the avaracious and leprous Gehazi, looked out with consternation upon the Syrian soldiers, who were surrounding the village. Clearly, there was no escape. The prophet was in the hands of his enemies, who would show him small favor, even though he might have claimed the protection to which his kindness to their strongest war-lord entitled him. But Elisha had no thought of pleading for himself, and he was not dismayed. Why should one who is at peace with God, and has done no evil to any man, be afraid? Nothing can injure him. He may suffer the "stings and arrows of outrageous fortune," but he cannot be harmed. Nothing that affects his external life can do him ill. Only things that endanger his relation with God are to be feared. But there was a surer defense than this. The power of God is always at the disposal of his people to serve them. It needs but the open eye to see this vision of providence. The servant saw nothing but the Syrian troops. We too often see only the dangers which threaten our cherished plans, and do no not have eyes that "look unto the hills from whence cometh our help." One needs to have his eyes opened, and to look upward. We are continually the victims of unnecessary fear. We do not believe God will keep us. Yet his message to his peopel has been evermore, "Fear not." There is no element in life more destructive than fear. We fear disease, and we are ill, not infrequently because our mental condition has invited it. We fear disaster, and we prepare the way for it to come. Who shall say how much of our sickness and trouble comes because we have fancied they might come, or probably would come, and have permitted ourselves unconsciously to assume an attitude of expectancy and invitation? Against all this the message of God is, "Fear not." The Bible is the most optimistic book in the world. Its word is, "Expect health, not disease; expect success, not failure; expect righteousness, not sin." It is the business of the Bible to open our eyes as did the prophet those of the young man, that we may see the mountains round about full of the horses and chariots of God. The gospel has no place for pessimism. It gives no bases for the theologies of despair — Romanism, Tractarianism, Millenarianism. Its message is rather, "Open your eyes, look to the hills, fear not."

The prophet was in no danger, but he proposed to use the Syrians as his captives till he could show his spirit toward them. He threw over them the spell of bewilderwment, and under the offer of guidance led them to Samaria, the capital, where they were completely at the mercy of the king of Israel. But when Jehoram wanted to use his advantage to put them to death, Elisha forbade him, and ordering them to be fed, he sent them back, humbled and astonished, to their own land.

*Bible-School Lesson for Aug. 28 — Elisha at Dothan (2 Kings 6:8-18); Golden Text—The Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them (Psalms 34:7); Lesson Outline—1. The Prophet's Power (9-12); 2. The Prophet's Peril (13-15); 3. The Prophet's Protection (16-18).

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

The king of Israel showed his wisdom by heeding good advice. All hearts are open to God; no secrets are hid from him. "Thou God seest me" is a word of cheer to those who love him, but of terror to those who do wrong. "Fear not" is the word of God to his children. "Perfect love casts out fear;" therefore to love God and our fellowmen is the secret of being at peace with all, and having no fear. Horses and chariots were no means of capturing Elisha; he may well represent those forces for good which cannot be destroyed. God and one man who is godlike and on the right side are a majority, and have only to wait till the rest comes over. The Christian life is the process of getting one's eyes opened to see the horses and chariots of God. "They that are for us are more than they that are against us." Elisha exemplified the true spirit of kindness when he only used his power over the Syrians to do them good.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 28.

"WITH YOUR MIGHT."

There is a great deal of our nature that never has been developed. There is a vast deal of might hidden away in every man that is like fallow land, never plowed and utilized. We have talked so much, both sincerely and insincerely, about our "mite" that we have forgotten our might. Until one gets an adequate idea of his own power, even the average ones of us, he will never do the work he is capable of doing. Man has never learned what a powerful creature he is. Small as he is, he is more powerful than beasts, ocean, lightnings, volcanoes, for he has made all of these his servants. Only ordinary men they are, too, who are powerful enough for this. If men of commonplace powers would but learn their migh and exercise it, the world would see greater prodigies than it has ever seen.

Upon every duty that comes to hand one's whole soul should be centered. Close attention to the present task is the test of success. Yes, that is the word—tension. Attention the teacher demands. Attention the employer must have from every employee. Tension the musician must have—just the proper tension—in every string. All these are the same thing, just as they are expressed by the same word. Life must be tense, if it gives forth beautiful, harmonious music. It must be stretched tight—not too tight, lest it snap into fanaticism or insanity, but just tight enough to be harmonious and tuneful. Every power should be harmoniously called into play, every muscle of mind and soul employed. Our work should always seem to us, as we view it lying before us, just a trifle greater than we are able to perform; for we shall find, when we shoulder it, that though it may strain every nerve, it will snap none of them.

To-day's duties, too, are the ones that should be done with our might. It is not to-morrow that our work is to be done. It is not the doing of great things by and by, but of everything that confronts us to-day, that the Lord demands of us. "Do ye next thing," was the old English motto. "Live for to-day," is an excellent motto for to-day. We are so inclined to live in the future—especially we young people—so inclined to feel that we haven't really entered life yet; that we are only waiting our opportunity, preparing ourselves for great tasks; that some day we shall serve God, but not to-day; that some day we shall find time to pray and be religious, but there's no particular hurry; so inclined, we are, to let a beautiful future, like a mirage, beckon us on past unfulfilled duties. Ah, when shall we learn that it is this life that we are living, and not the next; that it is to-day's duties we are concerned with and not to-morrow's rewards; that it is here and now we are to do with our might what our hands find to do, for in the grave, whither we go, there is no work, wisdom, knowledge or device!

If we once learn to center our full energies on what we have at present to do, we shall find it will give us courage and spirit to meet the ills of life. Melancholy and unhappiness flee from before busy hands as ghosts before the signs of the cross. Weakness becomes strength, fear becomes courage, fainting becomes fighting when even the most trembling soul hurls itself with all its unconscious power upon its appointed work. The very exertion becomes meat to eat that we know not of—meat of joy and meat of increasing strength. The more might we expend the more we gain; the more we give out the more we get. There is that scattereth and yet increaseth—and it is might.

He makes no estimate of the tobacco exports, but says they were larger in 1897 than in former years.

ROWLEY.

Sister Jane E. Rowley, who had long been a patient sufferer, passed into the life beyond at her home near Fortuna, Humboldt county, Cal., July 27, 1898. The deceased was for many years a member of the Presbyterian Church, but in 1894 she united with the Christian Church, of which the majority of her family were members. Besides her bereaved husband she left eight children, a mother 83 years of age, two sisters, four brothers and 24 grandchildren, who were all present except three. Funeral services were conducted at the Christian Church by the writer, and the remains were placed in the cemetery of the I. O. O. F., to which they were followed by a large circle of friends. A. B. MARKLE.

ROYAL.

Joseph B. Royal was born Nov. 1, 1816, near Columbus, in Franklin county, Ohio. He died at his home in Vermont, Ill., July 27, 1898, aged eighty-one years, eight months and twenty-six days. He went with his father's family in his childhood to Sangamon county, Ill., where he experienced all the privations of pioneer life. He was married there to Miss Louisa Downing August 19, 1841. She died in Vermont, Ill., January 8, 1853. He subsequently married Mrs. Elsie McHendry, who died four years ago. Four children, a stepdaughter, an adopted daughter, sixteen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren survive him.

He was a patriotic citizen, a faithful, loving husband, an affectionate father, bringing up his children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. He was honest, truthful, temperate, virtuous, benevolent and a doer of good all the days of his long life. All the above is said, and more could be said in truth of the man Joseph B. Royal. But I wish to speak of him as a preacher of the gospel. He obeyed the Lord in early life and became a preacher before the beginning of the writer's personal acquaintance with him. But I was intimately acquainted with him for more than forty years. The remembrance of that acquaintance is very precious to me now. We were friends; yea, we were more than friends—we were brothers, brothers in the Lord, brothers knit together in the bonds of Christian love. In all those more than forty years there was never an unkind act, word or even thought between us. Memory recalls nothing to mar the sweetness of those long years of friendship and love. Brother Royal was a great preacher. Yet he never thought of greatness. He simply knew the English language and the English Bible. But he knew them well. Jesus had a dwelling-place in his heart. The love of God abounded there. His soul was full of the Holy Spirit. With all his heart he himself believed all that he preached, and he had a wonderful faculty of convincing his hearers of the truth of the gospel. Many hundreds of the people did he lead to obey the Lord and to consecrate their lives to his service. He did the work of an evangelist. Yet he was not an evangelist of the more modern style, with his hired singer. He induced the people all to sing, and led them himself, if it was necessary. He did not get up a great excitement. But by his plain, common-sense, scriptural presentation of the truth, and by the purity of his own life, he led the people, without excitement, to render an intelligent obedience to the Lord. He was a man who, without seeming to know it, did let his light shine and others were thereby constrained to glorify God. Good men, bad men, all men who knew him, and he was extensively known, said that Royal was a good man. He not only led sinners to come to the Savior; he also instructed the brethren, building them up in the faith. He was a safe and wise counselor. He was a peacemaker. He was a good pastor. He planted many churches; but he did not leave them to die. He taught them, encouraged them, exhorted them, made them self-sustaining. There are many churches in Illinois that are monuments of his earnest, self-sacrificing toil. He did all this work for only small pecuniary reward. He never received a big salary in his life. He never had more than a bare competence of this world's goods. But he was rich in faith, rich in spirit, rich in heirship, and now rich in the society of the spirits of just men made perfect. Though dead, he yet speaks, and will continue to speak for generations to come. To his surviving sons, G. A. and Eugene Royal, and his daughters, Mrs. J. M. Little and Mrs. M. R. Burton, we say, Be comforted. Your father's name and godly life are a richer legacy than gold. Be as true to the Christ as he was true, and you will be crowned with him in glory. And now, my well-beloved brother, farewell for a season, only for a little while! I am in tears now. I am sad now. I will look no more, in the flesh, upon your honest face. I will no more hear your loving voice pleading with sinners to come to the Savior. I think few men, if any, loved you more than I loved you. I love you still. My affection for you is as warm as it ever was. You are not dead. To me you are living. The earthly body only is dead. You have only gone before me for a little while, dear brother! By the grace of God I am determined to "meet you in the New Jerusalem." J. C. REYNOLDS.

TUSSING.

Mary A. Portner was born in Fredric County Md., December 15, 1817. Was married to Isaac P. Tussing, Oct. 29, 1835. She was the mother of 14 children—eight of them with one brother survive her. She came with husband and family about 30 years ago to Neosho County, Kas., where she died August 1, 1898. She became a Christian about 19 years ago; was baptized by Bro. John W. Randall. She continued faithful until the last. We sorrow, but with hope. Many relatives and friends followed the remains to their rest in the grave at Bethany. Sermon text, 2 Cor. 5:1-4, by the writer.

WILLETT.

Gordon A. Willett was born in Onondago, N. Y., Aug. 23, 1835, and died in Petoskey, Mich., July 18, 1898. He came to Michigan in 1854. Was baptized by Isaac Errett in Muir in 1860. January 16, 1862, he was married to Mary E. Yates. To them were born four sons, Prof. Herbert L., who has charge of the Disciples' Divinity House in connection with the Chicago University, Arthur, pastor of the Church of Christ in Petoskey, Mich., and two who preceded their father to the spirit-land. He came to Ionia in 1867, where he was engaged in the agricultural business for about 20 years. In the spring of 1895 he went to Chicago to assist his son in the pastoral work of the Hyde Park church, and the following fall was ordained to the ministry. He was his son's assistant for about two years. During the past he has been in failing health, and during the last few months has suffered untold pain, but was patient through it all, and his faith never failed. Bro. Willett has always taken great interest in the enterprises of the church and often attended the missionary conventions. He has visited nearly every church in Michigan. Long before the C. W. B. M. established the Bible chairs at Ann Arbor he insisted that such steps should be taken. He put forth every effort to educate his sons for the ministry, and during his last illness the fact that two of them were devoting all of their time to teaching and preaching the gospel of Christ, was a great comfort to him. When he realized that he must pass away, he looked forward with pleasure to the reunion with the two sons who had gone before him. One died in infancy, the other at the beginning of manhood, when he was ready to devote his life to the ministry. On July 20 Bro. Willett's remains arrived here from Petoskey. Brief funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Bro. C. A. Preston and Dr. Cope, both old friends of the deceased. The burial took place at North Plains, 10 miles from here.

Dr. Cope said at the funeral that Bro. Willett lived in advance of his age, that Ionia was the better for his having lived in it and that "well done thou good and faithful servant" might be written as his epitaph. Bro. C. A. Preston read a short address, from which we quote the following:

"I have been acquainted with him 35 years. For very many years our relations were intimate, and during that time I can truthfully say that I never saw an act of his or a spoken word unbecoming a Christian gentleman. For many years he was an elder of this church and I think gave more time and attention to its duties than any one before or since. He greatly excelled in one of the conditions prescribed as a qualification for the position: he was given to hospitality. His home was the home of nearly every visiting minister or lay member of the churches of Christ. He was very familiar with our people throughout the United States; he could tell the standing, the character and ability of the leading Disciple preachers in the Union. His knowledge of the Scriptures far excelled that of any member of the Ionia church. He studied the Scripture, not merely read it, and to all of us he was authority on Bible history, prophecy and facts, and as a Bible-class teacher he was always prepared and was always instructive. During the past four years it has been my good fortune to visit in district conventions nearly all our churches in this district. I was surprised and pleased at the general manifestations of interest and affection for Bro. Gordon Willett. He was acquainted with nearly every Disciple in this part of Michigan and during his long illness he had their prayers and sympathies.

"Bro. Willett, thou are gone! We will not deplore thee. Your works will follow after. The sons you helped to educate and prepare for the ministry are living monuments to your credit. The good they have done and are doing we cannot measure, but in their heart of hearts they will thank you over and over again. We who knew you best and appreciated your worth will see you here no more. We will remember you on warm and cold days. Your days of sickness and pain are over."

"You have heard the song of triumph
They sang upon that shore,
Saying Jesus has redeemed you
To suffer nevermore;
Then, casting your eyes backward
On the race which you have run,
You can shout, Hosanna!
Deliverance has come."

WRIGHT.

Henry Wrigh was born in Washington couuty, Ind., Oct. 12, 1820, and died at his home in Stiles, Ia., May 30, 1898. In 1840 Bro. Wright married Sarah Letherman, who proved a faithful companion to him during the 55 years of their wedded life. To them 14 children were born, six of whom survive them. In 1849 Bro. Wright moved from Indiana to Davis county, Ia., where he resided until his death. For many years he had been a faithful minister of the gospel, and as a pioneer preacher his influence has been widely felt. At his funeral Bro. S. B. UNABLE TO SEE FROM ECZEMA

I suffered with Eczema of the worst kind, my face and neck down to my shoulders were one inflammation, was not able to see out of my eyes for quite a while, and was unable to sleep for weeks, on account of the severe pain, which nearly drove me insane. My face and neck were swollen and made me look hideous. Had three doctors at different times, and not one of them could relieve me of my pain, swelling, and blotches. I used three bottles of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, four boxes CUTICURA (ointment), three cakes of CUTICURA SOAP, and my friends and one of the doctors are surprised, and asked, "Who cured you?" and I tell them quickly, "CUTICURA REMEDIES." Suggestive Program for the Indiana District Conventions.

The purpose was to curtail the length of the fall conventions, but at the urgent request of the districts themselves, they have been set again at the regular length. However, as the program is only suggestive, the district boards will exercise their own judgment in the matter, as well as the whole program.

The odd-numbered districts hold their conventions the first half of the week, and the even-numbered districts hold theirs the last half. There will be a break of two weeks in October for the National Convention at Chattanooga.

The sermons for the evenings should be preached by some of the strong men of the district, while strength has been added to the program by such brethren as W. D. Starr, Henry R. Pritchard and D. R. Lucas.

This is the annual meeting, and it is the place where the business of the district must be adjusted for the year. Let every department of every church be represented. May your state board suggest that this is but one convention and not four, and that the district president should preside at all sessions, and the district secretary take all minutes, with the possible exception of the C. W. B. M. work.

HIDDEN.

AARON PRINCE ATEN.

The treasures of the earth are deeply hid Down in the depths, or the waters mid.
The golden seams that to men appear
Are the earnest of wealth that is not here.
Down, far down do the treasures lie
Beneath where the picks of the miners ply.
We can gather only the grains of gold,
While the mountains of metal are yet untold.
The diamond that glows with a flash of fire
And kindles the spark of a deep desire,
Is only one from a cave filled deep
Far down where the swirling waters sweep.
So human thought, though a treasure rare,
Is only a grain that is flashing fair—
A grain of gold from celestial source
That is stranded here in its onward course.
The love that stirs in the finite deep
Far away from the infinite fountain's sweep,
Is only a drop that descends to earth
To tell of its Author's wondrous worth.
And, too, this being that boasts its might,
And feels the flowing of earth's delight,
Is the offspring small of the glorious One,
Whose dwelling place is the Central Sun.

CURRENT EVENTS.

As reported last week, the city of Manila surrendered to the American forces on Saturday the 13th inst., one day after the signing of the protocol between the United States and Spain. The surrender was the result of a joint attack by the land and naval forces. The attack was made after a 48 hours' notice from Gen. Merritt and Admiral Dewey. The attack began by Admiral Dewey's fleet at nine o'clock in the morning, the fire being directed on Manila Fort and the Spanish trenches, and continuing two hours. At the same time the troops under General Merritt advanced, storming the outer fortifications and taking them, and then on to the inner fortifications, when the Spaniards raised the white flag. Immediately afterwards the Spanish flag was replaced by the American flag. Americans captured 7,000 prisoners, 12,000 rifles and a large amount of ammunition. Our loss was six killed and fifty wounded. The ships were not struck. The co-operation between the army and the fleet seems to have been perfect and harmonious. The blockade has been raised and business resumed. General Merritt has assumed command, restoring the civil laws.

The capture of Manila, after the declaration of peace, raises an interesting question as to its effect on the final terms of settlement between the two countries. According to the regulations of war an armistice or cessation of hostilities only takes effect in the army when the word has reached the commanding generals, and any battle fought in the interim counts the same as if it had taken place prior to the formal end of the war. On the other hand Spain will propably claim that as the capitulation of Manila took place after the signing of the protocol, it should have no effect on the peace negotiations. If it be true, however, as a Hong-Kong dispatch states, that the capitulation includes the entire archipelago, there is little doubt but this fact will have its effect on the peace commission. The problem, however, as to what disposition shall be made of these islands is a very serious one, and the controlling factor in it is not the mere matter of possession, but what is due to the people of these islands in the way of good government and a better civilization. In other words, it is not one of receiving, but imparting.

The unprovoked butchery of nearly 100 residents of the village of Ciarles, in Porto Rico, by the Spanish soldiers, has given rise to the fear that the departure of the Spanish troops from Cuba and Porto Rico may be marked by a number of these outrages against the inhabitants. There will probably be more or less disorder connected with the outgoing of the Spanish forces, and the incoming of the American troops. It is the purpose of the Washington authorities to send a sufficient force into these islands to maintain order as early as possible. The hatred that exists between the Spanish and the Cubans, growing out of the protracted war, and the mutual indignities they have suffered from each other, makes it imperative for the time being that the government of the United States should interpose its strong arm between these peoples in the interest of peace and good order. It is very short-sighted and unwise for the Cubans to exhibit impatience with or opposition to this policy on the part of our government. The military commissions appointed by the President will proceed at once to Havana and San Juan to exert their influence in the interest of peace and order.

The double duty of getting the Spanish prisoners shipped home from Cuba, and our own soldiers away from Santiago to Long Island, has been carried out as promptly as transportation facilities would permit, and is now about accomplished. It is a relief to know that our soldiers who exhibited such high courage in the battles about Santiago, and who survived those terrible assaults, are to have a chance for their lives by being removed from the fever-stricken island to a healthy location. It is a relief, too, to know that the Spanish soldiers who surrendered at Santiago are soon to be home again with their families and friends. No doubt a large part of our volunteer force will be mustered out of the service, and the brave men who donned the military uniform to defend their country's flag, will resume their peaceful callings again as if there had been no war with Spain. Our chief reliance in the future for our nation's defense is our citizen soldiery, who in a few weeks can be transformed from peaceful citizens into a volunteer army, drilled and equipped for efficient service.

It is to be regretted that Captain-General Blanco has not justified the good opinion which the Americans had of him when he succeeded Weyler in Cuba. His recent resignation as captain-general of the island because of the treaty of peace, and his bombastic proclamation about continuing the war, puts him in a very bad light before the civilized world. At a time when he could be of some service to his country in preserving order and in making the transfer from Spanish to American authority in the island as free from violence as possible, he manifests an anxiety to evade this responsibility and to vaunt his military ardor before the world. He was anxious to figure as a hero in the Spanish war, but since that is denied him, he has no taste for the humbler but not less important duties connected with the evacuation of the island. A great man shows his greatness in defeat no less than in victory. Gen. Blanco has not manifested the elements of greatness in this hour of his country's need. Like Gen. Augusti in the Philippines, he has been weighed in the balances and found wanting.

The victory at Manila, like nearly all our victories in our conflict with Spain, increases with fuller reports. It now seems certain that not only has the city of Manila surrendered, but that the whole archipelago has been turned over to the Americans, Manila being the capital of the entire group of islands. While the two governments were engaged in putting the finishing touches on the protocol, and affixing the official signatures thereto, Admiral Dewey and General Merritt were gradually investing the city of Manila, and on the day following the signing of the protocol, the day on which the news of peace reached the world, the city of Manila, with all the islands of which it is the capital, was surrendered to the American forces. As to the influence of this battle on the final treaty of peace, the Grand Rapids Herald is not far wrong in the following editorial utterance as to the controlling influence in the settlement of this question:

> While opinions honestly conflict as to whether we ought to retain the islands in whole or in part, it is highly probable that public sentiment will follow pretty closely the line that Dewey lays down. If he says that we should gather in the whole archipelago, including Aguinaldo and his whistle, public opinion will very generally accept this as the true gospel of the situation and demand it. Should he hold that the island of Luzon is enough, the appetite of the most voracious land-grabber will be appeased, and a single island will satisfy. If he would confine our acquisitions to a single harbor, his opinion will be accepted. It is unusual for the American people to place so much reliance in the judgment of a single man in a matter of so great importance, but Dewey is on the spot, and has given such evidences of having a level head that it is safe to say a final public opinion will not be formed until he has been heard from, and no policy will be determined upon until he speaks. This confidence in Dewey's good judgment is as fine a compliment to him as the cheers which greeted his May-day victory, and he seems to deserve it.

The national conference on the foreign policy of the United States opened its sessions at Saratoga, N. Y., on the 19th inst., with an address by Henry Wade Rogers, of Chicago, chairman of the Committee on Arrangements. One of the topics discussed was the importance of bringing the Nicaragua Canal scheme to successful completion. The completion of the canal would shorten the distance by water to San Francisco by 10,000 miles. That fact alone was urged as sufficient answer to all objections. Mr. Warner Miller claims that the Nicaraguan Canal, within ten years after its completion, will increase the population of the Pacific cities 10,000,000. He estimates that it can be built for $100,000,000 to $140,000,000. There were present at the conference both the Expansionists and the Anti-Expansionists. Carl Schurz, of New York, represented the views of the Anti-Expansionists, while Judge P. S. Grosscup, of Chicago, represented the Expansionists. In his speech the latter said:

The true question is not whether Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines are intrinsically worth the responsibilities incurred by their occupation; whether their resources will counterbalance the new dangers that their acquirement would introduce into our political system. For I see behind them something more than islands, nothing less than a continent. Within Asia lies the interest and opportunity that, by its largeness, dwarfs every other prospect. I favor the acquisition of Porto Rico, partly because the moral purpose of this demands that it should no longer be a political plague spot in the otherwise putrified Caribbean Sea, but because it is the gateway to the Caribbean Sea when the coast of the sea is fully developed and the Nicaragua Canal opened will, from both a naval and commercial view, become the most important water on the face of the globe.

William Dudley Bull, of Indiana, delivered an address on the "Immorality of Prize Money." The conference has not completed its sessions at this writing.

It is authoritatively announced that Secretary of State, Judge Day, who will serve as a member of the Peace Commission, is to retire, after that service has been rendered, to private life. He accepted the position at the request of the President, and has discharged the duties of the high office with a delicacy, tact and wisdom which mark him as a man of great ability. He is to be succeeded by John C. Hay, our present ambassador at the court of St. James. Mr. Hay was the private secretary of Mr. Lincoln during his administration, and has had other experience aside from his present position to fit him for the duties of the office to which he is now called. He seems to have discharged his duties as Minister to England in a manner satisfactory both to the English people and to the United States. It is generally understood that he was Mr. McKinley's orginial choice for Secretary of State, but the necessity of finding a place for Senator Sherman, in order that Mr. Hanna might become Senator, prevented his taking the position at that time. There is no reason to doubt that Mr. Hay will discharge the duties belonging to the portfolio of state to the satisfaction of the President and the American people.

In the very nature of things there will be more or less friction in the transfer of authority from Spanish to American military rule in Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippines, but on the whole, thus far, order is being well preserved and conditions are rapidly adjusting themselves to the new order. The volunteer army will be reduced to only necessary requirements as rapidly as possible, the sick soldiers removed to better localities and some of the larger fever-stricken camps abandoned. The ports are being opened to commerce, and provision ladened vessels will soon be crowding to the wharves of the larger cities of these islands, and starving men and women relieved of the long and painful fast, and the war will soon be known only as a thing of the past.

"THE WAR IS OVER!"

This was the cry of the newsboys on Saturday morning, the 13th inst. It was a welcome sound. For three months these industrious news venders have been crying, "All about the war!" and we opened our morning and afternoon papers to find accounts of naval and army engagements in Cuba or in the Philippines. Now comes the welcome news of peace. The protocol has been signed. The President's proclamation has been issued suspending hostilities in our army and navy. Let the whole nation give thanks for this blessed consummation!

No more are our brave boys to suffer from tropic sun and Spanish mauser. They will soon be coming home. There are vacant chairs awaiting them, and hearts and hearthstones that will give them glad welcome. Those who have stemmed the red tide of battle, and those who have been undergoing the drill and discipline in camp, far from the scene of action, preparing themselves for their country's service, alike will be welcomed home by their friends and by the whole country. The part performed by these latter, although they were not permitted to fight a battle, was an important one in accomplishing peace. They have shown their willingness, their courage and their patience, in their enlistment and subjection to discipline, and preparation for their country's service.

Best of all it is peace with honor. The end for which the war was inaugurated has been gained. Cuba is freed. Porto Rico is to find a shelter under the American flag, and Spain's dominion in the Western World is ended. The Stars and Stripes are to find a place to float in Manila Harbor, and the rest remains to be determined. The war, though brief, has demonstrated the courage and efficiency of our army and navy, the superiority of our battleships and the willingness and ability of the American people to rally, unitedly, in defense of their country's flag, when its honor demands it. Thank God for the peace that comes with honor!

That Spain is to be benefited by the war, we do not doubt. She feels her honor and her pride to be stained, somewhat, at present, but it is certain that she has learned some lessons from the war that will prove of advantage to her in the future. If she will now give her attention to public enlightenment, to securing the rights of all the people under her dominion, to the enlargement of liberty, both civil and religious, to the development of her resources at home, and to economy and honesty in public administration, there will come a brighter day for Spain.

The war is over, but not our perils. We are face to face with great national problems which require the wisest statesmanship. We have enlarged our national domain and vastly increased our responsibilities. We have risen to a new height of influence among the nations of the world. There has been developed in the national consciousness a sense of wider responsibility than we have ever felt before. This makes it the more important that we shall solve the many internal problems that affect our national life, purify our own civil administration in city, state and nation, develop the different sections and classes of our own people, and so prepare ourselves for the larger and wider career of usefulness to which Providence seems to be pointing us.

This is no time for narrow sectionalism, for bitter party enmities, for strife over the spoils of office, for controversy about paltry minor issues. The times demand men of large intellectual mold, of a high sense of moral obligation and of a patriotism as wide at least as our own vast domain. Never was there a time when Christian people needed to pray more that God may give us wise and broad-minded statesmen to stand at the helm and guide our Ship of State safely through the perils and problems which have come to us through victory and peace.

THE REVISED VERSION ON THE FRIENDSHIP TEXT.

He that would have friends must show himself friendly (A. V.).

He that maketh many friends doeth it to his own destruction (R. V.).—Prov. 18:24.

This text, as it is rendered in the two versions, illustrates in a very forcible manner the way in which the new translation has played havoc with old sermons. I once had a peculiar experience with this particular passage. One Sunday morning in England I went into my study and prepared a sermon on it as it reads in the common version. When I had finished it and was on the eve of starting to church it occurred to me that I would see how the revised version had rendered the passage. I opened the book and read to my utter dismay and the overthrow of my sermon: "He that maketh many friends doeth it to his own destruction!" Not a slight variation from the old text, but an absolute contradiction, apparently. One passage says if a man would have friends, and the necessary implication is the more the merrier, he must show himself friendly; the other is a distinct warning against having many friends, on the ground that the man who multiplies friends does it to his own destruction! I got out of my difficulty on that occasion by extemporizing a few remarks on the latter passage by way of introduction to the former, and by showing that both passages are true. They are the two sides of a fundamental truth of human life. Is it not a fact of experience that a man who multiplies friends does it frequently, if not generally, to his own undoing? Never since the making of man has one person been led astray by an enemy, or by one who cared nothing for him. All men who go wrong are led astray by their friends, never by their foes. We are only susceptible to temptation on the side we turn to our friends. Hence the greater the number of our friends, especially if they be worldly-minded friends, the greater and stronger the number of temptations that may end in destruction. The genial, good-hearted, magnetic young man who is hail fellow well met with everybody, who makes friends easily and rapidly, will find his popularity a constant peril. When he walks along the streets and every other man he meets makes a demonstration over him and invites him into a saloon to drink or to play cards, he would have to be almost an angel to get through without being swallowed up in perdition and destruction. Over millions of young men who have gone down to premature graves through dissipation and bad habits contracted from their associates, it might be justly written, "Ruined by his friends."

Popular young men have more temptations than any other class of people, and the more friends the more temptations. A thousand men have been ruined by friends where one has been ruined by enemies. Shall we advise young people not to make friends? No. Tell them to be careful of the friends they allow to influence them. Wise men make but few friends in the highest and best sense of that term, because they find but few persons in life whom they can safely take into that intimate and almost divine relationship. There is an old saying, "Be friendly with all and intimate with none," but there are a few choice spirits on whom you can afford to lavish all the wealth of your friendship that you may obtain theirs in return. Life without these highest and divinest friendships would be a place of leafless woods and barren fields, but these in the short pace of human life can be and need be but few. Friendship in this profound spiritual meaning is more than acquaintance, more than kind feeling and well-wishing, more than neighborly interest or brotherly sympathy. It is the highest human relationship. Love and absolute reciprocal trust constitute the basis of friendship in its best sense. It is one soul in two bodies, as a Greek philosopher expressed it. When you can find a person in whom you can put absolute and unwavering trust, and who can repose the same in you, your souls flow together and become one soul, and you would do as much for your friend, or more, than you would do for yourself. Such was the friendship of David and Jonathan, Damon and Pythias, Tennyson and Hallam. Here it enters the region of love and breaks into poetry, as David's elegy over Jonathan, and Tennyson's In Memoriam over Hallam.

"I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan.
Very pleasant hast thou been unto me,
Thy love to me was wonderful,
Passing the love of women."

The term, however, is not used in this high, delicate sense in the two texts I have cited. It seems to signify in both statements the good-will and sympathy that we are justified in seeking from all the right-thinking of our fellowmen. This especially is the significance of the word in the old text, as true to experience as the other. "He that would have friends must show himself friendly." Who has not seen hundreds of verifications of this in their observations of life? Who does not know that the way to make friends is to show ourselves friendly? We may illustrate, but it would be useless to argue this proposition that stands in the nature of a social axiom. It would be absurd for an unfriendly person or an unfriendly church to expect to make friends. Like produces like. What we give out we get back. The spirit we manifest towards others is the one they manifest towards us. If we hate we are hated, if we love we are loved, if we befriend others they will befriend us. Life begets life, love begets love, joy in us awakens joy in our fellows, a friendly disposition awakens friendliness in others. What you put into men and into life is what you will get out of them. If you put nothing into life you will get nothing out of it. If you communicate nothing to men you will receive nothing from them. Hence, the man who gives out friendliness will receive in kind and in quantity what he has given out. The converse of the text is true, the unfriendly man has no friends. Whether he is morose, or proud, or timid, or indifferent, the effect is the same—his friends are few and far between. Timidity is frequently mistaken for pride and lack of sociability. So-and-So is proud and stuck up, he doesn't speak to people, when perhaps there is nothing the matter with the man but timidity. He is apparently cold and unsocial, but the cause is bashfulness and self-consciousness, and not pride or indifference. Timidity is not a sin, but it is a misfortune, and a great drawback in social fellowship with men. Help the timid person by making the first advance, and do not say that people are stuck up and hateful when they are only bashful and lack confidence in themselves. Silent, timid, say-nothing people repel those who would approach them, but they do not mean to do it. They chill the atmosphere in which they live, and no one desires to breathe it. Nobody cares for them because they seem to care for nobody; but do not misunderstand them, they do not mean it that way. Their hearts are as good as yours, but they have a poor way of showing it, and you have a better way, that is the only difference. It is the duty of the timid to overcome their timidity as they would any other human weakness that stood in the way of their usefulness and happiness, for he that would have friends must show himself friendly.

Hour of Prayer.

THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, August 31.)

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law. And they that are of Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with the passions and lusts thereof. If we live by the Spirit, by the Spirit let us also walk. Let us not be vainglorious, provoking one another, envying one another.—Gal. 5:22-26.

This passage is of great value in assisting us to a clear understanding of our spiritual relationship to Jesus Christ. There is little need of our singing the one time popular hymn—

"'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought:
Do I love the Lord or no,
Am I His or am I not?"

"If any man have not the Spirit of Christ," or the Holy Spirit, "he is none of His." But how are we to know whether we really possess the Holy Spirit? One of the best ways to know this important fact is by its fruit. If the Holy Spirit abides in the human heart it brings forth a certain kind of fruit, such as love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance or self-control. Having this fruit in our lives we are Christ's. In the absence of such testimony we may be sure that we have not the Spirit and are not Christ's.

Such is the nature of these dispositions and qualities of character that we need not be in any doubt as to their presence in us. Do we not know whether or not we love God and our fellowmen? Love always manifests itself in some unmistakable way. What is our attitude toward God and our fellowmen? Love for God and for Christ Jesus will lead us to seek to please them in all things, and to make sacrifices for their cause. Are we doing it? If we love our fellowmen as we do ourselves, we will be seeking to serve them and help them in every possible way. We will be charitable to their faults and not easily offended. Is this our attitude and feeling toward our brotherman?

Have we joy in our Christian life? Do we "rejoice in the truth," and in the triumphs of truth in the world? Do we take a joyful, optimistic outlook of things?

Are we at peace with God? Have we a conscience void of offense toward God and man? Do we feel that between us and our heavenly Father there is a perfect understanding, and we are at one with Him, and come what may all is well? The opposite of this is that worrying, fretful, unrestful condition that shortens life and neutralizes Christian influence.

Are we longsuffering, able to endure harsh criticism, misinterpretation, misrepresentation, and even slander, without loss of temper or a feeling of resentment or retaliation? The opposite of this would be a disposition to take offense easily and to resent injuries in kind.

Are our lives full of kindness, manifested by deeds as well as words in our relations with our fellowmen? Have we eyes for seeing opportunities for doing good to those in need, and hearts to improve these opportunities?

Have we a reputation in the community for goodness, which is not only the absence of that which is evil, but the possession of a positive quality that flows out in life-giving streams to others? Barnabas was a "good man, full of faith and the Holy Spirit." Goodness is, after all, true greatness.

Have we the element of faithfulness or fidelity, standing at the post of duty when others have deserted it, and when the cause is unpopular, and when "the love of many has waxed cold?" Can we stand for the right in the face of opposition and be true to God and to ourselves in the midst of temptation?

Are we meek in spirit, not seeking promotion and honor, not ambitious for place or power, not anxious to have our names blazoned abroad, but willing to occupy humble places and to do humble service, if only we may have the approval of God and of our conscience?

Are we temperate in all things, letting our moderation be known to all men? Are we able to control our appetites, our passions, our temper? Or are we the slaves of these appetites and passions?

These are questions which we can answer in our own hearts. We know whether these qualities exist within us, and to what degree. These are the elements of Christian character. These qualities make us Christ-like. If we possess them we are Christ's and Christ is ours.

"If we live by the Spirit"—if we are indebted to the Spirit for whatever spiritual life we possess—"by the Spirit let us also walk." That is, let there be harmony between our inner life and our outward conduct. "Let us not be vainglorious, provoking one another, envying one another," but rather let us glory in Christ and seek to lift up one another in all humbleness and meekness of mind.

These are the colors which make up the most beautiful picture the earth has ever seen—a truly Christian life. These are the elements worth striving for. Silver and gold, all forms of material wealth, earthly honors and possessions—these soon fade away, but the royal graces here called "the fruit of the Spirit," will endure forever and form a part of our eternal inheritance.

If these things be "the fruit of the Spirit," with what zeal and earnestness should we seek to possess the Spirit Himself. This is the one gift that includes all others. With what hopefulness, too, may we seek this divine gift, in view of the words of Jesus, "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"

PRAYER.

O Thou most gracious and righteous Father, who art in heaven; we acknowledge our transgressions which have separated us from Thee, but we rejoice in the salvation by which our transgressions are removed far from us, and we are brought into union and reconciliation with Thee through Jesus Christ our Lord. We thank Thee that in this relationship to Thee we are promised and we receive Thy Holy Spirit as the Giver of life, as the Source of every grace and virtue, and as the earnest or pledge of the everlasting inheritance. May we come into such close relationship with Thee, and so enjoy the communion of the Holy Spirit, that our lives may abound in all true and precious things which go to make up Christian character. Forbid that any of us should live barren or unfruitful lives, but may we abound in all fruitfulness unto the praise of Thy glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

OR MACATAWA MUSINGS.

The Macatawa Park Assembly for 1898 has now closed, and we may look upon it and judge it as a whole. To say that it has excelled all its predecessors in attendance, in interest awakened, in the impression it has made and in the quality of work done, is only to give voice to the general sentiment of those who have attended these assemblies. Bros. Willett and Campbell seem admirably adapted to working together and their lectures supplemented each other beautifully. They have given a decided stimulus to biblical study and especially to the study of the four Gospels. The evening addresses on the different phases of Christian Union excited a deep interest, though there was little or no differences of opinion developed. The people who come to Macatawa Park and attend these assemblies seem to be pretty thoroughly imbued with Christian Union sentiment. The plan is, we believe, to publish in some form or other both the lectures on Bible study in the morning and the evening addresses on Christian Union. J. J. Haley was substituted for Dr. W. T. Moore, the latter having sailed for England, and while Bro. Haley spoke on brief notice his address was worthy of the occasion and received the hearty approval of those who heard it. It was the first time we have had with us Prof. McKenzie, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, and he has impressed us all as a man of wide culture, of profound thought and of a splendid personality. We hope to have him with us again. As for our old standbys, Campbell and Willett, they are like wine, in that they grow better with age. They were never more highly appreciated than during the recent Assembly.

There were some special features and episodes connected with the Assembly week that deserves special mention. On Friday afternoon, there being a large number of preachers present associated with the Disciples of Christ, it was decided to resolve ourselves into an executive session for the transaction of some business of an informal nature and for mutual edification. For this purpose a little steamer was chartered and about twenty-three or twenty-four preachers, with the wives and families that were present with them, making a company in all of about thirty-five, went to Point Superior, about half way between the Park and Holland, on Friday afternoon, on a picnic. Once upon the ground under the trees, in the little peninsula that runs out into the lake, while the ladies were engaged in making preparations for the evening meal the preachers held a pow-pow, sitting on the ground like Indians in a council of war. H. W. Everest was called to the chair and H. L. Willet elected secretary. After a free exchange of opinions it was unanimously resolved to issue a call for a Congress of the Disciples of Christ to convene in April next, and a committee was appointed to arrrange the programme and to fix the place and exact time. It was the unanimous sentiment of these preachers, representing several states, that the time had come in our history when we needed a separate and independent gathering to discuss some living questions that could not well come before our National Missionary Convention. It was believed, further, that the City Evangelization Conference had accomplished its special mission, and could be well merged into and find its place in our National Missionary Convention. This was the general sentiment of those who attended the last Conference, and it was felt, therefore, that this arrangement for a congress would not interfere with any other general meeting of the brotherhood. The committee appointed to arrange the programme for this congress consists of H. W. Everest, H. L. Willett, J. Z. Tyler, W. F. Richardson and J. H. Garrison. They will hold a meeting perhaps at the National Convention at Chattanooga to perfect the plan. By the time this pow-pow had ended supper was ready, and such a meal as it was! Beautiful white cloths spread under the green boughs of the trees, decorated with ferns and with almost every good thing to eat one could think about. We adopted the apostolic method of reclining, except in the cases of Bros. A. M. Atkinson and J. Z. Tyler who, on account of their venerable appearance, were given stools. After the meal there was a reading by Bro. Atkinson, some atheletic sports by the younger preachers, some social enjoyment, and then we gathered our goods together and returned to the sandy beach to meet the little steamer that was coming up the bay to take us home. The evening was calm and the level beams of the sun converted it into a sea of glass mingled with fire. As we stood on the narrow peninsula at the water's edge we sang several of the sweet familiar hymns, while a solemn hush seemed to rest on the lake, on the woods and on the people. It seemed to be a holy hour when hearts were uplifted to God. Many were affected to tears at the tranquil, holy scene. Soon we were aboard the little steamer and the singing was continued, intercepted only by brief speeches from the brethren, whose hearts were too full for silence. Bro. Atkinson, among others, made a little talk and told us how beautiful was this scene of Christian fellowship, and how greatly he had enjoyed it, and how he hoped that this characteristic feature among the Disciples, of brotherly love, would continue, whatever changes might come. It was voted unanimously that Bro. and Sister A. be invited to make their permanent summer home at Macatawa Park. They were to leave that evening, and this picnic will remain with them a pleasant memory of their visit. It was agreed that among all the picnics we had ever had this one would easily rank first, and a number said it was the most enjoyable afternoon they had ever spent. The Congregational brethren on the same afternoon also chartered a launch and took a ride up the lake and back. One of them in speaking of it at night said that "the Disciples took to the woods and the Congregationalists to the water," which may be regarded as a significant indication of the union of the two bodies!

On Saturday afternoon of Assembly week the ladies gave a social and reception to the people who had been attending or were interested in the Assembly. The Auditorium which, by the way, had been neatly floored and seated for Assembly week, according to previous notice in this column, was beautifully decorated with branches of trees, ferns, flowers, and the American flag was gracefully draped in the rear of the platform. A programme, consisting of recitations, was rendered with great satisfaction to the people. Then came light refreshments and the social hour. But the crowning meeting of the Assembly was the one held on last Lord's day. The sermon at four o'clock was by Prof. McKenzie, and was a powerful presentation of the power of the human conscience and the danger of stifling it, as illustrated in the case of Herod in his relation to John the Baptist and Jesus. After the sermon, which had made a profound impression, came the communion service, presided over by Profs. Everest and McKenzie. It was a union communion service and the Spirit of God was manifestly present, and that is always the spirit of unity. This tender service closed with the singing of—

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

The great beach meeting at night was presided over by Prof. Graham Taylor, in which the theme of the Assembly was the general theme of the evening, and a number of earnest speeches were made on the subject of Christian unity. There must have been 800 or 1,000 people sitting on the sand listening to these songs and talks, while the bonfire on the beach added its radiance to that of the electric bulbs, and the lamps of heaven.

Somehow the feeling has taken deep root that Macatawa has entered upon a new and wider era in its history. Its future is no longer uncertain as it was for a number of years. The tone of the place is so predominantly moral and religious that it is destined to be a great summer resort for Christian people and a center from which there shall go out notable utterances from year to year upon the great and living questions of our time. Especially is it to be a great center for Disciples. We do not wish to be exclusively so. It is now predominantly so only because the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has given more notice of the place and its advantages than the religious journals of any other religious body. We hope the Congregationalists especially, who have always constituted an important factor in the religious life of the place, may increase in number and that here we may illustrate as well as teach the principles of Christian unity. Many of our preachers who come here for the first time are so impressed with the advantages of the place that they are arranging to purchase lots and erect cottages. Among these is our well-known brother, J. Z. Tyler, who has never before taken a vacation. No man in the brotherhood, perhaps, needs one more than he, and needs it every year. He has been an incessant toiler, adding the labors connected with his position as superintendent of the Christian Endeavor among the Disciples and superintendent of the Reading Courses to those of his pastoral office. He has rendered our cause invaluable service by his work in connection with the Christian Endeavor movement, and we hope the time may soon come when he will be able to devote his entire time to this service. We fear that his work has not been as generally appreciated by the brotherhood as it ought to be. We are glad at the prospect of having him as a permanent summer resident at Macatawa.

CONCERNIRG THE KINGDOM.

1. Is the kingdom of heaven used interchangeably with the church? That is, are they equivalent expressions?

2. How woald you answer one who insists that the kingdom is yet to be established?

3. What Scriptures would you cite to prove that Christ has a kingdom on earth?

CONCERNING IMMORTALITY.

1. What Scriptures prove that man is immortal in his spiritual nature?

2. What does it mean when in the Scripture it says God only has immortality?

3. What distinction would you make between immortality and eternal life?

4. What answer would you make to the statement that only the just attain to immortality and the resurrection?

5. What Scriptures prove that the wicked will not be destroyed (annihilated), but will continue to be after death and the judgment? Give Scripture references to each of your answers. R. A. W.

I. AS TO THE KINGDOM.

1. The kingdom of heaven or the kingdom of God, is not used intercangeably with the term church, although we believe they sometimes overlap and touch, and in certain passages perhaps refer to the same thing. They are not, however, "equivalent expressions." The kingdom of God is the moral sway exerted over men by Jesus Christ, and its influence is much wider than the church. The church is the divine agency for the extension of the kingdom. As some one has expressed it, "The kingdom of God is the church as seen from above, while the church is the kingdom of God as seen from below." In other words, the church is the kingdom of God objectified, in an institution, with its ordinances and officers, but its influence is affecting social life, and influencing the state and its legislation.

2. We would say to such an one that the kingdom, in its triumphant condition, is yet to be established, but that the kingdom has already been inaugurated and its work of conquest is going on. The confusion arises from not distinguishing between the kingdom in its present process of overcoming the world, and in its future triumphant state when it shall have put down all opposition.

3. We would cite such Scriptures as "The kingdom of God is among you," and such passages as give the conditions of admission into the kingdom of God, as John 3:5, and the fact of our translation out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God (Col. 1:13). The fact of Christ's coronation as king and the existence on earth of millions of obedient subjects, is evidence of the existence of the kingdom of God on earth.

II. CONCERNING IMMORTALITY.

1. The Scriptures which teach that man was created in the image of God (Gen. 1:26 et al.), show that man has a nature that survives death or dissolution of the body. Man's likeness to God is to be found, not in his material, but in his spiritual nature. Again, the teaching of Jesus, that we are not to fear those who have power only to kill the body, but rather him who hath power to cast both soul and body into hell, involves the same truth. The tremendous emphasis which Jesus lays upon the value of the soul is based upon the fact that man is a spiritual being and to live forever.

2. That God alone possesses immortality within himself, unconferred.

3. Eternal life may be enjoyed here, and its possession is the assurance of a blessed immortality. One is a negative term, indicating simply the absence of death, while the other is a positive term, indicating possession of life—that peculiar kind of life that persists and is eternal because it is the life of God in the soul of man. The term "immortality" has reference chiefly, if not solely, to the body, and refers to the spiritual body which believers are to have hereafter. Eternal life is the power in man that makes such an immortal body possible. It has been conjectured, not without reason, that it is the power that is now forming that body within us.

4. Taking immortality to refer to the immortal body, that is to be given to the righteous, the statement would not be incorrect, but we must not make the mistake of identifying immortality with everlasting existence.

5. The Scriptures shed little light upon the question as to the future destiny of the wicked; that is, the finally impenitent. The fact that they enter into "everlasting punishment" (Matt. 25:46) has been supposed to indicate that they will exist forever. The problems of eschatalogy or the Last Things, involve many questions concerning which we cannot afford to be dogmatic. Evidently God has not intended to unveil all the mysteries of futurity to human eyes. The fact that man is created in the image of God would seem to indicate that he is to exist forever. If He has seen proper to withhold from us what disposition will be ultimatly made of those whom all His remedial agencies shall fail to recover from the power of sin, we can afford to wait for the revelation of the last day.

Current Religious Thought

The New York Observer thus emphasizes the distinction between Christianity and the moral maxims of Roman authors. After quoting from Terence the maxim, "I am a man; I regard nothing human as foreign to me," the Observer says:

> The limping sentiment of the popular Latin author, Christianity however, takes up and surpasses both in theory and practice. Christianity is not indeed the belated inheritor of all the odds and ends of morality that have found expression in various quarters up to the time of the Christian era, but expresses in fuller and unequivocal terms, and with an originality of its own, the axiomatic moral sentiments which are of the eternal structure of things, concerning which moral teachers ventured but a few half guesses. While a Terence reckons that nothing that a man does or feels is apart from him, Christianity bespeaks a discriminating interest in our fellowmen, which will differentiate their follies from their virtues, detect the fallacies beneath their faults, and evidence the truest sympathy with their troubles, by seeking to remove the curse of sin which is the root of most of these difficulties. According to gospel teachings we are to sympathize with sinners, not with sin. The Christian conception is that what we are to share with humanity is its better life and what we are to induce it to share with us is our best morality.
> Thus Christianity argues for a subtler sympathy with humanity than ever entered the brain or heart of a Roman moralist. Its teachings as to this law of sympathetic brotherliness comes to highest expression in the words and works of him of whom it could be said that, while divine, He himself became subject to a process of temptation in all points like as we are, yet without sin. The significance of this summary of the life of Christ resides as much in the last as in the first of its terms. Christianity is thus seen to take both a juster and a broader view of the needs of humanity, which revuires not alone sympathy, or a simple fellow feeling, but as well the right kind of sympathy.

Those who are inclined to doubt the progress of the world toward a higher civilization and life would do well to read an article in the Independent, Aug. 11th, by Rev. Jas. A. Miller, Ph. D., on "Slowly But Irresistably." We give one paragraph from the article. After speaking of the slow development of an individual from childhood to manhood he says:

> It is altogether likely that God is the same God, whether creating a world, building up his civiliztaion in the world, or bringing in any particular sector of his circle of truth. God's day may be a thousand of our years in the proclamation of truth as in other of his works. Rapidity in the acceptance of truth is the exception, and not the rule, as is the raising of an island in a night. Haste to take on new methods of living and thinking may sometimes carry with it a justifiable touch of suspicion. Nations, as a general thing, do not accept even divine truth in a human day or a human week. It took many centuries, and a world of effort on the part of the traveler, the historian, the statesman and the philosopher, to convince the masses of the Greeks that the earth was not like a plate, with the heavens, like an overturned bowl, resting upon its upturned rim; that the rivers did not all rise in the ocean, nor all flow into the Mediterranean Sea. That which is bred into bone and muscle and blood and brain and soul does not disappear in twenty-five or even fifty years. We grossly misinterpret God's manifestation of himself in the world if we think that the Hindus or the Chinese are going to be Europeanized and Christianized within one or two generations. We believe that Christian civilization is entering, and must eventually triumph; but in ancient peoples like these it is one of the factors that is most freighted with hope for eventual triumph that the work goes on very gradually. The great banyan tree, dropping innumerable branches to the ground to form innumerable trunks, may be felled; but we should have little faith in a workman who would promise to throw it down in an hour. Nations clinging to wrong ideas for centuries first defend them, then allegorize, then revise, then doubt, then desert, then accept the inevitable. Civilization becomes secure in the gradualness and quietness with which it permeates a section of humanity.

Probably no man understands better the international relations and problems of the Old World than George Washburn, D. D., president of Robert College, Constantinople. And, living as he does between England and Russia, he is especially qualified to speak forth the truth on the interests and relations of these two great rival powers. In an article in a recent number of The Independent on England and America he speaks on the advisability of an alliance of these two nations as follows:

No one expects us to enter into this alliance on purely sentimental grounds, although the fact that there are such grounds is not to be ignored. We shall do what we believe to be for our interest, or, if we can rise so high, what we see to be our duty to the world. It seems clear to me that sentiment, interest and duty, in this case, all point in the same direction. All must see that we can no longer pursue that policy of selfish isolation which we fell into after the Civil War. I am not an Imperialist, in the sense in which that word is now used. I have no desire to build up a great colonial empire to rival that of England; but we have our interests and our duties in all parts of the world, and we must be ready to meet them. We need friends whose duties and interests are in some measure the same as ours, and England is the only great Power of which this is true. Whenever England raises her flag there is freedom of trade for all the world, and political freedom for the people just so far as they are capable of appreciating it. This is true of no other great Power, least of all Russia, which is the coming Power of Europe. Only by an alliance between England and America can Central and South America be saved from annexation by the Continental Powers. Their designs upon China are confessed already, and we have as great an interest as England in keeping that great empire open to our merchants.

We have no concern in the special politics of Europe and no desire to meddle with its affairs. There are great questions there, such as the Eastern question, the question which is soon to come of the Austrian Empire, and the question between France and Germany. which may lead to great wars. We have nothing to do with them, and should enter into no alliance which would involve us in any responsibility for them; but in all world-questions we are interested, and for these we need an alliance with England, the great sea power. We are commercial rivals, and we shall always be such; but we only ask a fair field, and England is more ready to grant this than we are. She opens her home market to us as we do not ours to her.

In short, we have entered upon an era in our history when we need an ally strong enough to stand by us in the face of the world, and in sympathy with our ideas of government. England is the only such country, and the only one with which anything like a permanent alliance is possible.

About as clear a distinction as we have yet seen made between preachers and sermonizers appeared in the following words of President DeWitt Hyde, in the Preachers' Magazine for August. He says:

To the preacher the sermon is a means; to the sermonizer it is an end. To the preacher the sermon is an opportunity; to the sermonizer it is a task. Hence the preacher is a free man and a master; the sermonizer is a subject and a slave. The preacher has something to say; the sermonizer has to say something. The preacher bears in his heart a great, glowing ideal of what Jesus would have his people to be; he feels with tenderest sympathy and keenest sorrow how far short of this they come, and, impelled by this ideal and a burning desire to lift his people up to it, he searches the Scriptures for a text which shall express it, and draws on all the sources of his reading and his experience for argument, illustration and incident to commend it to their minds and hearts. The sermonizer carries in his head a general outline of theology, goes to his commentary for an appropriate setting, splits his thought up into the requisite number of heads, gives each a striking title, tacks on an appropriate appeal or application, and goes forth to meet his audience.

SERMONS IN THE OLD TESTAMENT PROPHETS.

BY G. A. PECKHAM.

In the Prophets we have a mine often too little explored, rich in material for sermonizing. Aside from portions recognized by the New Testament as messianic, they are filled with the application of divinely inspired truth to present-day problems, because the panacea in our age, as in that of the Prophets, for the ills of mankind, social, political and moral, is to crowd the spirit of selfishness out of men's hearts and to fill them with love for God and humanity.

Then, as now, men had their short-comings and excellencies. Among the evils of the land then, as now, were the demon of intemperance, oppression of the laborer in his hire, grinding the faces of the poor, prostitution of so-called courts of justice to the wishes of the rich and powerful, corrupt legislators enacting iniquitous laws to further their own selfish ends, cornering the grain market that exhorbitant prices might be extorted from the people for the necessaries of life, short weights and measures, false prophets whose sole object is to flatter men of position and influence and curry favor with them, preachers of error and falsehood, a ruling passion on the part of some to grab all the land in sight, adding farm to farm and joining house to house until there is no room left for people to dwell, advocates of quack remedies for the social and political ills of the nation, worshiping at the shrine of the golden calf, the sins of unchastity, hypocrisy and practical atheism, and last but not least, idle women given to wine, and living in luxury, whose vanity and thirst for finery must be satisfied at any cost. The old prophet met these evils, far more common then than now, by preaching sermons full of divine instruction, many of which are preserved in the inspired record. But the prophets see the virtues as well as the vices of humanity, and as we read we often find ourselves in the company of God's noblemen. Then, as now, but in smaller numbers, there were preachers of righteousness fearlessly proclaiming Heaven's message to men, courts where the claims of justice were sacred and the innocent man, be he rich or poor, had nothing to fear, and legislators whose only object was righteousness between man and his fellow. There was true devotion to God, true love for humanity. Indeed, human nature is very much the same in all ages. But thanks to the Word of God in the Old Testament Prophets and the Spirit of Christ, gradually taking possession of the world, never was the outlook for our race so bright as now. If we read the Prophets aright, they lift the veil of the centuries past and put us in touch with the generations which these inspired messengers of God served in such a way that they are no longer strangers and foreigners, but our fellowmen with whom we live, in whose midst we walk and whose joys and sorrows we feel. The study of the Prophets is of great value to the minister of the gospel, because they are servants of God preparing the way for the perfect revelation to come in Christ Jesus, their ideal representative, who is the goal of all prophecy. In them are seen the foundations of faith. Then, too, they give their readers enlarged views of God in history. Jehovah is God of all nations, not of Israel alone. "Saith Jehovah, Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt, and the Philistines from Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir?" In Isaiah we read, "Blessed be Egypt, my people, and Assyria, the work of my hands, and Israel, mine inheritence." The Assyrian, with his mighty host, for a time invincible, is the staff in Jehovah's hand for inflicting punishment upon his people, but afterwards the instrument magnifies itself against its owner and suffers destruction. He hisses, and the armies of Assyria and Egypt come swarming in like bees and flies to do his bidding.

The Prophets see Jehovah interesting himself in state and city government, bringing the well-laid plans of crafty politicians to naught. It is he who taught the farmer how to carry on his occupation. In short, they bring God into the life of the common people and make him a present reality for all receptive readers. They also have the faculty of turning a man's eyes toward his own heart that he may see whether he is rendering true worship or not. If one's religion drifts into mere formalism, an evil against which the human heart has had to guard from the beginning of religious history (and, let me say, there is a possibility for as much formalism in a regular round of attendance at church, or even in public prayer, as in the sacrifices offered upon ancient Jewish altars), if it has lost its life or vigor, so that he is indifferent to the rights of the poor who work for him, or takes a legal advantage of a man who is in his power because "business is business," or enters an unjust combination for the purpose of enriching himself by robbing the people, or finally as a laborer he fails to give a full equivalent for the wages received, he may, if he will but pause a moment for reflection, hear God saying in his Prophets, "I hate your worship, it is an abomination to me." "Practice justice and love mercy." "I desire mercy and not sacrifice."

The Hebrew word translated mercy in the last quotation is a very comprehensive one. It may represent God's grace, or man's piety, and in the relation of man to his fellow it embraces the duties of love and mutual consideration. Those old preachers of righteousness touched human life on every side, and the religious teacher who makes them his companions will not want for interesting material to illustrate the great truths of the gospel and impress them upon the hearts of the people. It may not be out of place to call attention to a few books that will help the busy preacher to understand the life and work of these holy men of God. I mention "The Prophets of Israel," by W. R. Smith; "The Cambridge Bible;" "The Doctrine of the Prophets," by Kirkpatrick, and G. A. Smith's volumes of the "Expositors Bible," on Isaiah; and then the Minor Prophets. The last-named writer, in discussing the Servant of Jehovah, so human and so divine, as he is pictured in the second part of the book of Isaiah, notes the fact that one must become a servant of God before he can be a true servant of humanity. The man who fails to see in God the source of virtue is like the "savage who imagines that it is the burning-glass which sets the bush on fire, and so long as the sun is shining it may be impossible to convince him that he is wrong; but a dull day will teach even his mind that the glass can do nothing without the sun is upon it."

According to the old Jewish division of the Old Testament, we have the Law, the Prophets and the Writings. Not the least of these is the Prophets.

"THANATOPSIS."*

C. J. KIMBALL.

"All that breathes
Will share thy destiny. The gay will laugh
When thou art gone, the solemn brood of care
Plod on, and each one as before will chase
His favorite phantom; yet all these shall leave
Their mirth and their employments, and shall come
And make their bed with thee. As the long train
Of ages glide by, the sons of men—
The youth in life's green spring, and he who goes
In the full strength of years, matron and maid,
The speechless babe and the gray-headed man—
Shall one by one be gathered to thy side
By those who in their turn shall follow them."

Human nature consists of two hemispheres, if I may so say—the lower and the higher—which when taken together constitute the full, complete, well-rounded sphere of our lives. These are sometimes called our lower and higher natures; or, in other words, our earthly, sensuous, selfish, and our higher, more rational and spiritual characters.

When the subject of death is viewed from this lower hemisphere of our nature alone, it presents to our mental vision the most repulsive, horrible and shocking aspect; but when contemplated from the standpoint of man's higher, more enlightened and spiritual nature, we see it in a different and kindlier light. But neither of these hemispheres can be ignored or lost sight of if we would see this and all other subjects in their true light, and if we would have our lives fully and perfectly developed. They must be blended into one rotund and beautiful sphere, as God intended.

Night—darkness—although a real factor in our mundane existence, is a symbol of weariness, danger, want, ignorance, sin and death. In heaven none of these things are known. Hence we are told that "there shall be no night there." No night in heaven! Do we ever stop to think of the wonderful meaning couched in this beautiful symbol? Our earth-life is the night of the soul; our "abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom" is the soul's sunrise. I remember that Miss Frances E. Willard—one of the grandest of American women—characterized the death of her mother at eighty-four years of age as a "glorious sunset"—referring to the sinking of the earthly life into the darkness of the tomb. But of course to Mrs. Willard herself it could have been nothing less than a magnificently resplendent sun-rise. As in our sublunary nights the darkness is deepest just before the dawn, so we must pass into the shadows of death before emerging into the unfading glories of an eternal day.

Death has been viewed in almost innumerable different ways, but to all of us, perhaps, there comes with the thought of death a feeling of repugnance, awe and shrinking; we feel that it is an unseen land, a land of which we absolutely know almost nothing till we are called upon to make the journey through "the valley of of the shadow" for ourselves. In other words, experience is the only means by which we can gain any definite knowledge of this "mysterious realm." Shakspeare describes it as an "undiscovered country, from whose bourne no traveler returns." It has been represented under many symbols and figures, some grim and ghastly; others beautiful and touching. We are told that among some Indian tribes there is the custom of releasing white doves over the graves of their dead, thus representing the soul as winging its way to the "Great Spirit." The ancient Greeks, we are informed, designated the soul by the word psyche—a butterfly—thus intimating that even they had some idea, though vague and imperfect, of the soul's immortality. Their conception of the soul seemed to be that of flight to higher and more beautiful things after being set free from its tenement of clay. Again, writers and speakers use the word "ghost" and "spirit" as convertible terms; albeit, the former is a very inelegant and almost obsolete synonym of the latter. Scholars tell us that the English word "ghost" comes from an old Anglo-Saxon term signifying guest, thus conveying to us the thought that the spirit is an inmate or guest of the body, and that when the visitor or guest has ended its visit it takes its departure to heaven, whence it came—"returns to God, who gave it."

The standard poetical works are full of beautiful and striking similes, tropes and hyperboles on this subject, of which my space will permit me to cite only a few examples, and but a few words from each.

"There is a Reaper whose name is Death,
And with his sickle keen
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath,
And the flowers that grow between."
—Longfellow, in "The Reaper and the Flowers."

"And as she looked around she saw how Death, the Consoler, Laying his hand upon many a heart, had healed it forever."
—Longfellow, in "Evangeline."

"Death lies on her like an untimely frost Upon the sweetest flower of all the field."
—Shakspeare, in "Romeo and Juliet."

"That golden key [death] that opens the palace of eternity."
—Milton, in "Paradise Lost."

"None return from those quiet shores
Who cross with the boatman, cold and pale;
We hear the dip of the golden oars,
And catch a gleam of the snowy sail;
And lo! they have passed from our yearning heart—
They cross the stream and are gone for aye—
We may not sunder the vail apart
That hides from our vision the gates of day."
—Nancy Priest.

"Of all the thoughts of God that are
Bourne inward into the souls afar,
Along the Psalmist's music deep;
Now tell me if that any is
For gift or grace surpassing this:
'He giveth his beloved sleep?'"
—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

"God's finger touched him, and he slept."
—Tennyson, in "In Memoriam."

"There's nothing terrible in death;
'Tis but to cast our robes away
And sleep at night without a breath
To break repose till dawn of day."
—Montgomery.

"One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er:
We're nearer our Father's house to-day
Than we've ever been before."
—Alice Carey.

"Life! we've been long together,
Through pleasant and cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear—
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time—
Say not good-night; but in some brighter clime Bid me good-morning!"
—Anna Letitia Barbauld.

To me one of the saddest things in this sad world of ours is the apparently untimely and even cruel demise of dear, sweet, innocent young children. In some deaths—such, for instance, as the incorrigibly wicked, the hopelessly diseased, the extremely aged, and even the loss of a beloved life-companion—an experience through which the writer has but recently been called to pass—we can see, although but dimly, some traces of justice, and even of mercy. But when a precious little darling is suddenly snatched from the fond embrace of loving parents and borne swiftly from their view upon the dark billows of death's rolling river—then it is we find that the light of our poor, weak, fallible, short-sighted reason is but the "blackness of darkness." This untimely setting of a sun that had but just commenced its career in the skies; this cruel blighting of a half-blown flower ere it had unfolded its beauties or emitted its sweet fragrance upon the "desert air;" this withering and perishing of a promising young tree by the early summer drouth; this hopeless failure of a thousand sweet prophecies, whispered in the ears of Faith, and Hope, and Love; this sad and unlooked-for quenching of the loveliest, purest, brightest light that burned upon the home altar—O, what does it mean? In the highest reach of intelligent Christian faith, we can only be dumb in the presence of such a calamity, and adore where we cannot comprehend.

I know a man and wife—the husband a pious, able and scholarly minister—who lost their two precious little darlings (all they had) only a few days apart. The one went in the dying agonies of the old year; the other in the birth-throes of the new. It became my melancholy duty to conduct the funeral services in both cases, and nothing in my long experience ever so unnerved me, or caused me to so keenly realize my utter weakness in the presence of death. This was their first great sorrow; and surely, dear reader, it was no ordinary sorrow. It was a double sorrow. They lost their all. When the tendrils of love and affection, so firmly entwined around those dear ones, were thus suddenly snapped asunder, it seemed to them as if the whole world were violated. They knew that we could neither change nor put aside the solemn reality; they knew that their darling ones were gone from their fond and loving embrace forever, so far as this world is concerned; that never again on earth would they look into the pure depths of those loving little eyes, nor listen to the childish prattle of their innocent little tongues, nor hear the pattering of their busy, industrious little feet. They knew all this as well as I; and, looking at the matter from this standpoint exclusively, if there is any comfort, or any consolation, or any help, then I frankly confess I cannot see it. Under such circumstances how could I presume to offer any word of consolation? Mere words are so vain, so empty and so unsatisfactory; when they fall from our lips they seem to bound back upon us like echoes in some old deserted hall.

On the other hand, however — and I write for thousands who are this moment passing through somewhat similar bitter experiences—the parents to whom we have referred, whose happy home circle death had so ruthlessly invaded, as intelligent and devoted Christians could not fail to recognize the fact that their precious flowers, like some rare exotic, were too frail and tender to flourish in this cold and sin-cursed clime, and that God did, therefore, transplant them into the Garden of Paradise for the purpose of attracting them thither also; that their "sparkling jewels" were taken only to deck and beautify their "crown of rejoicing," which is "laid up" for them; that their loved ones have only "climbed the golden stair" to the "highlands of heaven"—

"Where the bright blooming flowers
Are their odors emitting,
And the leaves of the bowers
In the breezes are flitting," far beyond the reach of disease, decay or death, and that for this very reason their own desire to live for God and heaven is now stronger than it ever was before—so that they "sorrow not as those who have no hope;" and, as I look at it, this is really the only hope or consolation there is in such a case. But ah, what a hope and consolation this is! It is indeed "an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth to that within the vail, whither Jesus, the Forerunner, is for us entered." Without this hope we might indeed sink into unutterable and irretrievable despair. And yet, nothwithstanding all this, we are so glued to the things of time and sense; the wings of our faith and hope are so clogged by sin; our spiritual perceptions are so dimmed and blurred by daily contact with the world; the cloud is sometimes so black and the bow so dim, that it requires a long, patient and steady gaze to discern even the faintest outlines of the harbinger of hope. But of one thing we may be sure—and this it seems is all that can be said—the beautiful bow of promise still spans the heavens; it is only the darkness and the blindness of weeping that hides it from our vision; and to those who have the patience to "wait and watch" it will appear, sooner or later.

"And then you shall know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friend,
And sometimes the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon his love can send."

There are certain master-keys, so to speak, to which the melodies of all human lives are attuned, and they can no more grow old, or cease to vibrate to the proper touch, or lose their freshness and power, than the mocking-bird can forget his song; and there are some events the keen edge of which time can never dull. With us the awful presence of DEATH, that relentless disturber of all human affairs, is one. It is old as our race, and yet it is new as the perpetual dawn of the morning. And when its dark shadow settles down upon our homes we think, Surely there never was such sorrow as ours; and I would not vainly endeavor to comfort such bereaved ones by telling them that the same revelation of sorrow has come to others, any more than I would tell the young mother that there are thousands of babes just as pretty, and smart, and sweet, and precious as hers. Neither of them would believe me, and I am glad of it; for it is wrong and sacrilegious to make such holy things common. What, then, shall I say? Simply this: It is the shadow of God's wing; and in the midst of its blackness I must leave you, sorrow-stricken ones, whoever you may be, at least for the present. And those who gather around you, so eager to tender you their sympathy and condolence, probably cannot enter fully into the depths of your terrible grief. In a certain sense you must bear it alone; and yet not alone, for the Lord will be with you, "a very present help in time of trouble."

Dear reader, if you have not been subjected to such an experience as this, if your home has not been robbed of all that makes it home to you, press the question to your own heart and ask yourself, What if the light of my home should be thus suddenly and irrevocably extinguished? and you may devoutly thank God that you have thus far been spared the trying ordeal. But still, and forever, it is "somebody's darling," and the light of somebody's home. The monster will yet conquer us all. We will struggle against his power, but we will struggle in vain. He will lay his cold hand upon us and we will perish at his touch. We will feel his icy breath and fade as a leaf in his presence. There is a cry that will never be hushed. It has rung through the ages—"Rachel weeping for her children and will not be comforted, for they are not." Sometimes it is loud and boisterous, like the wild and majestic wail of the psalmist, "O, my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! Would to God I had died for thee, O, Absalom! my son, my son!" Again, it is low and sad, like the "far wind-harp's" dying wail. And then again, it is a voiceless grief, that can find no relief in word or tear or moan—the deepest and saddest of all grief. Thus, David and Rachel continue through the march of time, bearing each other company. It is still and forever true, the summer roses are changing to winter lilies. We all, as with the certain tread of fate, are moving on in the same solemn procession.

"Our hearts, like muffled drums,
Are beating funeral marches to the grave."

But even here the practiced eye can behold the bright bow of God's precious promises which, like the "old, old story of Jesus and his love," are old, yet ever new; "unto which promises ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place."

"There is never a day so sunny,
But a little cloud appears;
There is never a life so happy,
But has its time of tears;
Yet the sun shines the brighter,
When the stormy tempest clears."

Thus do we alternate and oscillate and vacillate between the lower and higher hemispheres of our nature, so to speak—between the grosser and more refined departments of our being. And now, as we began these cogitations with an excerpt from one of the most justly celebrated poems in the English tongue, by one of America's most distinguished poets, I deem it meet to conclude with the closing paragraph of this same wonderful piece of blank verse which, when interpreted in the light of the spirit and genus of the Christian religion, affords us the real Thanatopsis—the true "view of death"—and the perfect solution of the "problem of human life, here and hereafter:"

"So live that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go, not like the quarry-slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

St. Louis, Mo., July 20, 1898.

THE GOOD IS THE ENEMY OF THE BEST.

GEO. T. SMITH.

Man seeks good. God has promised good to those who ask him. The Book, science and our experience teach that the asking must be in the right way, the seeking must be according to law, the knocking must not be with the little finger.

Our asking is too limited. "Ask great things from God; attempt great things for God." The good is the enemy of the best. Let us illustrate. Begin low. Invited to dinner in the country; after the morning sermon we found an idiotic boy of sixteen. Dinner was delayed. He grew furious. He could not be pacified. He rushed to the table as soon as the food was put on, filled his plate, gorged himself and tumbled off to bed. Eating is good. That way is not best. Play is good. But what of the truant boy? Good antagonizes the best. Two workmen in the Philadelphia navy yard employed their leisure. One taught his dog to dance on his hind legs. That was recreation. The other devised a machine for dressing the knees of ships. That was recreation.

If time be spent on inferior pursuits, or if the aim be too low, the good is the enemy of your best. Do you read the papers? Or skimp them? If the former, what solid course of reading are you taking? In fiction, do you postpone the historical and philosopical novel for the last sensation? The good drives out the best.

The Ptolemaic system of astronomy, making the earth in the center, is yet extant. It is a foe to progress and hindered Columbus. The Copernican swept away the horizon, buried time in eternity, made the heavens known. What is the center of your life? Either this self, made of earth, or the Sun of Righteousness. If of the earth, earthy, then it checks advance and opposes our Columbus who would for you cross the Atlantic of life and return with convincing word that he would pilot your bark safely through the billows to the real Fountain of Youth, in the land where the grave is never seen. If your life-center is Copernican, then it has abolished death, made life timeless and the stars but the glittering dust of your pathway to the throne of God. Self-centered you get good. But you miss the best. You receive only commonplace good. The life of an intelligent and refined animal is beneath man's true dignity. Eating is better than feeding. But what if, in addition, the apostle draws near and declares that the food is to be received with thanksgiving because it is sanctified. With a thankful heart you may worship God in eating. If you see his power giving you strength, loading the rays of the sun with life for you, shooting it on its way to the rootlets, and into the fibres of the grass, turning it into meat and thus bestowing on you life and health, every meal may become a sacrament.

What is sweeter, of all earthly good, than the kiss of newly avowed love? When youth and health, strength and beauty thus exchange hearts and pledge their vows of mutual love, angels might envy their joy. It is good. But how immeasurably richer the joy if there flash to the heart of each the thought that the other is a Christian, that the union of hearts then pledged is forever.

"But we are Christians and can rise no higher." What grade? There is no more difference in the schools, between the primary tot and highest graduate, than between Christians. It is cheap rhetoric to say that if all Christians were to vote as they pray there would be no saloon. "If." The Spanish are Christians. "Spain" is in the New Testament. They are not yet out of the kindergarten. Their bullfights are the long-drawn shadow of the gladiatorial shows of pagan Rome. But we rank them. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault ye who are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness." Are we spiritual? Are we satisfied with the merest faith that we shall escape hell? Are we earnestly seeking the best things God has to give?

Here we reach the Scripture that gave rise to these thoughts. The temptation of Christ. Man was not placed here to be happy, but to do his duty, to become perfect. Jesus, human as his mother, excepting sin, became perfect. How? He never gave way to temptation. How did he win the battle which I lose? By being constantly with God. He did not rely on his own strength. He used none of his own wisdom. He foiled every temptation by placing God between himself and the Adversary. He does the best. He lived always with God. Though on earth, he was in heaven. Alas! I have been content with good. What seems white in me when I view it with these lower lights, turns to gray or is splotched with black when I draw near his spotless purity. But he inspires me with a deathless ambition. As he overcame the world, he tells me, so can I. Oh, thou who art so covetous of human love that thou didst purchase us by the costliest sacrifice of Heaven, help thy brothers who yet abide in the clay, that we may be covetous of the very best gifts! May we not remain content with a paltry salvation from penalty, but may we seek to be possessed of thy fullness, and to be completely the children of day.

The people of all parts of the world seem to have developed a liking for our manufactures of iron and steel, our sewing-machines hum in Africa, the East Indies, Colombia, Cuba, Central America and the islands of Oceanica. Our telegraph instruments click in Japan, China, Australia, Russia and in all parts of Europe. Our wire nails go to all European countries, to Canada, British Honduras, all the Central American states, Mexico, British West Indies, Cuba, Puerto Rico, the South American states, China, British East Indies, Hongkong, Japan, French Oceanica, British Australasia, British Africa and Liberia; our steel rails and locomotives go to Australia, China, Japan, Hawaii, Central and South America, Africa and Russia. Our electrical machinery is attracting the attention of the world and during the past year Austria-Hungary, France, Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom, Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, British Australasia, British Africa and French Africa have been among its purchasers. In every country in the world and in practically every inhabited island where articles of civilized or semi-civilized use are required American manufactures of iron and steel find purchasers, and the demand for them is rapidly increasing. The following table shows the value of imports and exports of iron and steel into and from the United States since 1880:

The Religious World.

The Herald and Presbyter recently gave this information to the public:

The total number of additions to our church last year, as reported in the minutes of the General Assembly, just issued, was 94,166, of whom 57,041 were on profession. Added to the whole number of communicants of last year. 960,911. This would make 1,055,077. But there were losses. Deaths to the number of 11,406 occurred. There were 56,042 who were "dismissed and dropped." The loss thus reported amounted to 67,448. Deducting this and we would have left on the roll 987,529. Instead of these figures we find published 975,877 as the whole number of communicants for this year, or a discrepancy of 11,652. Where have these gone? Should there be another column headed "Missing" for these? We find that our churches last year received on certificate 37,125 persons. The same churches "dismissed and dropped" 56,402. Supposing the dismissals and receptions by certificate to be entirely within our denominational lines, we have 19,277 who were "dropped," whatever that means. If it means a relaxing of sessional care, an end of discipline, a wholesale suspension, or an easy backdoor, it indicates that many persons are making their exit from the church by means other than certificate or death. In addition to this the 11,652 who are missing show why our sum-total of communicants is not over a million and why we are not making the numerical progress that seems possible to our church.

The will of George Alfred Pillsbury, of Minneapolis, has been filed with the probate court. An estimate of the value of the real estate places it at $600,000, of which half is in personal property. As was expected, Pillsbury Academy, at Owatonna, receives a large gift. He leaves $250,000 as a fund, none of the income of which is to be used for the erection of any new buildings, but entirely for apparatus and scientific appliances. Until the income from this fund is $8,000 annually, the general estate is to be taxed to make up that sum. Other endowment funds go to the Minneapolis Baptist Convention, $10,000; American Baptist Missionary Union, $5,000; American Baptist Home Mission Society, $5,000; American Baptist Publication Society, $5,000; Home for Children and Aged Women, $5,000; Northwestern Hospital for Women and Children, $10,000; New Hampshire Centennial Home for the Aged, $5,000. The will also requests that the widow shall bequeath $20,000 to Pillsbury Academy as a Margaret Pillsbury Fund, the income from half to go to the aid of worthy men and women, from $5,000 for prizes and from $5,000 for the support of the library. She is also requested to bequeath $5,000 to the Hospital Association of Concord, N. H.—Zion's Advocate.

About 2,500 delegates attended the World's Sunday-school Convention, held in London. They represented 24,000 Sunday-schools, 2,500,000 teachers and 25,000,000 scholars. The tone of the meetings was spiritual and evangelistic. Tender allusions were made to the missing four who went down on the lost Bourgogne. The American flag was generously in evidence, and rousing applause greeted every allusion to America. A reception and lunch was tendered by the British Bible Society. The delegates were also received by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress of London. Among the most interesting addresses were those of welcome by the Marquis of Northampton, by Mr. Edward Towers, for the churches of Great Britain and Ireland, and by Rev. John Clifford, D. D., for the churches of England and Wales. Rev. Dr. Spalding, of Massachusetts, responded for the United States, and Hon. S. H. Blake for Canada. Many countries were represented. Bishop Thoburn, of India, spoke of 5,538 schools with over 257,000 teachers and pupils in India. Dr. Joseph Parker, of London, preached a great sermon to a packed audience on "Subdue It." The chief inspiration given by the many notable speakers and remarkable addresses was that of the value and potency of Sunday-school work.—The Union Signal.

In speaking of language as a medium of divine revelation, The Advance speaks thus eloquently upon the influence of the Divine Mind upon human speech:

We should rejoice that God in his infinite condescension has consented to domesticate himself with man; that he has humbled himself to use human language and to act down towards man that he might bring man up towards himself. He emptied himself of his divine reputation, his flawless perfection, for our sakes, and gave occasion for critics and philosophers to flout at him because he is the God of the populace, using plain, homespun modes of expression and terms which are obnoxious to their philosophy. But in spite of the limitations which God took on himself when he made known his will through the imperfect medium of human language, what wonderful services the Bible has performed for the enrichment of language! It is hardly too much to say that it has re-made every language into which it has come speaking the thoughts of God. It has refined and spiritualized rude languages; has enlarged small words to contain great meanings; has lifted pauper words from the dust and made them princely; has given many languages literary form which before its advent spoke illiterately from uneducated lips; has shaped and enriched the noblest literary productions of the world; has made known God's will in ways which men can understand, exhibited his character in such ways that they can worship him, and in ten thousand different ways has instructed, encouraged and elevated the human race.

Our Budget.

—Church Extension is a personal duty.

—Chattanooga is prepering for the General Convention.

—The Missouri State Board is in a stress for funds; see Hoffmann's and Abbott's articles.

—A wave of torrid weather has prevailed here for the past three days.

—Religious and relief work among soldiers should not be discontinued because peace has been declared.

—The fallen heroes, whether from Cuban or Spanish bullets, will not be forgotten in America.

—We have a letter, care of this office, for Seimaro Kubota. Will this person please tell us where to send the letter or call in person for it?

—I. J. Cahill, of Dayton, Ohio, says that the article on "Spiritism" by W. J. Lhamon, which recently appeared in our columns, ought to be put in tract form.

—The printed official report of the 17th International Christian Endeavor Convention, held at Nashville, Tenn., in July makes a book of almost 250 pages. It is closely printed, but well illustrated with numerous full-page cuts. The leading addresses and sermons of the convention appear in full and make it a volume of more than statistical value. It is a book of spiritual energy.

—An association known as the "American Boy Association" has been organized for the purpose of raising funds to build a battleship to replace the ill-fated Maine. This plan, it is said, originated in the mind of W. Rankin Good, a pupil of the High School of Cincinnati, Ohio, and has been approved by Secretary Alger, Gen. Lee and various senators and governors. Branch offices are being formed in the larger cities to push the movement. This will doubtless prove a good thing for the arousing of patriotism in young America.

—Pope Leo's love-letter to the people of Scotland is somewhat lengthy and full of gentle reminders, but withal a strong appeal for their return to the Catholic fold. Due allowance is made for the wanderings of these people through ignorance, and the hope entertained by the Pope that they will yet see their errors and accept the papal oversight of former centuries, which thing, we fear, the Scot's will hardly do. Rome's wayward children are hard to reclaim.

—S. K. Hallam believes that Sister Moyer's Text Stories appearing in our columns should be put into a book. He thus speaks of their merit: "I consider her last two, 'Christian Love' and 'An Helpmeet,' possessed of merit of a high order. I think they are worthy of being put in a more permanent form." Another writer says: "I believe the appearance of these stories in a neat little volume would be timely and successful. I write this from convictions that were formed by experience as state evangelist for the Sunday-schools of Kentucky, believing that our children and young people need something of this kind to stimulate them to more religious reading.

—The life and vigor of the Pacific Christian seems to be unaffected by the Pacific summer, the California drouth, the close of the war, or the absence from his home of its editor, A. O. Garrison. His management from afar and the local editor, with the strong editorial force, are steadfastly maintaining its high plane and pushing it forward to greater usefulness with a zeal worthy of more abundant success.

—The Christian Standard appeared last week with additional pages and claims also to be the largest edition in its history. Much of the additional space, however, is devoted to the evidences of its growth and prosperity, all of which we are glad to note.

—If we look at God's people as a temple, Christ is the foundation; as a body, Christ is the head; as a kingdom, Christ is the king; as an olive tree, Christ is the root; as branches, Christ is the vine; as a sheepfold, Christ is the shepherd; as a moral universe, Christ is the center; as an intellectual empire, Christ is the sun (light of the world); as a family, Christ is an elder brother; as a fraternity, Christ is a friend; as an army, Christ is the captain of our salvation; as a pilgrim band, Christ is the star of hope; as a new creation, Christ is their redeemer.

—A letter from Frank Ainsley dated Whitneyville, Mich., August 7th, says: "What you said recently in your Macatawa Musings as to the practicability of city churches holding out-door evening services similar to those held at the beach I think would apply to the country as well. Suppose you suggest to some of your friends the idea of coming here and holding revival meetings this month. The ground is owned by Disciples and adjoining the ground is a hall. The lake is one and a half miles from McCord Station, which is fifteen miles from Grand Rapdis, on the D. G. R. & W. R. R." For further particulars address Bro. A. as above.

—The echo of the Briney and Throgmorton debate at Allen Springs, Ill., in the Baptist News, is not unpleasant to the ear nor opposed to the spirit of fairness and of Christ. We are pleased that the Baptist News can speak of us as a religious body without the use of the term "Campbellite." We hope other denominational papers will soon learn the better way.

—Remember that the National Convention recommended that the Church Extension Fund be raised to $250,000 by the close of the year 1900, and that in order to do this it will be necessary to raise $35,000 annually. The board says that it will raise $15,000 of this amount annually in the field, if the churches will raise the remaining $20,000 each year. This does not look like a difficult task, and yet if it is accomplished it will only be by the prompt, hearty and liberal offering made by each member in all the churches. Will you see to it that this is done?

—John Logan, evangelist, Gatesville, Tex., has published a tract in which he critically reviews the points at issue between what has come to be known in the South as the "progressive and the "anti" parts of the church. It is sad to realize that the occasion exists for such a tract; but being confronted with the conditions, we commend the tract. How any one can be an "anti" after reading this tract, we cannot imagine. It is written in good spirit, yet it is an energetic and effective treatment of the case, and we hope that it will be freely distributed wherever the "anti" malaria exists.

—George Darsie's sermon on Church Extension, now printed in tract form, is a clear and forceful presentation of the claims and benefits of this home missionary enterprise and deserves to be liberally distributed throughout the churches and carefully read. It is said that the author of this sermon raises annually $350 for Church Extension, hence the charge of not practicing what he preaches cannot be laid at his feet. George Darsie, of Frankfort, Ky., believes in Church Extension and is pleading manfully for its extension. We are glad the sermon has been tracted and trust that it will be freely used as a campaign document. We presume they can be had in any quantity by addressing G. W. Muckley, 600 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—We publish this week a short symposium on Church Extension, to which we invite your attention. The articles are written by some of our best missionary preachers and express not only their convictions on the benefits of Church Extension, but the manifest moral duty of every Disciple of Christ toward its support. The articles are short, well written, to the point and well worth careful reading. It is also the duty of the preachers to present the claims of Church Extension clearly to the churches and to give the reasons why it should be supported. The day for the offering for this branch of our mission work is at hand and we trust that there will be a liberal and hearty co-operation of all the churches in this grace.

—A correspondent says: "Thanks for the sample copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST you sent me, which I have used to good purpose. Some of them went far away, and one went to the University of Oxford, England, to my friend, Canon Cheney."

—We this week publish program of the Michigan conventions to be held at Sagamon, August 31st to September 4th, which see on last page.

—The commercial history of the fiscal year 1898, just issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, can be obtained free of cost by application to the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

—In the Independent, August 11, Dr. Munhall presents some strong practical reasons why the army canteen should be abolished. Let not those who have begun a good fight against this enemy of the soldier and our country relax their efforts now that the war is over. The system is an unholy, wicked, debilitating, expensive device and should be banished from the army. Let this war go on to a finish.

—Having examined a copy of the eighth annual catalogue of the Southern Christian Institute for 1898-'99, just to hand, we hasten to mention the indications of growing efficiency and future usefulness of this institute of education. A large working faculty and a practical course of instruction are announced for the coming session, beginning Sept. 27.

—An examination of a copy of the catalogue of the officers and students of Add-Ran University, Waco, Texas, for 1897-'98, with announcements for 1898-'99, is sufficient to convince any one of the strength and efficiency of the growing educational institution in the Southwest. The book is beautifully printed and handsomely illustrated with a number of full-page half-tone views, from, in, and of the University. A strong faculty is announced.

—One of the revelations of our war with Spain was the solidarity of the United States. Not a few of the Old-World nations expected that the United States would go to pieces in this war, but they were disappointed. Never did the provinces of any empire ever articulate more fully and harmoniously with its supreme head than did each state in the Union with its government. The old proverb, "In union there is strength," has received a new and striking demonstration of its truthfulness. The supremacy of American fellowship, workmanship and generalship are matters of no small surprise and concern tothe Old World.

—In speaking of the resignation of Dr. Whitsett on account of the objection which Southern Baptists have made to his statement that the Baptists of England did not immerse only in the early part of the seventeenth century, the Herald and Presbyter makes this singularly confusing statement: "We do not see that they make their argument for immersion any stronger by this. Certainly immersion can not be proved from the Bible, and failing there, the case is hopeless. The 'apostolic succession' of immersion also breaks down. Of course, if they wish to baptize in that manner they may do so, but they can not insist upon it with the authority of Scripture or of unbroken history behind them." If these words have any logical conclusion, it is that immersion is an unscriptural practice, an innovation. They can immerse if they wish, but cannot support the practice with Scripture. Now the facts are quite contrary to this statement. Sprinkling and pouring for Christian baptism are innovations. Of course people an do this if they wish, and call it baptism, ut the practice is without scriptural author- ty. A paper of the pretensions of the Herald nd Presbyter ought to be consistent, if not vith the Bible, at least with its own creed.

—God's program of the war of the United tates with Spain was so paramount that it as made the imperfections and mistakes of ome of the lesser lights more conspicuous and gly. All men are finite, and mistakes in ar cannot wholly be avoided. Greivous mis- akes were no doubt made by some of the high fficials of the army in the late war, but of hese none are better informed and perhaps one so keenly feel now as they who made hem. But the war is over, the desired esults and more obtained, and so what cannot ow be helped should be lovingly covered with he mantle of charity or profitably reserved for uture emergencies.

—A new effort is being made to do more re- gious work among seamen than they are ac- ustomed to see. A yacht capable of seating even hundred people is being built for their se. This yacht will be fully equipped for hold- ng religious services and will go from port to ort as time and utility may direct. The work s to be of an interdenominational character, nder the management of Geo. E. Benn, of Aurelius, Mich., who is also the president of he "Chapel Yacht Associations" organized or this special work. There seems to be a pecial fitness in the move to this particular lass of people who, because of their sea-rov- ng lives are usually overlooked in evangelistic nethods. Dr. Benn, the promoter of this en- erprise, bears high testimonials to his moral nd Christian character, and seems to be wholly bsorbed in the work and we hope that he will ot be disappointed in the amount of good vhich he hopes to accomplish.

—At a meeting of the national executive W. . T. U. Committee at Chicago, recently, it vas decided to abandon the effort to raise the noney necessary to pay out and own the W. . T. U. Temperance Temple, Chicago. The uilding of this temple by the W. C. T. U. egan eleven years ago as a monument to the ause espoused by this body in behalf of vomanhood, our homes and humanity, and it s to be regretted that they have failed in the nterprise. The building was completed, but eft with a heavy debt, which they have not ince been able to liquidate or carry. The omment of The Voice on the failure of the nterprise, however, is perhaps about the best iew to be taken of the matter after all. It ays:

Thus ends an enterprise on which a tremend- us amount of toil and sacrifice has been ex- pended. As a business enterprise, pure and imple, it never was a wise one. It was senti- nent that gave birth to it, and tho the senti- nent was a noble and exalting one, the scheme vas too big and has encountered too many bstacles—including a commercial panic and a var-scare—to admit of success. It has been n incubus to the union for years, and it must e a great relief to the general officers to feel hat the organization is at last relieved of the veight.

There will be diaappointment, but there is o disgrace attaching to anyone because of the natter. It was a noble effort, nobly made. We regret now that it was ever made; we re- gret that, having been made, it failed; but we lo not find it in our heart to censure anyone or their part in it. It was a mistake of the ead, not of the heart.

—In speaking of the celebration of "The Assumption of the Blessed Virgin," the Church Progress says:

This event, the Fourth Glorious Mystery of he Rosary, is attested by the consistent tradi- ion of the Universal Church, but there is some divergence regarding its details. It took place 24, 15 or 12 years, according to the vary- ng accounts, after our Lord's Ascension, and herefore when she was 72, 63 or 60 years of age (Holweck's Fasti Mariania, p. 170).

No wonder, in the face of such indefinite- ness, that Roman Catholic journals are com- plaining of great losses to their church in America.

—According to inquiries made by Carroll D. Wright, Labor Commissioner, Washington, D. C., more than half of the business men of the United States, in employing help, make a difference in favor of those not given to in- toxicating drinks. Out of seven thousand business men addressed 1,284 of them replied that they would not employ a man who drank either on or off duty. This is a practical and valuable test of the detriment of strong drink to laboring men and of the growth and worth of total abstinence and prohibition sentiments and principles. Now let all men who value their business, their manhood and their homes, vote accordingly.

—Now that the vail is lifted from the Philip- pine Islands, Cuba and Spain, and the civil, social, moral and religious conditions are found to be so deplorable as they are, the more respectable class of Roman Catholic journals in the United States have undertaken the very difficult task of irreconciling these conditions to Roman Catholic influence over these islands for centuries. To Protestants the conditions and the controlling influences are somewhat consistent; but for Roman Catholics to acknowledge this incriminates the Roman Catholic Church and discount its religion, so other causes have to be sought by Roman Catholic journals et al., to account for the present undesirable prevalent state of the people intellectually, morally and religi- ously, in these heretofore Roman Catholic countries. The Church Progress, of this city, in a recent number expressed the opinion that these things were due to European Freemason- ary. It says:

We, who are accustomed to the mild type of Freemasonary which prevails in America and England, cannot understand the virulence of European Masonary. European Masonary bears the same relation to infidelity that A. P. A.-ism bears to Protestantism. Its object is to crush out revealed religion, and the means used are political lodges, whose members alone are put into office. It is one of the mysteries of Latin politics that this should be true in France and in Italy as well as in Spain. But still this is true. These countries, inhabited by Catholics, are governed by infidels. Nothing is too sacred for these infidels to sneer at. The honor of men and the fame of women are by- words in their mouth. Their slanders against the clergy are worthy of the dirtiest preacher who ever preached for the beetle-browed. All these things have their bearing on the present condition of affairs in the Philippines. Colon- ies are notoriously more conservative than the mother countries. Up to some twenty years ago religion was respected by all classes in the Philippines. When the Angelus rang every one, young and old, gentle and simple, in the streets of Manila uncovered and publicly recited the prayer. The people were thorough- ly Catholic and the average of crime among them was, by the confession of European observers, extremely low. But a change has been wrought within the past twenty years. Spain began to send out infidels and Free- masons as officials to the colony. They began their campaign against religion and morality. To-day the results of that campaign are evi- dent. The Philippines are lost to Spain and Spain may thank her rulers.

This opinion is not worth much in the face of history, but it is well to see how others see things.

—Only those who have given special consid- eration to the subject are aware of the alarm- ing increase of secret societies during the past ten years. The total increase is estimated at 250,000. In 1897 the expenditures in benefit gifts and claims reached the sum of $640,000,- 000, while in transportation, fees, banquets, testimonials, regalia and convention expenses $250,000,000 more was spent. To these items the approximate sum of $12,000,000 was added for the rental of buildings and halls for lodge purposes, thus making a total of $941,000,000 expended in a single year by the secret societies of the United States. If we compare the last- named large sum with the amount raised annu- ally for missions, $10,000,000, the question in- voluntarily presents itself: "What will the outcome be? Will the manifold and diversified secret orders finally crowd out the churches, even as they are now sapping their vitality?" These are questions of no ordinary significance.

The above paragraph is from The Gospel Messenger. We do not know that the figures are correct, but there is no doubt but that lodges are costly institutions and that large sums of money are annually invested in them. The Gospel Messenger, of course, takes the dark view of these facts and figures. We are cer- tain that there are more or less encroachments upon church funds by lodges, but we do not think that they are to be denominated the ene- my of Christianity and humanity. Think of the $640,000,000 paid out in benefit claims. Think also of how the growth of lodges indi- cates the want of the fraternal spirit among men, and of its growth in the world. Then think once more of the argument in these facts and figures in favor of the grow- ing doctrine of the brotherhood of man. If the churches have been delinquent in their duties along the lines of lodge work they must blame themselves and not the lodges. The truth will come to the surface somehow. The lodges are not above criticism, but this does not jus- tify the churches for shortsightedness and de- linquencies.

—Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage recently closed a sermon in Washington, D. C., on "Alleviations of War," with the following words:

Yet what the world most wants is Christ, who is coming to take possession of all hearts, all homes, all nations; but the world blocks the the wheels of his chariot. I would like to see this century, which is now almost wound up, find its peroration in some mighty overthrow of tyrannies and a mighty building up of lib- erty and justice. Almost all of the centuries have ended with some stupendous event that transformed nations and changed the map of the world. It was so at the close of the four- teenth century; it was so at the close of the fifteenth century; it was so at the close of the sixteenth century; it was so at the close of the seventeenth century; it was so at the close of the eighteenth century. May it be more glori- ously so at the close of the nineteenth century! "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from ever- lasting to everlasting, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory." Amen and amen!

—In an article in Pall Mall for September, about "Mark Twain," the writer strikingly portrays the man by alluding to the difference between the man who studies to be "funny" and the man who studies to be serious. In one instance the "fun" is ground out for the occa- sion; in the other it is an ever-flowing well. We wonder how many preachers there are of the machine class who grind out sermons for the occasion. The true preacher is the one from whom the words of salvation flow as the crystal water from the unfailing spring. Affectation is, of all places, least excusable in the pulpit.

—We are thankful to the Christian Messen- ger, Toronto, for the following words of appre- ciation and good cheer:

For several weeks the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, of St. Louis, has come to hand in its new dress. The paper is now a thirty-two page journal of magazine form, somewhat after the style of the Toronto Westminster, but as to contents we think much superior. The series of illus- trations appearing on the first page, including already portraits of Gladstone and American military and naval heroes, adds to the appear- ance and interest of the paper. The articles are vigorous, refreshing and helpful. The type is clear and the paper of about the same quality as that of the Messenger. The CHRIS- TIAN-EVANGELIST stands in the very front rank of our exchanges.

The Christian Messenger is a live vigorous journal ably advocating primitive Christianity, across our natioral northern border, and wortho of abounding success for which it has our hopes and prayers.

—There may be some moral effect from the sight of a church paper in the home, but far better results would obtain if these papers were more considerately read. Too many find time only to "scan" the paper; that is, to read the personals and the locals. Some even do not take the time to do this. A church paper cannot do the good that it would unless it is reasonably well read. We fear that some families take a church paper for consicence' rather than for the soul's sake. This ought not to be. If the church paper you take does not pay the time and cost of taking and read- ing it, change it for one that does. A good church paper is a good investment and ought not to be neglected; not even its reading.

—The Evangelist, edited by W. J. Russell, Kalamazoo, Mich., has now become the Michigan Evangelist, edited by Alex. McMillan, Ann Arbor, Mich. Alex. McMillan is the state secretary and will use the paper in the interests of the mission work and churches of the state more particularly. The paper has lost none of its many excellent qualities in the transfer from editor to editor and place to place named.

—A glance at the table of contents of this paper will certainly whet the appetite for reading. Passing over the editorials, which we are persuaded are timely, suggestive, and interesting, we are sure the reader will enjoy the vigorously written articles in our contributor's department, of which we would especially commend Prof. Peckham's article on the Old Testament Prophets. Our correspondents also, as usual, have something to say, and say it in such an interesting way that their department in no way lags from any cause, and will be enjoyed by our readers. The other departments are full, covering a wide range of territory, persons and interests, and fill out what we are sure our readers will call "a good number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST."

L. J. Marshall has closed his work with the Keytesville church. He preached for them two Sundays per month for six months. There were 20 persons added to the church during that time. The Bible-school, he says, is doing well under the direction of B. H. Smith, superintendent. Bro. Marshall goes to Palmyra, Mo.

Word from T. A. Abbott this week says that his wife is no better of her sickness, and that the physician has no word of cheer for him concerning the result. This news we deeply regret hearing, and the more deeply grows our sympathy for Bro. Abbott.

W. T. Stephensen, pastor of the church at Sutherland, Ia., publishes the smallest weekly church paper, in size, that we have yet seen—about three inches square, with eight pages—but by no means barren in news, thought and religious food. It indeed contains much in small space.

J. V. Coombs, who has had charge of the evangelistic forces of Indiana for a year, now resigns that work for the general field. He states that during the year there have been 2,300 accessions to the churches of Indiana, and about $4,000 raised for evangelists.

W. L. Luck closed his work at Lafayette, Ind., July 31st. He has been there over three years, during which time there have been 350 additions. The church house also has been remodeled and improved.

A. G. Aderman, of Bethany, Mo., has accepted a call to the chair of Commercial Science, Central Christian College, Albany, Mo.

The Christian Tribune, Baltimore, this week contains the following interesting item of news: "Dr. C. A. Young, of Chicago, has been tendered the presidency of Bethany College. His wide experience in university work and his successful service in the Bible chairs eminently fit him for this important post. If he be given absolute control of the college affairs, it will mean new life for old Bethany. We hope that Dr. Young will accept."

After sixty-eight years, Harrison Jones, of Alliance, O., recently visited the church at North Royalton, O. This church was organized in 1829 and the next year Bro. Jones, then but eighteen years old, became its pastor. His visit was the occasion of many touching, pleasant and hallowed memories. J. B. Watson is the pastor of the North Royalton church who, with his congregation, extended a royal welcome to this aged veteran of the cross. Bro. Jones was chaplain of President Garfield's regiment in the civil war.

J. W. Coggins, of Benton City, Mo., paid his respects to this office while in the city last Monday. Bro. Coggins preaches for the Unity, Martinsburg and Forestell churches. He was recently assisted in a meeting at Martinsburg by his brother, J. C., which added twelve persons to its membership. These brothers in the flesh and in the Lord will hold a meeting at Forestell in October.

On last Monday we had the pleasure of a call at this office from Dr. R. M. Sargent, a well-known Congregational minister, and long resident of this city. Dr. Sargent's son, Dr. C. S. Sargent, is the pastor of the Central Congregational Church, of this city. These two ministers have very kindly feelings toward the Disciples of Christ and their greetings in presence or by word are always occasions of pleasure to us.

The Christian Index, Aug. 17th, says: "N. A. McConnell preached at Marshalltown, Aug. 14th." We are glad to hear from this veteran in the Lord's army again.

S. S. McGill, who has been preaching for the church in Lebanon temporarily for the past few months, has closed his labors there and returned to his home at Smithville, Mo. On account of financial matters the church was not able to secure him permanently. T. B. Burley, of Lebanon, Mo., says: "Any church in need of a preacher will find in Bro. McGill an earnest, thoughtful, energetic preacher of the gospel. He knows what Christianity is and is not afraid to proclaim it."

Both the official board of the First Christian Church of Sedalia, Mo., and the Board of Trade of that city have passed resolutions of appreciation of the ability and labors of J. S. Myers, for eight years the pastor of that church and citizen of that city. The resolutions commend him highly for his work's sake and good generalship, and will be held by Bro. Meyers as a valued expression of their good will toward him and of the high esteem in which he was held by both church and city of Sedalia.

The Kansas City, Osceola and Southern Railway, extending from Kansas City, Mo., to Bolivar, Mo., will, on and after Sept. 1st, 1898, be operated as a part of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad System. Transportation issued by the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad will, unless otherwise limited, be honored over the Kansas City, Osceola and Southern Railway. A copy of either of the following publications will be mailed free to those who ask: "Eureka Springs," "Feathers and Fins on the Frisco," "Missouri and Arkansas Farmer and Fruitman." Please address B. L. Winchell, General Passenger Agent Frisco Line, St. Louis, Mo.

G. L. Applegate, of Wakefield, Neb., has resigned his work there to take place Oct. 1st. His work the past year has involved a travel of over 8,000 miles, going to Craig every other Sunday with one exception, with horse and carriage, and preaching five times each trip. He had 35 additions there during the year and three at Craig. He preached about 225 discourses during the year, held protracted meetings at each place of over three weeks each, and leaves the church at Wakefield about 100 strong. He will devote his time to evangelistic work for a time.

"Our eldest child had scrofula trouble ever since he was two years old and the doctors pronounced it very serious. His face became a mass of sores. To the surprise of the church and people of Perry, O. T., the pastor, C. H. Hilton, has resigned that he might accept the work of the ministry for the church at Lanard, Kas. Of his work at Perry the Perry Enterprise Times says: "Rev. Hilton has been pastor of the church here for the past two years, and being an untiring worker in the vineyard has succeeded in building up a large and flourishing congregation and the citizens by his every-day walk and his earnest efforts for the betterment of mankind in general and Perry in particular, and it is with feeling of sincere regret that we shall bid him farewell." Correspondence in regard to the work at Perry should be addressed to Hon. Dick T. Morgan, of that city.

Geo. C. Myers, of Albany, Ore., sends us the following note:

"To-day was a great day for the Church of Christ at this place, on account of what has transpired in our midst. Bro. Lane, who has been pastor of the C. P. Church here, preached in the Christian church this morning. His text was, 'But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men' (Matt. 15:9). He started with the nailing of these on the door at Wittenberg and followed the reformatory work forward, showing the reason of the multiplication of denominationalism in about the brightest, if not the best manner that the writer ever heard. He closes with an invitation to all who would to present themselves for membesship, saying that he wanted the church to consider himself as an applicant, and that he intended henceforth to preach the gospel where he could do so without first fitting it to an ecclesiastical gauge. He expects to subscribe for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST."

VI.

The reading of "Lorna Doone" is the best preparation for enjoying and appreciating the ride from Lynmouth to Porlock, along the northern border of the wild and barren Exmoor Forest. In this novel, Blackmore has interpreted the scenery of this wild, desolate, but peculiarly attractive part of North Devon, as Wordsworth has interpreted the Lake District. Starting from Lynmouth, the wheelman must turn pedestrian and mountaineer for a time and push his wheel up a two-mile hill where riding is out of the question. Thence, by a series of ups and downs, the road follows the ridge of high hills along the coast, with Bristol Channel and a distant view of South Wales on the left and the broad expanse of Exmoor on the right. The valley of the Doones is soon seen, but it does not accurately get the description in the novel. The little church of Oare, where John Ridd was warden, and Plover Barrows' farm are, however, real and true enough to satisfy any reader of Lorna Doone. John Ridd in his time testified with pride that the roads in that locality had been so improved that a rider need not entirely sink if it be broad daylight, provided he be quite sober. A decent degree of sobriety is still desirable in any traveler among these hills, but mud and bogs have been banished from the highway. The descent of Porlock Hill, a drop of thirteen hundred feet in a mile and a half, may be considered as the end of this mountainous section.

There is plenty of interest but little excitement to be derived from the ride through Glastonbury, Wells and Bath, to Bristol. Each is a typical place of its kind and worthy of more study than any of them could receive in the course of a bicycle tour. One of the most interesting sights in Bristol, to one who cares anything about ecclesiastical architecture, is the church of St. Mary Redcliffe, a parish church of perfect symmetry and elaborate detail, built upon the lines of a cathedral. It was after hours when I reached it, but the old verger was easily found and he readily consented to show a small party of us through. Interesting as the church was, the old verger was rather more so. The pride of his heart was that ancient church, and all his thought and conversation were colored by admiration for the works and workmen of the thirteenth century and contempt for all modern methods. The old days were the days of thoroughness; these are the days of quick, cheap and shoddy products. People who did their work in the old-fashioned, solid way did not need not bicycles (with contemptuous emphasis) to give them exercise. Presently we come to a corner where the empty stone sarcophagus of some thirteenth-century bishop was lying, with its great stone lid beside it. "There now," said the verger, "that's a coffin to last awhile. They don't make 'em like that now. Just note the size of it, too. Big men in those days. You'd have to look for awhile nowadays to find a man to fill it." To the dismay of the verger, I proceeded to crawl down into the sarcophagus, and to his further dismay, filled it from end to end and from side to side. The fact is, that a stone coffin is not nearly so large as it looks. "That's a Yankee trick," said the verger, "aren't you from the States?" Thereupon he led us away hastily to the other end of the church to inspect a beautiful reredos before the light failed.

At Bristol one is less than fifteen miles from Chepstow, where the trip up the valley of the Wye begins, but the Severn flows between and there is no way of getting across except by taking train and going through the tunnel under the river. The only alternative is to make a sixty-five mile ride around it by way of Gloucester. Having conscientious scruples against taking a train when on a bicycle trip, except in case of emergency, I chose the latter course. My companion, who is less sensitive about such matters, chose the train and we met the next afternoon at Hereford. The valley of the Wye is starred in the guidebooks and described as "one of the loveliest pieces of river scenery in Europe," but this expression is too commonplace to be accurately descriptive. It is not wild, rugged or overwhelming. Except at one or two points, notably at Wyndcliff, it could scarcely even be called grand. "Pretty" is too shallow and insignificant a word to use, and "magnificent" is to large. Riding up from Chepstow to Tintern at the time of day when afternoon was passing into evening, the valley of the Wye seemed to me the most peaceful spot I had ever seen—a spot where weariness and haste and feverish unrest could not exist, a spot where the cynic would regain his faith in man, the atheist his faith in God, a spot where all the problems of life seemed a little easier of solution. One is already under the spell of this scene when, rounding a curve, the beautiful ruin of Tintern Abbey comes into view, lying far below in a meadow in a bend of the river, and then the scene is complete.

The next day it rained. The Wye is a slender stream at best. Its volume would not entitle it to be called more than a creek in our country, and as I rode ten miles in the rain next morning to get into Monmouth, catching an occasional glimpse of the diminutive stream which was almost lost in the haste, it seemed (probably erroneously) that it would have taken several Wyes to make up the stream which coursed freely down the back of my neck. At least there was more water in the air than in the river just then. At this point perhaps a word ought to be said in regard to English weather. It is now six weeks since we started from Liverpool. In that time we have been inconvenienced by rain only three times. Twice we rode on through the rain and once we stopped for half a day in a place where stopping was no loss of time. There have been other occasional showers, but not of a sort to impede progress or mar the pleasure of the trip. This seems to me to be a good average to be maintained for six weeks by a country with England's reputation for rain, and grateful acknowledgment is hereby made.

It was at the close of that same rainy day, after we had ridden a good many miles through rain and a good many more through mud, and had spent the rest of the day pushing our wheels against a heavy head wind, that darkness came upon us and found us out of reach of any village. Just as the supper and bed problem was beginning to look rather dark, there appeared two wayside inns, one on either side of the road, the "Crown Inn" and the "Green Dragon." Choosing the latter, we applied for admission and were soon happy before a good supper. Somewhat later in the evening I chanced to pick up a book of stories by Beatrice Harraden, the first of which was her well-known "At the Green Dragon." The identity of the name with that of our inn seemed a singular coincidence, but nothing marvelous, for "Green Dragon," "Red Lion," "White Horse," and such are favorite names for inns. But it did seem strange when on the very first page mention was made of a Crown Inn just across the road from the Green Dragon in the story. When a little further on, Shopshire was mentioned as the county and Shrewsbury as a neighboring town, it was plainly time to make inquiries. Inquiry revealed the fact that this was the scene of the story and that the author had stopped here while writing it three years ago. I can add my testimony to that of Beatrice Harraden that the Green Dragon is a goodly inn and well worthy of being taken as the type of Ehglish inns.

Shrewsbury is a venerable place full of houses three or four centuries old, timbered structures with upper stories projecting over the sidewalk. There are inns and public houses at every corner, at any one of which one might easily expect to see the doughty Sir John Falstaff sitting before a measure of sack and discoursing of his adventures. Leaving Shrewsbury, the hills of Wales are soon in sight, and after skirting them for some miles and crossing the Welsh border of Chirk we plunge into the hill-country at Llangollen, following the valley of the river Dee. The road, with the surface of a boulevard, is a splendid piece of engineering, winding by easy gradients up and down hills, a stone wall and a valley on one side and a steep hillside on the other. As we advance the hills grow bolder. It is again twilight (all of our best views have come at that time) and at last the triple peaks of Snowdon are seen twenty miles to the west with the evening star above them still faint in the light of the setting sun. Next day we abandoned our wheels long enough to make the ascent of Snowdon. It would have been a pleasure, of course, to take the wheels along, but one can't expect to ride up a fire-escape, even on a Sterling. The ascent is a very easy one, as mountain climbing goes. It means about nine miles of walking, scrambling and climbing, but there is a path to follow all the way, and no single point of it could be called difficult. There have been several fatal accidents to climbers of this peak, but in every case they have resulted from attempts to reach the summit by going straight up the precipices or in some other strange and unusual way. The view from the top of Snowdon—what need to describe it? It is the highest mountain in a land of mountains. Nearly the whole of North Wales with its ridges, peaks and lakes, St. George's Channel, the Coast of Ireland and the Isle of Man are spread before us like a map.

We could not wait to see the sunset from Snowdon, for the descent must be made and several miles of traveling done before dark. It is thirteen miles of down grade and smooth road from the foot of Snowdon to Carnarvon by the sea—just the sort of road on which to race with the setting sun. The moon was rising over Snowdon now as we turned our backs upon her and sped away down the pass. English laws strictly demand that bicycle-lamps shall be lit at one hour after sunset and the law is enforced to the minute in the city and country alike. The time was up and we were still a couple of miles out of Carnarvon when, in passing through a village, we ran full into the arms of a uniformed policeman. There was nothing to do but to jump off and anxiously inquire the time and ask how many minutes we had left to ride. It was no surprise to learn that we had already overdrawn, but the genial "bobbie" was not above being beguiled. "I'll give you permission to ride on," he said, "and if anybody stops you, tell him that Mogan, number forty-seven, says it's all right." Happily we were not called upon to use the talismanic words, "Mogan, 47," but it is evidence of the virtue of the English police that the permission did not cost us a penny.

The day's ride from Carnarvon at the northwest corner to Hawarden at the northeast corner of Wales showed us more of the people of Wales and less of its scenery. The people tell us that it is a mistake to suppose that the Welsh language is dying out. The children learn English in the schools and English is the language of the courts, but Welsh is the language of the home, the street and the market. It would perhaps not be right to close these paragraphs on Wales without casting the expected fling at Welsh names and the generally unpronounceable character of the words of that tongue. To the ordinary traveler these names, with their ominous appearance and worse sound, are merely the subject of a passing jest. To the cyclist who must occasionally inquire his way, they present a serious problem. For example, what is a man to do when he wants to know the way to opposite Bangor on the strait of Menai of which the full name is Llanfairpwllgw yngyllgogerychw yrndrobwllll-andysiliogogogoch! They call this place Llanfair P. G. for short, but I did not know that at first. The best scheme I have yet developed for use in such a case is to find on a map the first town within easy name immediately beyond the one desired and ask to be directed to it, trusting to luck that the route will take you through the desired point. After a day of this sort of thing, just as we are on the point of emerging from Wales into Cheshire, we stop for the night at Hawarden, a name long familiar as the home of Gladstone. But of this more anon. W. E. G.

New York Letter.

As suggested in our last letter we are summering this season at the famous Sing Sing Camp Grounds on the Hudson, some thirty miles from New York. Certain of our flock have rested here for a few summers past and through them we were persuaded to secure a tent. We did so, and are greatly enjoying the novel experience. The Camp Grounds are owned by the Methodist brethren of New York and here they have conducted "revival services" every summer for sixty-seven years. "The Camp" of the present season opened on August the 4th and continued ten days and was a revelation in the manner of methods and sustained joy. Some of the sermons were excellent, the singing was as a rule inspiring and soulful, the large choir at the main services at "the Circle" being accompanied by a cornet and piano. At the close of each preaching service "seekers" were called to the mourner's bench "in the straw," where many brethren and sisters would kneel and fervently pray for their conversion. The excitement and noisy shouting at times would lead to most any state of mind before it would make one turn to Christ in the full assurance of faith. The love-feasts held at the Circle each Sunday morning were seasons abounding in joy in the Lord to hundreds of the old campers, who in relating their Christian experience would usually tell the day and hour, and sometimes the very minute of their couversion to Christ. Among the leaders of the camp services are many who profess to be subjects of the "second blessing" —"a second distinct and definite work of grace"—as they term it. Some of them even claim for themselves sinless purity. This seems to differ somewhat from Paul who found that when he would do good evil was present with him; and from John who declares if any man says he has no sin he is a liar and the truth is not in him. But that these good brethren are sincere is quite evident, though they are in grievous error.

The religious enthusiasm was such that at times four or five services were in progress at the same time in different places. The last was high day in the camp, about 7,000 people being in attendance from all parts of the surrounding country and from New York City. It was my privilege to preach one sermon and conduct several Bible readings. The latter services, I think, were very much appreciated in view of the fact that the Bible was brought into use so seldom in the other meetings; it was rarely read, quoted or even referred to; the brethren and sisters usually confined themselves to their experience. The number of professed conversions was very small.

On one side of the camp grounds the Swedish Methodists held services in a large tent in their own language. Though we could understand but few words they uttered, their happy faces, abounding joy and evident sincerity were pleasing to all Americans who attended their services. The closing up of the camp is always interesting, when the Swedes form a procession and "march around Zion," singing hymns. The American brethren receive them with enthusiasm at the Circle, where all join together in singing, shaking hands and shouting for joy. Among the most inspiring discourses were those of Dr. Cadman, of the Methodist Metropolitan Temple, Dr. Crouch, of Beekman Hill Church, Dr. Rowe, of Purdy's Station, and Dr. Johnson, of Brooklyn. The Rev. Thomas Harrison, "the boy preacher," was present through most of the Camp, and conducted most of the after-services. He overflows with eccentric enthusiasm.

"Children's Day" and "Old Folks' Day" are always special on the programme. Many old people have been coming here for years—one sister stated that she had not missed the annual camp for fifty-four years. And the Rev. A. C. Morehouse, superintendent of the services, has been actively engaged in this work for more than fifty years. The fathers and grandfathers of many of those who now worship here in other generations sang hymns of praise and worshiped God in this leafy temple. It is to them a sacred spot.

Immediately following this issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the New York Christian Missionary Convention and Ministerial Association will convene with the 169th St. Church, New York City. Again we welcome all delegates and ask that those expecting to attend send us their names at once. We hope all will come early and stay through the sessions until Friday night, when the convention closes. We expect a goodly representation from most all the churches in the state, and the talent on the program assures a continuous feast of good things.

It is understood that Dr. John Hall, of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, will retire next year on the completion of fifty years' ministry in the Presbyterian Church. Just now he is in Europe on his vacation, and his pulpit is supplied by probable candidates for the Fifth Avenue Church. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, of Philadelphia, Dr. McKilrick, of Buffalo, and Dr. G. C. Morgan, of London, England, have supplied the pulpit, and Dr. McGregor is booked for next Lord's day. Dr. Morgan drew an immense audience last Lord's day to hear him; he made, it is reported, a most favorable impression on the congregation. It is a church with sufficient money power to attract most any minister in America, or Europe, if that were all that is necessary. The congregation usually assembled in the Fifth Ave. Church on Lord's day morning represents more than $400,000,000. The pastorate of this church entails great responsibilities also, because of its financial and social influence.

Mr. Russell, Sage one of the multimillionaires of Wall St., has just passed his 82nd birthday. His wealth is estimated at $75,000,000 and he works just as hard now as he did at 23. A reporter called on him on his birthday and said to him: "Tell the young men, Mr. Sage, how to keep young fourscore years." His reply in brief was:

"I do not use tobacco."

"I am temperate in the use of stimulants."

"I eat good, plain food and no late suppers."

"I keep regular hours and work."

"I never felt better in my life than I do today, and I hope to live to see many more birthday anniversaries."

He works now with as much regularity and enthusiasm as he did when he began to build his fortune. These expressions are good advice to thousands of young men all over this country And I hope that many may read and consider them. S. T. WILLIS.

The Chicago Letter.

Nothing has been more gratifying to all true lovers of "the land of the free and the home of the brave" than the cordial and sympathetic relations between the "South" and the "North," which the war with Spain has fostered and developed. In keeping with this gratifying sense of growing unity, this letter will give a resume of several weeks of hard but most enjoyable and profitable work outside of Chicago, and chiefly in the "Old Dominion." I say "hard" work, for although many of the lectures and addresses I delivered had been thoroughly prepared beforehand, still speaking three full hours each day and traveling most of the time at night, in the month of August, can hardly be designated easy work, however "enjoyable" it may be. And I say "profitable" work, (1) because I have no reason to doubt the sincerity of the C. W. B. M. members and the twoscore or more of earnest, hard-working, God-fearing preachers and the much larger number of intelligent Christian workers, who by their constant attention and kind words assured me of the helpfulness of the missionary addresses and the Bible lectures I gave; and (2) because, not only were my traveling expenses paid, besides an average of three dollars for each lecture and address I delivered, but sufficient interest was manifested in the University of Virginia Bible Lectureship to warrant the public statement that I confidently hope to see such a Lectureship, with the loved and lamented John B. Cary as its founder, established. All person interested in this noble enterprise should write Miss Ellen Kent, State President of C. W. B. M., Louisa, Va., or Mrs. Lizzie Daniel, Richmond, Va., who has consented to serve on the endownment committee.

Before going to Virginia I spent a most delightful Lord's day at Macatawa Park, where Mrs. Young, Helen and myself were guests in the home of Bro. and Sister Garrison. Arthur, who is an expert fisherman, had a plentiful supply of fine white bass and toothsome croppy on hand, which Sister Garrison cooked and served to suit any epicure. It was a brief day, but will be cherished and often lived over in memory.

"In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life," we often grow heart-hungry for the society and sympathy of true and tried friends. Then a day of quiet joy in the society of those we love is rest, sweet rest. But in addition to such deep soul-satisfaction as flows from the companionship of the friends of "auld lang syne," a day at Edgewood-on-the-Lake, lifts one heavenward and Godward. With Wordsworth we feel that heaven lies all about us, not only in our infancy, but also in the stress and struggle of life. The calm lake before you—now green, now amethyst, now every color of the rainbow blended; the blue sky above you —floating the fleecy clouds shot through with the rays of unraveled light; the tall pines on the steep slopes, and the delicate ferns in shady ravines back of you—these and many other beauties of nature make one exclaim with the poet:

"Earth is crammed with heaven,
And every common bush is aflame with God."

Leaving Macatawa at four o'clock we reached Chicago at eleven. As the "Soo City" steamed through the government pier into the open lake, bathed in glorious sunlight, I thought of "the sea of glass mingled with fire." The coloring of the calm still expanse of water was a delightful study for my wife who has an artist's eye. As the westering sun sank lower and lower it threw an ever-expanding bar of golden light across the lake eastward, and the great ball of fire had no sooner been lost in the bosom of the lake than the queen of the night began to throw a silver bar of borrowed light from the eastern horizon westward. Such is life—meeting, parting, journeying homeward. Gentle reader, let us strive to so live that with Tennyson we may truthfully sing:

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea,
For tho' from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

On my way to the "Old Dominion" I stopped off one day at Indianapolis. At the C. W. B. M. headquarters I found Miss White working away at her post, notwithstanding the fact that she had been suffering for two days with a fever. The other workers, except Mrs. Ford, who was taking a much-needed rest at home, were busy at their respective desks. In company with Mrs. Helen E. Moses, our Bible Chair Secretary, I visited the home of Sister O. A. Burgess, who, I take pleasure in reporting, is gradually gaining strength. We hope to have her visit us in Chicago before we return to Virginia. Constrained by the love of Christ, the C. W. B. M. has been not only attempting, but doing great things for God and humanity. Notwithstanding the financial stringency of the past few years this noble board of heroic women has constantly heeded the Master's great commission. Undaunted by an overdrawn treasury they are steadily following the lead of their president whose watchward is "Forward." Sister, brother, send a dollar to help the board go to the National Convention in October with a balanced bank account.

In Virginia I attended the Piedmont Assembly, at Gordonsville, the South Piedmont Convention at Martinsville, the Tidewater Convention at Mathews, and visited Danville and Richmond. The first meeting of the Piedmont Assembly was very successful. Such preaching brethren as Bernard Smith, of Charlottsville, Richard Bagby, of Louisa, Huston, Coffee and others, supported by such unselfish and Christlike business men as Brethren Walker, Norford, Bond and Davis, desreve great credit for their excellent management of the first Assembly. The program was creditable and the attendance fine. F. D. Power, W. H. Book, Peter Ainslee, P. A. Cave, I. J. Spencer, L. M. Omer, L. A. Cutler and many others preached soul-stirring sermons. W. J. Cocke and the writer conducted the Bible studies and the writer also gave several C. W. B. M. addresses. Dr. Charles W. Kent, of the University of Virginia, gave an admirable address on the founding of a Bible Lectureship at the University of Virginia. The C. W. B. M. session, which was the first open session ever held in the Piedmont district, was most excellent.

The South Piedmont Convention met in the Lester Tabernacle at Martinsville. After the convention the writer held a Bible Institute, giving studies both in the Old and New Testaments. The audiences were fine, both in quality and quantity. Despite the excessive heat the Tabernacle, which I was informed seats fifteen hundred people, was well filled at the night sessions. Mrs. Cowen and Mrs. Dillard, the ladies who took a life membership apiece to secure the Institute, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Brown, who entertained me royally, and Bro. H. C. Bowen, the efficient pastor of the Martinsville church and a score of faithful workers, contributed to the success of the Bible Institute. Mr. Saunders, the treasurer of Henry county and a member of the Methodist Church, contributed to the expense of the Institute and to the endowment fund of the University of Virginia Bible Lectureship fund. Several members of the Episcopal Church took a deep interest in the work.

Sunday night, August the 7th, I preached in Danville, Va. Bro. Hopwood, the faithful and efficient president of Milligan College, who had delivered an excellent address at the Martinsville convention, on "Christian Education," preached for the Danville brethren Sunday morning. The manly, godly, consecrated and sincere life of Pres. Hopwood is the explanation, in part at least, of the fact that Milligan College has turned out so many loyal-hearted, noble-minded men for the ministry, such as B. A. Abbott, W. H. Book, et al. After a day spent in Richmond, where A. R. Moore has been preaching during the summer, I proceeded to the Tidewater convention, stopping over night at Old Point Comfort. Here we saw a number of sick and wounded soldiers and three of the Spanish vessels, which had been captured. But this letter is already too long. I shall briefly mention the Tidewater convention and my trip home in my next letter. It is said that Cato ended all of his speeches before the Roman Senate with the words, "Delenda Est Carthago." Let me end this letter with the great thought of Col. Cary's last years: "The Atlantic Seaboard for the Christianity of Christ." C. A. YOUNG.

Iowa Letter.

Latitude is a factor in state mission work and general growth. Iowa has grown up in membership from 22,500 in 1890 to 57,000 in 1898. And her gifts for missions of all kinds from $9,000 to $20,000. One reason is that the churches and workers have been of one heart and one mind. Once or twice in twenty years division of sentiment has threatened, but never materialized. Why this splendid unity, this oneness of purpose? I answer, partly because the long way of our state is east and west, rather than north and south. In this we have the advantage of Illinois and Missouri. Iowa life is very nearly uniform. In the other states there are two or three kinds or strata. They lie across the westward sweeping tide of civilization; we lie parallel with it. Our geographical ontlines are our advantage.

Before speaking of our battleship Iowa, allow me to congratulate M. M. Davis and all Texas. The incident of thanksgiving and confesion of faith on board the Texas, July 3rd, is destined to become a monument in history. Pictures of Capt. John W. Philip and his ship lie before me. And the picture of his men with bared heads before God is a fit companion piece for Thomas Jones Barker's famous painting, "The Secret of England's Greatness." Winston Churchill, a graduate of the Naval Academy and a writer of matchless skill says: "The words of Captain Philip . . . have thrilled his countrymen and his race with a sacred feeling no writer can define."

On July 3rd, off Santiago, our four ships which, with the yacht Gloucester, destroyed the Spanish fleet, lay in the following order: Broklyn, Texas, Iowa and Oregon. The swift Oregon soon moved up next to the flagship, leaving the Texas and Iowa as partners in a very important part of the engagement. Cutters from the Iowa received part of the survivors of the Vizcaya. On board the Iowa Captain Eulate kissed and sadly surrendered his sword to Captain Robt. D. Evans. And tears welled up in his eyes when the American captain refused it and grasped his hand instead. The Spanish captain will never forget this nor the cheer given him by the American crew. During the action a shell exploded on her berth deck and set her on fire. Others penetrted her water line. One, especially, "found a bed in her armor without going off, a guest that caused some embarrasment when the fight was over." Her corn-pith armor, an ingenious American device, swelled at once and closed up the wounds along the water line and the fire division put out the fire. She has 140 rooms and cost over six millions of dollars and carries at least a million dollars' worth of ammunition and other stores. Richard Lee Fearn, Washington correspondent in the August Chautauquan, says: "The Iowa is to be considered the finest vessel belonging to us, and not only that, but is unsurpassed by any of the fighting ships of the world." During the administration of Governor F. M. Drake, the founder of Drake University, his daughter, an Iowa girl, christened this ship. And at the banquet which followed Gov. Drake turned his wineglass down.

Various denominations are crediting their remarkable growth in the past fifteen years largely to the introduction of the Y. P. S. C. E. movement. They support this claim by elaborate statistics. Whether right or wrong, the Endeavor movement is one of far-reaching importance. And none have more reason for cultivating it than the Disciples. The official state paper, the Iowa Christian Endeavor, is published in our town, Oskaloosa. Our representatives among the officers of the state union are a credit to any people. John B. "How Do I Look?"

How frequently a woman asks this question! How much thought and study she devotes to it! It is natural. A woman hates to think that she is growing day by day less charming and attractive and youthful to her husband's eyes than in the days of courtship.

A woman may always retain her charms and the vivacity and freshness of youth if she will take the proper care of her health. A tremendous percentage of ill-health in women is due to weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is an unfailing remedy for all disorders of this nature. It allays inflammation, heals ulceration, stops debilitating drains and soothes and tones the nerves. It preserves in a woman all the charm of healthy youth. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

"Favorite Prescription" is sold by all respectable dealers in medicines. Deal only where you are honestly treated. Any storekeeper who tries to give you a substitute for what you demand is not treating you honestly and you should take your trade elsewhere.

Have you recently read Matthew 19:16-26? The majority of people who do, feel somehow that Jesus renders a hard verdict upon the rich young ruler. And I confess that the commentaries seem to me to present Jesus in an unfavorable light. Now let us remember a few things clearly: The young man assumed the initiative. He came to the Master, not the Master to him. He was a perfectionist and had been for years. And we must not forget that he asked Jesus two questions, not one. And that it was the second question, not the first, which got him into trouble and broke down his dream of perfection. His trouble originated in his own condition—his heart, his intents, his purposes and vows, not in Jesus' words. His first question Jesus answered substantially as he answered the same question in Luke 10:25. And there it would have ended but for the second question pushed to the front. In substance it seems to be this: "I want to be perfect; measure me by the highest standard yuo have, and tell me, what lack I yet?" Measured by the apostles (v. 27) what other answer could Jesus give? He had to answer as he did. And in verse 24 makes entrance to the kingdom imposible to such a character. This also he had to do, for the young man had come to complete moral collapse, as complete, at least for a time, as that of Adam and Eve in the garden. His vows are broken, his conscience dethroned, and a known standard of God rejected. If he ever enters he must be born again and is not this the meaning of verse 26? His conscience one hour was a heaven, the next it was a hell. Jesus, urged by his questions, had gone to the bottom of his character. Did he not serve notice on the ruler in verse 16 that he would go deep? This verse, so troublesome to the commentators, seems clearly to say: "I do not use words below par, with me they must have their deepest meaning. None is good but God. In this whole interview I shall take your words and you mine with full depth of reality, no surface work between thee and me this day." Like most perfectionists he had lived honest but shallow. Now in his overconfident questioning and in spite of warning he brings to his own eyes his shallowness plus a violated conscience. And Jesus, instead of being hard (save as the realities of life were hard) makes his outlined task easier by a royal promise. "Thou shalt have treasure in heaven" (v. 21 with vv. 27, 28, 29).

Kansas City Letter.

Except its title, this letter will have little or nothing in it pertaining to Kansas City. Ye scribe has been absent from home for the past three weeks, enjoying his vacation beside the restless waters of Lake Michigan, at Macatawa Park, made famous by the pen of Bro. J. H. Garrison. This is becoming a notable summering-place for members of the Christian Church, more of whom are coming every year. Our preachers are discovering the rare opportunities afforded here for rest and recreation, and are returning year after year for their week or month of vacation, never failing to find physical, mental and spiritual refreshing for the year's hard service. At a recent delightful picnic of the Christian preachers and their wives, of which the "Macatawa Musings" will doubtless give an account, there were twenty-two of our preachers present, including a number whose names are household words among the Disciples of Christ. In the opinion of the writer, there is no equal to Macatawa Park as a resting-place for a tired body and brain, and the man is to be envied who is able to possess a cottage here, and occupy it every summer.

A letter received a few days ago from an elder of one of our Missouri churches affords occasion for renewed reference to the vital subject of our ministry and its relation to the churches. The letter makes inquiry as to the standing of a certain preacher whose career has been notorious for his gross immorality, brazen effrotery and unmitigated rascality in general. He had already been engaged to hold a meeting for the said church, but reports had come of his conduct elsewhere that made the elders pause and investigate before allowing him to begin. These brethren are to be commended for their wisdom. In too many instances such rumors are unheeded and the glib talker welcomed to the pulpit on the sole ground of his ability to entertain the public. But what are we to do to prevent such men from profaning the gospel ministry by their unholy lives, and using its sacred and confidential privileges, as they too often do, for the gratifying of their unhallowed lusts? We have so long been terrified at the bugbear of ecclesiasticism that we have utterly failed to provide any protection for our churches against the wolves that rend the flock. We sadly need some system of ministerial supply whereby every preacher shall be made directly responsible to his brethren, and by which his ministry shall be directed, sustained or suspended, as the interests of the kingdom of Christ may require. For one, I stand ready to enter at once into such a co-operation of the churches and ministers of any given district as will bind them together in mutual responsibility to and for one another. Only by some application of the principle of mutual responsibility can our cause be saved from the incalculable injury it now suffers at the hands of wicked men. The writer would be glad to hear from brethren who has thought upon these things, and to have our scribes treat of the question in our religious press. It is high time that we were doing something practical.

The time is at hand for the annual offering of our churches for Church Extension, the first Lord's day in September. Let our motto be, "A sermon from every preacher, an offering from every church, a contribution from every member." No higher, holier cause appeals to us to-day than that of aiding our scattered and feeble brethren to provide houses of worship for themselves and their neighbors. The calls are many and urgent. The possibilities for fruitful service are infinite. Let us give generous response to the appeal of our Lord.

The Bethany Reading Courses.

CHAS. B. NEWNAN.

One looking over the July Bulletin of this work we cannot but be struck by the uniformly favorable witness concerning it. And yet why should it not be so? The lines of study taken up contain the very things we need to know.

I. Know your book. This, of course, comes first. The plan of the Endeavor pledge provides for daily Bible reading. This will, however, prove of less service than it ought, unless wisely guided. To be an efficient workman one must know his book, but he cannot know it well by simple desultory reading. Something like system and definiteness must mark his study. Says, Munhall: "God has not ordained anything to the conviction and conversion of the world except his Word." A still wiser has called it the sword of the Spirit, and designated it the one aggressive weapon of Christian warfare. Must a soldier know how to handle a sword? Then you, Oh, young Christian, must handle aright this Divine Sword, if you would fight acceptably for the Master. This drill in the use of your sword, the "Guide to Bible Study" undertakes to give you.

II. Know your field. One to be an intelligent servant must know his field of operations. Particularly should he know of those great heathen fields where the vanguard of God's armies is winning wonderous victories for Christ our King. We follow with eager interest each new development of this Spanish-American war, and each new victory won or act of heroism performed receives quick and ample meed of praise. Shall we be content with less information concerning the progress of Christ's war? Shall his soldiers fight unwatched? Their heroism go unrewarded by our prompt praise? Nay, rather, if souls are worth more than bodies, if Heaven means more than earth, if eternity be longer than time, shall not our interests in these things which make for eternal peace be uppermost? The book upon Missionary Fields furnishes this information.

III. Know the forces. No man is rightly ready for work who does not know somewhat, at least, of the forces with which he is allied.

(a) Leaders. As brave and true, as loyal and faithful as any who ever lived, you will find the men who are the leaders of this Nineteenth Century Movement for the Restoration of Primitive Christianity. You cannot estimate this movement rightly unless you know these mem.

(b) That immense and constantly growing body that is now the visible fruit of this three-quarters of a century's work: this plain, practical, earnest, consecrated brotherhood, you certainly wish to know it and to rejoice in its fellowship. It is a study in religious statistics and in spiritual dynamics well worth while.

(c) Providential location. Is there any significance in location? Do you believe in Providence? Listen! God planned it so that this movement should begin on the Eastern edge of the great Mississippi Valley, fast coming to be the mightiest valley in the world. It has the broadest and most fertile fields, the longest rivers the most splendid variety and abundance of resource.

This nation is even now coming to be what Gladstone called it: "Head servant in the household of the world." This valley is coming to dominate the nation's life. This religious movement, we believe, is under God destined to dominate this valley. Is it anything to be so closely identified with a movement so clearly indicated servant of God in guiding the world's religious life? You should know of these things, not to puff up your pride, but rather to give you a new and adequate vision of your opportunity, and a deepened sense of your responsibility. Begin at once to arrange for a Bethany Reading Circle for this coming winter.

Sulphume, is neither more or less than liquefied sulphur, and can thus be made to serve all the remedial uses for which sulphur was ever employed. In fact, it multiplies those uses just so far as a liquid is more easy to apply and absorb that a powder, thereby increasing its efficiency in all skin and blood disorders and other physical ailments. The discovery of this new specific was made by the Sulphume Co., Chicago.

Notes and News.

The Mississippi Christian Convention was held at Haze under a gospel tent on the 18th of this month.

The corner-stone of a new house of worship was laid at Joppa, Md., August 14th. Peter Ainslie, editor of the Christian Tribune, and W. J. Wright, both of Baltimore, were present and made addresses.

The Piedmont District Convention was held last week at the Assembly Grounds, near Gordonsville, Va. Z. P. Richardson was chairman and W. J. Hall secretary. There are forty churches in the district, and thirty of these were represented by forty-five delegates, which was said to be the largest delegation for the past fifteen years. The movement of the Piedmont Assembly seems to have greatly revived the work in the district, and it is only the mere beginning of what will come in a few years. J. H. Gordinier preached the convention sermon. Addresses and sermons were delivered by F. D. Power, L. A. Cutler, B. P. Smith and Richard Bagby.—Christian Tribune.

After ten weeks' hard work Evangelists Wright and Martindale organized a church at Alta, Ia., which for the present will be under the care of the pastor at Storm Lake. Lucius E. Christian, of Alta, extols Bro. Wright's ability, resources and Christian deportment in very high terms. He also writes appreciatingly of the work and responsibilities of the church.

W. Bedall, Cor. Sec. Southern Illinois C. M. C., of Flora, says: "Churches of the Disciples in Egypt—Attention! I am in constant receipt of letters of inquiry from preachers with first-class testimonials and references and splendid records as pastors and preachers. If, therefore, the congregations needing pastoral care will communicate with me, I can speedily bring these two parties together and help the cause along. I am also slating revival meetings for every county in Egypt, if you desire one. Write me."

At Home Again.

Have returned to my work after five weeks' vacation, spent in Indiana and Kentucky. Feel much refreshed. Bros. Procter, L. Z. Burr, G. W. Webb and others preached for us in my absence. Held a meeting of two weeks at my old home church, East Union, Nicholas county, Ky. Had 29 additions; 24 by confession. This was my third meeting with this church and my last. I begin a meeting at Antioch, in Clay county, a few miles north of here, August 21st. Success to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Very truly,

A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

About Missouri Brethren.

W. S. St. Clair, the faithful, has bought a nice country home near Olivet, in Boone county, that he may be near his work, as he preaches for Olivet the 1st, at Lydia the 2nd, at Richland the 3rd, at Berea the 4th, having held his work for five years, and the end is not yet.

Baxter Waters is taking his vacation holding a meeting for the Lentner brethren, with H. F. Ritz, of Canton. In September Bro. Waters will return to Yale, expecting to complete his course this year.

W. M. Featherston, Moberly, is now preaching for Armstrong the 1st, for Liberty, Randolph county, the 2nd, for Fair View, Macon county, the 3rd, and for Mt. Moriah, Howard county the 4th, making a pleasant work.

J. E. Donovan, Montgomery City, is preaching this year at Danville the 1st, at Antioch, Callaway, the 2nd, at High Point the 3rd and at Warrentown the 4th. J. E. Donovan is one of the Christian University boys that is an honor to his Alma Mater, and a blessing to the kingdom of God. He is making a new church out of Danville.

J. C. Coggins, of Ottowa, Kansas, can not forsake Missouri if he did marry away from home, all wrong, too. He is now in a meeting at Martinsburg, with fine prospects for success. Is with his brother, J. W., who has been preaching for the brethren "off and on," these many years.

Geo. E. Prewitt, Schell City, will begin his work as Bible-school evangelist south of the river, and with John Giddens will make a team, though brother Prewitt will give himself largely to normal work, and it is needed, too.

North of the river, F. M. Rogers, Edina, takes up the work also, with the first of the month, and will do the work of a Bible-school evangelist in those regions, and now let us all give these young brethren and the board hearty co-operation in their efforts to build up our Bible-schools and glorify the Son of God.

Bro. H. F. Ritz, Canton, is preaching for the Illinois people who will fully and completely qualify himself for the ministry of the Word.

It will be good news to all that our schools over the state have much brighter prospects this year than last, and as a result the professors and scholars wear happy smiles all over their faces.

John P. Jesse is making his home for the present at Gower, and is serving the brethren at Faucett on the 1st, at Clarksdale on the 2nd, at Gower on the 3rd and at Dekalb on the 4th. But those good people will not hold a man like John Jesse much longer, and it is not right that they should.

Arthur Elliott, just married, and living at Kirksville, preaches for Illinois Bend on the 1st, at Maude on the 2nd, and at Moore's Chapel on the 3rd, leaving the 4th Sunday for some brethren in Macon or adjoining counties.

Florida.

The Christian Church in Jacksonville, of which the writer is pastor, gave a complimentary social entertainment August 5th to the members of the Christian Church encamped here in the Seventh Army Corps. The social was given at Bro. C. B. Smith's residence, 23 East Monroe St. Some of the best musical and literary talent of the city were present and rendered some fine music, recitations and impersonations, after which the ladies of the church provided ample refreshments. A large number of our soldier boys and friends were present and enjoyed themselves immensely, judging from their smiling faces and happy expressions. It is a pleasure to mention that the majority of the young men who are members of the Christian Church in this corps did not leave their home, but brought it South with them, and although many of them have found the churches in the Southland neither as numerous nor as influential as in the Western and Middle States, these young men have not been ashamed to show their colors. We wish we could say the same of many others who came this way to seek recreation or to escape the rigors of more Northern climes. All honor to our noble and brave soldier laddies. There are numbers of them encamped here who attend the churches of the city regularly and are actually engaged in Sunday-school and Endeavor work. The Lord willing, I expect to hold a service at the camp on Lord's day afternoon, August 14th, at which all members of the Christian Church in camp, off duty, are expected to be present, when we will observe the commemorative institution of the Lord's supper. The "boys" are working this service up, and we are anticipating a good meeting. We have no chaplain of the Christian Church in this corps, but we have a number of young men, sons of preaching brethren.

Chautauqua Notes.

The Assembly Herald said on Thursday that Hon. Z. T. Sweeney is one of the most popular ministers in the Church of the Disciples, and was twenty-six years pastor at Columbus, Ind., and at the close of his lecture here throngs of people took his hand in greeting and appreciation. His power was felt, and his wit and humor rested the hearers.

The sermon on Sunday evening was to a vast throng, and it held the people as words of truth, based on the eternal foundations of God's love, can only do. The impression of the truth in righteousness, as it has builded up the bastions of liberty for this nation, were spoken with such magic earnestness and power, that our strength is in the Bible and in the Christ of the Bible, as to make men say, "We could hear him all night."

The Governor-General of Canada was present with his wife, the Countess of Abereeen, and their family, on the platform yesterday. It was a pleasant greeting the great audience of 8,000 gave to these friendly brethren from the land north of ours.

In his words of response, Lord Aberdeen spoke very highly of Uncle Johnathan and the American cousins. He is a plain, straightforward Scotchman, and has the wiry strength of mind and body of his ancestors. The children were plainly dressed—as if we might contrast our show of style with the neat and tasty costume of an old-time nation. Headquarters house is full of people. Ten different states were represented by ladies in prayer-meeting last Wednesday evening. W. J. FORD.

State Mission Notes.

Preaching three times a day and then traveling all night, and yet one brother suggested the other day, "You don't take exercise enough!" But I enjoyed the days work if it was hard, for in the morning I was at Wellsville, where C. C. Hill is the pastor, in the afternoon at Two Mile Branch, where C. C. Hill holds forth the Word of Life, and at night at Bellflower, the new church in Montgomery county, whose existence is owing to the indefatigable, intelligent efforts of Bro. C. C. Hill, and it is always an enjoyment to be with these men of God and their churches.

The next Lord's day we dedicated that house to the Lord. It is a beautiful house, in the midst of a charming village, right in the center of one of the most beautiful prairies of Montgomery county. The house cost $1,400, of which $500 was to be raised. It was done, of course, and we had a happy day indeed.

That week I attended the Henry county meeting at Freedom and the Howard county meeting at Armstrong. In both places we had enjoyable, interesting and profitable work; indeed, these two counties are always in the very heart of the work of God in all things.

The board meeting at Kansas City was interesting because it is getting close to the end of the year. Only one more meeting till the convention at Nevada, Sept. 26-29, and we are anxious for the outcome. The receipts of the treasury were exceedingly light and were it not for the great confidence we have that the churches will bring up their opportionments we would have to call some of our workers out of their fields. This would be a calamity indeed.

Many of the churches have but one more meeting before the gathering at Nevada. This will be their only chance to raise the money so badly needed. Will they not make a special effort at the very next meeting to obtain and send the money so very much needed?

I was at Independence Sunday morning and enjoyed the visit very much. This is one of the staunch fields of our stae mission work. Never-failing, ever-sure, Bro. Vernon is getting hold of the work well indeed.

The Montgomery county meeting at Wellsville, Randolph at Liberty church; preaching one night at the McGarvey Institute, at Windsor, and one day at Red Top, in Boone county convention, brought me to Friday morning, which also brought me a come-quick message from home, on account of another dangnrous turn in Mrs. Abbott's condition.

At this writing the dangerline has not been passed. I again express my thankfulness to friends all over the state and in other states as well, for their expressions of sympathy.

Surely the prayers of so many will find audience with God.

Then I am especially grateful to so many whose sympathy has taken a practical turn in the shape of the payment of pledges. Life memberships and church apportionments and many others who are saying, "Don't worry, we will send it soon." May the dear Lord bless the hearts whose love thus comes in such helpful ways. Yours in his name,

T. A. Abbott.

State Missions in Illinois.

At our recent state convention, held at Eureka, an interesting and gratifying report of work done the past year was made by our secretary, J. Fred Jones. The report impressed us all that fidelity and wisdom had been exercised by the state board, and that all had been accomplished that we could expect with the means at command. Let this be clearly understood, in order that I may not seem to be finding fault with the secretary or with the board. I have no purpose to do such a thing. My purpose is altogether different from this.

In a very imperfect address as president of the convention, I ventured to suggest that a movement be undertaken looking to a larger increase this year of the receipts for the prosecution of this work. I desire, Mr. Editor, by means of this article, to ask the influence of your valuable paper in behalf of this effort. The movement ought, it seems to me, to involve at least the following features:

1. The enlistment of every church in the state, if possible, to take up the regular collections when called for. Every possible effort ought to be made to do this.

2. The securing from all the pastors an agreement to work up systematic, liberal and prompt offerings in all their churches.

3. This may require a personal canvass by the secretary or assistants. If it does it will pay, if wisely and energetically prosecuted.

4. Such prosecution of the work of missions in the destitute and promising fields as will assure the people that their money, when given, will bring adequate results.

Of one thing I am convinced, viz., that we are falling so far short of our ability and duty in this matter of state missions, that our shortcoming is liable to become a shame and a reproach soon, if not remedied. We must do better. We can do it if the churches are once aroused; and they can be aroused if we but go about it systematically and in earnest.

May I go one step further? I believe that what is here said of state missions in Illinois is true in a general way of the same phase of work in almost all of our other states. No better fields are afforded in the world than those in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, et al. Good and inspiring work is being done in all of them; but the time has come when a long step forward ought to be taken in all of these and many other states for evangelization. So far as Illinois is concerned, I move that we inaugurate a forward march. God will go before us if we but have faith to move at his Word. Willing hearts always find the doors opening before them. "Speak unto the people that they go forward."

The next regular collection for Illinois missions will be taken the first Sunday in October next. The board has before it many inviting fields. It cannot enter them for lack of means. The churches ought to be stirred as never before on this subject, so that means shall be in hand to send preachers to plant the cause of Christ in all of these destitute places. J. H. Hardin.

[The Christian-Evangelist has been a staunch advocate of the principles set forth in President Hardin's foregoing timely suggestions, and we hope that they will be more sacredly regarded and applied, not only by the Churches of Christ in Illinois, but in every state, than heretofore. Editor.]

Michigan Grains.

Bro. S. S. Jones is holding a meeting at Durand, Mich., and will organize a church and Sunday-school on Lord's day next. The meeting has been in session one week and one has already made the confession and others are interested. Bro. Jones is a very able preacher of the Word. He is spending his vacation in Michigan, and while doing so is holding the meeting which will result in a new church in one of the best towns. If other brethren coming to the state for a vacation and rest would devote their time to the preaching of the Word, there would be rejoicing at the state meeting on account of new souls being born into the kingdom of Christ, new churches organized and warm attachments formed and much good accomplished in the name of the Master. Now is the harvest; the reward will be when the Lord comes. May Bro. Jones have his reward then. He holds this meeting free of charge on account of it being his vacation.

About two weeks ago I had the privilege of going to Owosso, where we baptized Sister Lillian Wightman, of Durand. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for four years, her father being a Methodist minister. She took this step because she believed she was obeying her Savior. After her baptism Bro. Spayd extended the hand of fellowship and she took membership with the Owosso church until the organization at Durand shall be effected.

Last Lord's day I was with the brethren at Wilmot, where I found a young Adventist minister with his young wife in prayer and Bible study. I spent Monday with them in careful investigation and on Monday night he took membership with us and will leave his Sabbath-keeping a thing of the past. He and his wife are pure young people. They were both educated in the Adventist faith from infancy. It was so hard for them to give up their Sabbath-keeping that they fasted for two days before they could undertake the step. He had been well instructed in the Adventist College at Battle Creek. One month ago I was introduced to them, and at that time after prayer by myself and each of them we spent four or five hours' earnest study by ourselves, and now Bro. and Sister Hartson are Disciples of Christ. They are both capable of teaching the truth publicly and privately, and we can hope for them to have many years to spend in the Lord's service and to bring many sould to Christ.

Our brethren at High Banks will have Bro. W. D. Campbell, of Plumb St. church, of Detroit, to hold a meeting for them in September.

Bro. L. W. Spayd, of Owosso, will hold a meeting for the church at Mt. Pleasant in September and the writer will supply his place in Owosso.

Bro. add Sister Eckles, of Pine Run, have been passing through the valley of sorrow on account of the death of their estimable daughter, Mrs. Fox, of Chio, who died of heart failure.

On my way to Wilmot I called on Bro. Billman, the very efficient pastor of our church at Saginaw. I had the pleasure of meeting Bro. McCarty, of Carlton. He was visiting with Bro. Billman. In this case three made good company for an hour or two. They were both feeling greatly encouraged with the outlook in the field of labor. They are making great preparation for the coming state meeting, to be held in Saginaw, beginning August 31. As Carlton is near to Saginaw they will provide for a number of the delegates. May this be the best meeting ever held in the state, is the prayer of many Michigan Disciples making preparation to attend.

R. Bruce Brown.

Omaha Notes.

To-day is Texas Day. Gov. Culbertson and staff are in the city viewing the display of the resources of the great West. Appropriate services in the Auditorium, with fireworks at night, are the chief features of the day. Early in July was Southern Texas Melon Day, when all who came to the horticultural building received a large slice of melon. The display of our Southern sister in the various departments of the big fair is one of which they can well be proud.

Approriate to Texas Day is the presence of the Mexican National Band, which has just opened a six weeks' engagement with the exposition. These men, thoroughly trained and many of them artists who have a reputation on their own account, attract large and enthusiastic audiences every afternoon and evening. When our own Marine Band left some persons believed that ended the music of the season, but now they are ready to look for even better things.

Those who attended the Exposition during the first six weeks and return again can scarcely find the old landmarks. New exhibits have been entered, old ones improved and a generous rivalry engendered, till each week sees changes in nearly every building. Especially do the horticultural and agricultural buildings show an entire change. Not least among the displays is that of the landscape gardener upon the Bluff Tract. The rarest water lilies and the tenderest house plants vie with each other for the admiration of the multitudes.

August 5th one of the most gorgeous flower parades was held on the Bluff Tract. The thousands who witnessed it were unanimous in pronouncing it the best they had ever seen. Over forty carriages were in the procession, and each had a beauty of its own, till the judges were bewildered by the various visions of loveliness.

Many of our brethren have visited our city. Bro. J. W. Hilton, of Bethany, made an earnest plea for Cotner. Only $9,000 yet to be raised to secure a $100,000 property, free from debt and with a clear title. Is there not some man who will come to the aid of this work now with a large subscription?

Bro. Romig also gave us two very nice illustrated lectures. It was a delighiful privilege to meet this old friend and to receive the assurance that we might expect him in Omaha when we were ready to co-operate with him. The many visitors and the great attractions have entirely changed our audiences. Smaller audiences rule. But few preachers are taking a vacation now. All deem it best to be in their own pulpits. Sister C. E. Taylor and Sister D. D. Burt are visiting their old homes in Ohio. This leaves our fellow-laborers very lonely. HOWARD CRAMBLET.

State Mission Notes.

In this issue of the CHRITSIAN-EVANGELIST will be found a vigerous article by the former state secretary, Bro. Hoffmann. It shows that which is alarming to those who love the state in which we dwell and who are anxious for the future of our people. I fear there is growing up the idea that the need for state mission work is gone, that the territory has already been occupied and we ought to turn our attention to needier fields.

Never was there a wider mistake. We say that we have gone into every county in the state and planted organizations, but in twelve of these counties we are practically unknown—only a schoolhouse organization in some of them. There are nine county-seats in which we have no organization and twenty-three in which we have no building. I preached last summer in a place in South Missouri, and the statement was made by one of my hearers, and he was not exceptional by any means, that it was the first sermon he ever heard in his life, and there was no church of any kind within 25 miles. Yet, on the way to that place, in a travel of 30 miles overland, I passed through three villages, and in the first were three saloons, in the next two and in the last one three more. Eight places where men were being ruined for this life and that which is to come, and not a single place where they were being taught of Jesus and his love!

The above is not an isolated case, either. There never was such need of vigorous labor as now. In the years gone by we have gone into the easy places, and now the tough, knotty, knarly ones are to be taken for Jesus. It takes more money, more faith, more consecration than ever for this. Bro. Hoffmann's figures are affected by the panic, but now is the time for a rally. Your board is doing all it can to reach that destitute country. We have four who are acting as evangelist there, J. B. Marley, W. W. Warren, D. B. Warren and F. J. Yokley, and besides these we have missionary pastors in all that region. This takes money. Only one month till the state convention. Such a short time in which to act! Will you not take up thsee matters and say by your contributions that you love Christ and his church and the grand old state of which we are citizens?

I beg of you, do not pass this by. It will be our shame as a people if we do not push with all possible energy this work of state missions. Our Baptist brethren made the same mistake that we seem to be on the verge of making; they let go their state mission work; they lost groud at such an alarming rate that they saw their danger and are making a great effort to raise $12,000 for this year's work. Will we learn the lesson? God help us to see our day. Brother raise, that apportiomen*t now*.

Yours in His Name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

ARKANSAS.

Just closed a short meeting at Hamburg, Ark. Five baptisms—two from the Methodists. Twenty-one Disciples were gathered together and agreed to constitute a church. We have only one preacher in all that part of the state. Won't some good preacher go and take care of the Hamburg church? Write me at Ladoga, Ind.—W. T. BROOKS.

Arkadelphia, Aug. 16.—The annual camp meeting held at Mineral Springs near Okolona, was very enjoyoble. The meeting began Aug. 5th and closed Aug. 14th. There were 17 accessionn; 13 by confession. The meeting was conducted by Vernon J. Rose, of Newton, Kansas. A number of other preachers were present and aided in the meeting. Mineral Springs Camp Ground consists of 40 acres of land, held by an association of brethren. Seven mineral springs are on the ground, each one differing from the others. There are also two large freestone springs that furnish abundance of pure water for all who attend the meeting. There is a substantial tabernacle with a seating capacity of about 700. 1,200 to 1,500 people usually camp on the ground during the meeting. On Lord's day from 2,000 to 3,000 are in attendance. A large portion of Southwest Arkansas is represented at this meeting each year. The influence of this meeting is widespread, affording great opportunity for doing good.—E. S. ALLHANDS.

Bentonville, Aug. 22.—Five additions to this congregation at yesterday's morning service. Work is moving off nicely.—CHAS. E. FREEMAN, Pastor.

IOWA.

Ft. Madison, Aug. 16.—One confession last Lord's day. This makes some 25 or 26 since we began here the last of March.—R. H. INGRAM.

UTAH.

Ogden, Aug. 15.—One united by letter yesterday.—J. H. BAUSERMAN.

MISSOURI.

Warren's Store, Aug. 19.—Since we came down from St. Louis, five weeks ago, we have been constantly in the work, preaching at Belleview, Piedmont and this place. I never closed a meeting with greater interest than was manifest here last night, but owing to circumstances could not continue longer. Our efforts in this section have been strictly missionary, and we trust helpful to the many anxious hearers.—A. M. HARRAL.

Merwin, Aug. 21.—We are in another good meeting at this place; seven additions last night. Church in better condition than ever before.—JOHN M. CLAYPOOL.

Holt, July 22.—Our meeting booms; 15 days with 46 additions; we continue.—D. D. BOYLE AND V. E. RIEDENOUR.

Waynesville, August 22.—E. E. Dawson, of Dexter, Mo., and I have just closed a 19 days' meeting here, with 56 accessions; 28 by obedience.—D. B. WARREN.

Minden Mines, August 16.—Here two weeks. Organized a congregation. Had fifteen additions; eight by obedience; five from Baptists, one restored, and one by letter. Some noble brethren here. Go next to Jasper City, Mo.—MORGANS & DAUGHTER.

MICHIGAN.

Algonac, Aug. 20.—Two confessions here since last report. One a lady of 70 who has been under Catholic influences for 50 years.—J. L. SMITH.

OHIO.

Dayton, Aug. 21.—Two confessions to-day.—I. J. CAHILL.

ALABAMA.

Birmingham, Aug. 15.—R. Lin Cave, of Kentucky, has been in a good meeting with us for two weeks, with large audiences and 20 additions to date.—O. P. SPIEGEL.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

MINNESOTA.

Luverne, Aug. 17.—Good attendance and interest. Five additions last night. Evangelist Atwood is preaching sound doctrine.—F. H. SWEETMAN, singer.

IOWA.

Des Moines, August 19th.—While visiting my old home in Kingman, Kan., I preached for the brethren last Lord's day, resulting in four additions; three by baptism. They have no pastor now, and it would be a good field for an energetic young man. I hold a three weeks' tent meeting with my own church at Sandyville, Ia., before entering school at Drake this fall.—WM. J. LOCKHART.

INDIANA.

Lowell—Three accessions since last report, and $200 of repairs being put on our church property.—S. A. STRAUN, Pastor.

ILLINOIS.

Champaign, Aug. 16.—Baptized six at Ludlow recently.—DR. W. FRANK ROSS.

Rossville, Aug. 15.—Three added yesterday during regular Lord's day services. I am to to begin a meeting to-night with the congregation at Coal Creek, Ind.—A. W. JACKMAN.

Eureka, Aug. 15.—The church at Henry is moving quietly but steadily forward. Two persons were added yesterday by statement. I have recently preached twice in union meetings. The Ladies' Aid Society has shown commendable energy and enterprise by raising money and repainting the church. Its appearance is greatly improved and quite attractive.—M. P. HAYDEN.

Saybrook, Aug. 16.—Last Sunday at the morning service we had one confession, a fine married lady at the head of a family. On the 13th near the close of the day, mother Hudson dropped dead at her son's home here, being in her 76th year. She was well and widely known, and a daily reader of the Bible. Only the Sunday before she was in her place in the church. Funeral on the 15th, to a large gathering, conducted by the writer. Text, Rev. 14:13.—A. L. FERGUSON.

Fulton, August 22.—Our tent meeting starts off well here; four added the first week and many more are inquiring the way of life, so we hope for many more.—J. S. CLEMENTS.

Moweaqua, Aug. 22.—The first week of our meeting results in seven added. Town stirred, crowds thronging the large tabernacle. The pastor, A. R. Spicer, preaches the Word while Prof. Geo. T. Matthews leads the song services.—EDNA RICE.

KENTUCKY.

August 15.—We have just closed a series of very interesting sermons at Turkey Foot, Scott county, Ky., delivered by Bro. W. H. Willyard, a graduate of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., class of '98. This meeting resulted in 20 accessions, and the church wonderfully strengthened spiritually. We wish to say to the brotherhood, as due Bro. Willyard, that after two years of service at this place he has succeeded beyond expectation in accomplishing a great work for the Master, and as he leaves us for other fields of labor it is with a feeling of deepest regret that we undergo this parting. No laborer for Jesus was ever held in higher esteem by a congregation than is Bro. Willyard.—LEONARD BARNHILL.

Athens.—The meeting here, which ended my labor, closed Aug. 5, with 60 additions. Bro. W. R, Lloyd was the evangelist. His preaching was clear, logical and strong The church has secured the services of Bro. J. T. Sharrard for the rest of this year.—ROBT. STEWART.

TEXAS.

San Antonio, Aug. 15.—One addition yesterday, making a net gain of six for the first two months of our work with this church. The signs are very hopeful for a steady and substantial improvement. Despite the summer exodus, the heat and lastitude of this season in the South, our audiences have increased to thrice their size in June, and our prayer-meetings are an inspiration both in interest and usefulness. We are publishing a weekly paper which is attracting wide attention in the city. This is a hard but a hopeful field and one full of strategic advantage. We need the prayers of the brotherhood.—GEO. B. RANSHAW.

Abilene.—The Rebaptism brethren here had full sway in all the country districts out west, but I am doing a good work among them by going out and preaching for them occasionally and showing them a better way. I have held a meeting at a point eight miles from town; 40 additions and much prejucice removed, as some thought we "progressives" were bad folks. There are many good people among these brethren who, if taught properly, would make good workers. The church in Abiline is doing well; 50 added since last January. Thy brother, A. J. BUSH.

The church at Mt. Vernon and at Sedro want a preacher. Can raise about $600. Towns twelve miles apart and one thousand inhabitants each. Address W. S. Crockett, New Wharton, Wash.

CHURCH EXTENSION ARGUMENTS.

A Wise Enterprise.

Church Extension is one of our wisest enterprises. It is a loan fund that ever comes back to the treasury in a sort of perpetual-motion way. It recognizes the fact that a church can no more grow and become an active force in the world than a bird can grow and hatch without an eggshell. Then, what can pay the donor larger profits than in this way, to lay up "a good foundation" for heavenly wealth, where they "rest from their labors" and have "their works follow" on forever and ever.

A WONDER.—Years ago Bro. Pendleton and I and Bro. Bosworth were appointed a committee by the General Convention in Cincinnati to report that P. M., and while on Bro. Bosworth's porch we looked across lots and saw a beautiful multiflora that had spread all over the gable end of a large residence, and soon guesses began as to how many buds and blooms it bore, running from 500 to 2,000, and such was the interest aroused that they were the next day actually counted and found to number about 5,000. Then, assuming that every pod held at least ten seeds, it was seen that the Savior's estimate for "good ground" of thirty, sixty, and one hundred-fold was very conservative, for in the case before us it was fifty thousand-fold!

We then remembered that a few years ago one little seed was dropped into the soil, and here is its product for a single year. But then it was a perennial plant, and so produced year by year. The Savior did not limit the crop to one hundred-fold, nor to annuals, but left all nature open to stir our ambition.

"CROWN OF REJOICING," 1 THESS. 2:19.—If you build or help to build a church house, it will surely be the means of saving souls, and these will be your "Crown of Rejoicing." Read the quotation above and prayerfully resolve that you will not be without some at "the Beautiful Gate waiting and watching for you." THOMAS MUNNELL.

Carton, O.

Among the Best Enterprises of Our Times.

The mightiest and noblest impulse that moves the Church of Christ to-day is that of the evangelization of the world. It is the expression and direction of the sovereign will of God. No enlightened and thoughtful Christian man can fail to see this.

But this wonderful missionary development of the power of God has called forth inevitably the enterprise of Church Extension as a necessary element of the successful evangelization of the nations. The triumph of the kingdom of God in this great land demands imperatively the development of Church Extension on a scale that shall be altogether commensurate with the mighty progress (which should be) of the preaching of the gospel throughout all this vast and most inviting field.

Successful missions are not conceivable without the powerful adjunct of Church Extension. Every church, every individual Christian, should be made to understand this. Among the best enterprises of our times, so extraordinary in great and enlightened movements of men, Church Extension is one of the wisest, and one that will certainly win the approval and support of the intelligence and piety of the Church of Christ. CHAS. LOUIS LOOS.

The Two Great Works.

What are the two great, supreme works of our brotherhood at this time? In my judgment they are Church Extension and Home Mission work. They are really the two arms of one work—the work of establishing and sustaining our plea for a return to apostolic Christianity in all this great land. Give me the money to assist in building a house of worship, and then give me the money to assist in supporting a good preacher in that field, and I can establish the cause we plead in any community in our country where there are enough people to form a congregation. Church Extension appeals to our people now. The appeal should reach every Disciple. No one should close his pocketbook against it. It offers a rich investment, perpetual and ever-increasing. Though but a poor preacher, I have fifty dollars in this fund and I count it a richer investment than a claim in the Klondike. We have thousands of brethren who can and should each give that much to this fund. There is scarcely a brother who cannot give one dollar. In hundreds of splendid fields we cannot establish our cause because we cannot build a house. In scores of other splendid fields, where we have planted our cause, we must struggle against overwhelming odds because we cannot have a respectable house of worship. I speak from personal knowledge, having had nearly five years experience in Portland and Seattle. Out of a heart burdened with such an experience, I appeal to our men of wealth and to our men in moderate circumstances to swell the Church Extension Fund. I appeal to the preachers to press this matter upon the consciences of their people. It is God's work and we dare not neglect it. J. N. SMITH.

A Modest Sum.

I rejoice greatly in the determination of the Board of Church Extension to raise $250,000 by the close of 1900. This is not too much to ask and to confidently expect from a million members. With this amount in hand three churches can be helped to secure buildings where one can be helped now. Unusual emphasis should be laid upon the September collection. The board asks for $20,000. Thousands of churches that have made no response in previous years should heed the request of the board and contribute generously this year. Because September is not the most favorable month in the year for a collection, special efforts should be put forth that this worthy cause may not suffer. All over the land there are groups of Disciples needing and deserving help. They are unable to build without assistance. Having seen much of the good work of this board in my travels throughout the country I am in position to recommend its appeals to the favorable consideration of churches and people everywhere. Had we begun the work of Church Extension fifty years before we did it is safe to say that we would have a thousand more self-supporting churches than we have to-day.

AN EXTENSIVE TRAVELER.

The Pastor Should Help.

Bro. Muckley asks of me an article on some phase of Church Extension. But what can I say in behalf of this work which has not already been said, and how can I say it any more effectively? With the true followers of Christ there is but one side to the question. It is a work which commends itself to every man's judgment. Then why does not every Christian man give towards its support? The chief hindrances to universal support of this enterprise are stinginess, indifference and ignorance. The first is not so general, nor so obstinate as is generally supposed, although there is enough of it; but of indifference and ignorance there is a vast deal, and the latter is the mother of the former. If all our people understood the work as they might, the quarter-million mark would be reached long before 1900. But does not Bro. Muckley flood them with facts and figures, with appeals and arguments? Verily, and that, too, in most concise, readable and intelligible form. But the majority fail to read them unless urged thereto by those really interested. Pastors can do much in this way. They ought to preach upon and explain the work, and at the same time read to their flock many of the good things published by those whose minds and hearts are constantly full of it. This would do much to dispel the ignorance, and the indifference would disappear with it.

The Imperative Need.

This need seems appalling when it is remembered that only one-fourth of the calls for help in building churches can be responded to because of lack of funds. This ought not so to be. Another appalling fact is that more than one-fourth of our church organizations in the United States are without church houses. Many of them will never get houses unless aid can be rendered them from our Church Extension Fund. It will not be forgotten that the growth of our cause in the United States is intimately related to the growth of our Church Extension Fund, which often makes possible the establishment of churches which might not otherwise ever exist. Upon no one thing is a church more dependent for its perpetuity and growth than upon possessing a church building adequate for its needs. Unlike our other church enterprises, the Church Extension Fund goes on increasing with the years in power and efficiency. Our old established churches should aid mightily in this work for the progress of the cause we love so well.

A. C. SMITHER.

Benefits of Church Extension.

There are many places where it is impossible to build up without a house, and the life of any church must be considered precarious until it has a house of worship. This is more especially necessary in towns.

In new and growing towns we cannot afford to wait until the means can all be raised on the ground. Church Extension comes to our relief in a practical, business-like way. The points to be emphasized, as it appears to me, to make it most helpful, are:

1. Keep it growing by liberal donations. The principal advantage of special collections is that they call attention to special interests, which otherwise would be neglected.

2. Preachers should not encourage overbuilding, and they should consider themselves under obligations to see that the notes are paid as they become due. No matter how low the rate of interest, when the payments run behind everything connected with the church will drag.

3. No one should encourage a loan on property badly located. If the loan will not advance the cause it should not be made. I know several churches that are worthless on account of mislocation.

4. Very few churches in new towns or small villages should borrow more than $300. Then the house should be planned so it can be enlarged.

Perhaps no interest among us has been more wisely managed or energetically pushed than Church Extension, and now has more promise of good. It makes effective and gives permanency to our missionary efforts.

E. C. BROWNING.

Miss Ada Boyd at Her Old Home.

Miss Ada Boyd, late missionary to Bilaspur, India, delivered a very interesting and instructive address to a large and attentive audience at the State Line Church of Christ, Wednesday night, Aug. 10, 1898. State Line is Miss Boyd's old home. Here she confessed her Savior in her girlhood days, and a short time afterward left all behind and went into India to assist in lifting the veil of ignorance and superstition from the minds of that benighted and idolatrous people and turn them from the worship of images of wood and stone to the worship of the true and living God.

In 1882, as she was making arrangements to leave for her field of labor, the church here presented her with a beautiful copy of the Holy Scriptures. She opened her address by holding it aloft before the vast audience, stating that it had been her comfort and strength during her years of solitary labor in a land and among people then unknown to her and her companions. The only consolation to her was that the same sun, the same moon, and the same Bible lighted them that lighted her loved ones far away at home. She went first to Hurda, then to Bilaspur, India. At these two places she spent nearly sixteen years of her best days, coming with the Lord's command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

She is working under the auspices of the C. W. B. M. An auxiliary of the church here supported her in the foreign field for a number of years, until it weakened by death and the removal of its members, and was compelled to give up its grand work. While it has ceased to work as an organization, its spirit is manifested in the church to-day, making it a thoroughly wide-awake missionary church. Though not strong, numerically and financially speaking, yet at every call it responds liberally for the cause of missions, both home and foreign. Sister Boyd's many friends were glad to meet her and again clasp hands with her in her old home; and the words that she has spoken will make a deep and lasting impression upon their minds, to stir them up to a more earnest effort in the Master's cause, until the Lord shall say, "It is enough; come up higher." A. O. SWARTWOOD, Pastor.

State Line, Ind., Aug. 11, 1898.

A Serious Question.

It is said that there are some sympathetic and wealthy mothers who will place their own boy in the hands of servants who are morally weak and have little control over them, and go down to the allies and slums of the city to save the boy of some one else. This certainly is an excellent work, and shows a missionary and sympathetic spirit. But it is often true that while this good mother is saving a "little devil" down in the slums the servants are making a "big devil" right in her own home, out of her own child. Save the boy down in the alley if you can, but do not neglect your own child.

This is likewise illustrated in the mission work of some denominations. The Moravians may be traced back to the fourteenth century. They are the most liberal givers to Foreign Missions on earth. But in all these more than four centuries they have a membership of less than 200,000 in the whole world. They try to do their work away from home among the heathen only. This accounts for their slow progress. You cannot bring the world to Christ in that way.

Are we drifting in this direction in Missouri? Look at the following figures. These are our contributions to state missions. These are the amounts collected and expended by our mission boards during the years indicated.

Fiscal Year	State Missions	Bible-schools
1883-'84	$ 4,830	$2,575
1884-'85	6,225	3,341
1885-'86	5,614	2,857
1886-'87	7,294	3,634
1887-'88	10,506	3,821
1888-'89	11,151	4,626
1889-'90	7,433	4,354
1890-'91	8,719	3,663
1891-'92	10,274	4,518
1892-'93	11,104	3,668
1893-'94	7,747	3,686
1894-'95	6,668	4,145
1896-'97	5,531	3,538

These figures indicate that as early as the fiscal year of '84-'85 our two mission boards raised and expended $9,686. Last year the income of the two boards was $9,069. This is $500 less after twelve years. Nine years ago the income of the two boards was $15,777. Here is a loss of $6,708. Here is a loss of $1,100 in our Bible-school work, and the state mission work is receiving just one-half what it did then. This is a very serious question. We are certainly not doing for the heathen more than we should do, but how about our own boy? How about our own state? Is our own family to be neglected? The time has come when we must face this question seriously. We are not doing for our state work what we should, and our churches are suffering the consequences. G. A. HOFFMANN.

Hard at Work

Are the committees at Chattanooga, preparing for the entertainment of the convention, October 13-21. We want to make it the greatest gathering of our people in the history of our work. But let every one bear in mind that the success of any work depends upon the individual. Let every church, C. W. B. M., Y. P. S. C. E. and Sunday-school, as well as every county, district and state convention send some one to the convention and bear their expenses. Let every church or number of churches employing a minister send their poor, hard-working servant to Chattanooga that he may catch the inspiration of this convention and returning electrify the entire membership with his renewed zeal. Let every individual member who is able to come remember that the seat made vacant by his neglect of duty will speak out against him. Let every one come who can and you will be happy to know that you contributed so much to the cause in adding to the numbers and enthusiasm of the assembly.

The Southeastern and Central Passenger Associations have granted the rate of one fare for the round trip and we feel confident that the Western Associations will do the same.

Your expenses while here will not be great. The best homes in the city will be thrown wide open at the rate of $1 per day.

The hotels, as good as we have in the South, give a rate of $1.50 and $2 per day.

Reduced rates will be given to Lookout Mountain and Chickamauga National Military Park, where from forty to sixty regiments of the patriotic sons of America have been encamped for the summer.

The trip is worth your money. The convention will be clear profit to you.

Let some one volenteer from each district in each state to work up a delegation for this great occasion. Please let us know if you are coming in due time, so that we can find a place for you. Those writing beforehand will save the committee a great deal of trouble.

Please pray and talk and work for the success of the convention from now till we are in its sessions. Yours in the work,

W. M. TAYLOR, Gen. Sec.

A Curious Wick.

Ever since lamps were made we suppose that the wick has been the bane of every housewife, and since the use of oil heaters and oil cooking stoves has become general her life has been more than miserable. Yankee ingenuity, however, has come to her help with the invention of a wick which the government has thought meritorious enough to patent, which will not clog, will not creep, and needs but little care or trimming. Smoking lamps are now a thing of the past, and cracked chimneys are unnecessary with ordinary care.

For the first time in its his ory the Standard Oil Co., one of the largest corporations on earth, has seen fit to give a complimentary letter. It is as follows: "We have made a number of careful and exhaustive tests of the 'Marshall Process' Wick, and feel that we cannot speak too highly of its qualities." It has been adopted by all the leading lamp, stove and heater makers, including the makers of the famous Rochester and Miller lamps.

This wick, which is known as the "Marshall Process" Wick, is colored brown, so that you may easily identify it; in fact, it has come to be known among its friends as "The Brown Wick."

It is made by the New Jersey Wick Company, whose advertising will be found in our columns for some months to come, and we note that they offer to send a sample wick free to any one who will write for it to their office in Newark, N. J.

The Fading Summer.

HELEN A. RAINS.

The summertime, like a queen quite surfeited
With triumphs that have wrought her slow decay,
Deals tenderly with subjects that must need
Return to dust before another's sway.

The airy blooms—brief offsprings of her day,
Blue, purple, white—the fairest of the flow'rs
Are dropping, leaf by leaf; what part have they Midst storm and blight that rule her later hours?

The sunbeams, scant and less effulgent, seem
But ghosts of what rejoiced our hearts in June,
And bear a hint in ev'ry phantom gleam
Of early frosts, e'en at the hour of noon.

She veils the lowlands in a cloud of haze,
Now steely gray—anon a snowy white—
As if to shield from cold, repellant gaze,
A vision that has been our chief delight.

The clear, cold night encroaches on her day
And saps her vital forces one by one,
And gives her realm the aspect of decay
The more apparent, now her race is run.

Harsh sounds pervade where once her wind-harps thrilled
And woke sweet intonations by the hour,
A foreign host her sacred precincts filled
And wrought these changes with sibylic pow'r.

* * * * * * *

Now reverently she lays her garb away
And tucks her flow'rs each in its narrow bed,
Quite safe, to sleep until some future day
A summons comes to wake them from the dead.

And then the heart beneath the pulseless tree
Will throb again as earth renews her trust,
And dormant forces in obedience be
In unison with the awakened dust.

Mt. Ayr, Ia.

The Quiet Hour.*

MISS BESSIE HOMAN.

This morning, as God looked down from his throne in the kingdom above upon the inhabitants of this sin-cursed world, the hearts of more than eighty thousand Christian Endeavorers were communing with their Father, and he was listening patiently to each petition, gladly recieving the gratitude of each heart and mercifully pardoning the sins of every penitent believer.

"Have you and I to-day
Stood silent as with Christ, apart from joy or fray
Of life to see by faith his face,
And grow by brief companionship more true,
More nerved to lead, to dare, to do
For him at any cost? Have we to-day
Found time in thought our hand to lay
In his and thus compare
His will with ours and wear
The impress of his wish?
Be sure
Such contact will endure
Thoughout the day; will us help walk erect
Through storm and flood; detect
Within the hidden life, sin's dross, its stain,
Revive a thought of love for him again;
Steady the steps which waver, help us see
The footpath meant for you and me."

With a great deal of pleasure we welcome into the Christian Endeavor family another organization, bringing to us richest blessings from the Author of all that is good and perfect—comrades of the Quiet Hour—the greatest forward movement ever made by Christian Endeavorers.

The Quiet Hour was formally introduced to the world of Endeavor through the columns of the Christian Endeavor World, which paper devotes a column each week to this subject.

Not only members of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, but all Christians, are urged to become members of the organization and receive its benefits, which are numerous and lasting.

Do you ask what constitutes a membership?

We are only asked to make a covenant with God our Father; he alone with his child knows whether this covenant is faithfully observed.

We make a solemn pledge to God which, though simple, is beautiful. "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I will make it the rule of my life to set apart at least fifteen minutes every day, if possible in the early morning, for quiet meditation and direct communion with God."

"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength," is a Christian Endeavor watchword. How could we attempt to do anything for him without his strength and guidance? He will never forsake us if we only trust in his wonderful love and power.

The pure and sinless Christ so deeply realized the need of quiet communion with his Father that on one occasion, "in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out into a solitary place and there prayed."

We are striving to follow in his footsteps and to do whatever he would like to have us do, but we very often lose the path and stray into sinful ways. Then, should we not be very grateful for the privilege of coming into the very presence of a merciful God, whose loving arms are ever extended to you and to me, though we are so unworthy of his care?

Do not promise the Savior that you will spend a few moments in talking with God occasionally, or whenever your soul is in deep distress and feels a sore need of divine aid. He woud like to have you make it the rule of your life. Be systematic in your private devotion, and it will not only be more acceptable unto God, but the blessings which you derive from the Morning Watch will be richer and sweeter.

Your spiritual breakfast will prove a strength to you throughout the entire day.

Does your sense of mere duty, even, permit you to offer to God less than fifteen minutes each day?

We must remember that time spent in communing with God and meditating upon his holy Word is always strength gained for his service.

The little trials which usually come into our daily lives will be scattered like chaff before the wind if we only take a little of our time each morning to tell the Lord all about them, asking him to stay very near to us and keep us from falling.

We never fail to give our bodies three meals a day, yet some of us think we can not find time to feed our souls upon the Bread of Life.

Our lives must never be so busy that we cannot spend fifteen minutes in gathering up spiritual food for an entire day, when our great Leader "went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer."

If possible, let us consecrate the early morning to the observance of this sacred privilege.

How natural to open our eyes after a night of peaceful slumber and look to him whose protecting wing o'ershadowed us while the curtain of darkness hung round all his children!

How happy to thank him first of all for his protection through the night and for the beautiful dawning of the morning!

Give God the choice hour of the day. It is very unchristianly for us to go to him at the close of the day when our minds are so crowded with thoughts of the day that we find it almost impossible to lay aside everything but thoughts of God and his love. One comrade has said, "I have found that very often our waking thoughts rule the whole day. How necessary, then, that they be inspired of God! This inspiration can come only through his presence."

Let us say unto him, "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up."

Spend the Quiet Hour in quiet meditation and direct communion with God. Dedicate your whole life anew each day to the service of the Master. Talk with him face to face. Give him the deep gratitude of a child's heart for his fatherly protection. Open your heart before him and ask him to purify it. Do not expect God to give you everything for which you pray, but always be ready to say, "Not my will, Father, but thine be done."

Never fail to ask him what he would like to have you do, then find his message to you in the Book.

If there is a person in this assembly who knows not the blessedness of a quiet talk with God, let him be convinced by listening to the testimonies of thousands who are keeping the covenant.

It has proved a sources of great joy to the invalid, the tired mother, the burdened father and even to the prisoner behind the bars.

Surely, you can raise no objection to this organization. The are no dues, fines nor meetings, no officers to support—simply a promise to worship God in a more satisfactory manner.

How remarkably strange it seems that we must make an effort to become quiet!

When the soul grows tired of sin and strife, it seems that it would be very natural that we should long for a quiet hour with One who is ready and anxious at all times to give us strength and courage. Yet in this age when people "never have time," when life is a continual rush for wealth, fame and honor, we must draw ourselves within our shells in order that our souls may bask in the sunlight of Heaven.

How happy this world would be if every Christian in it were a comrade of the Quiet Hour!

If even every member of the societies of this grand state should sign the covenant, the effect upon the spirituality of the society as a whole, as well as its individual members, would soon be evident.

strength, let us strive to bring the Christian world into the secret of his presence through the influence of the Quiet Hour.

The time is coming when all Christians shall be more like Jesus because they are living nearer to him.

Then there will be a world-wide sunrise prayer-meeting every day. The Christian Endeavor banner will bear the motto of the Quiet Hour, "O, satisfy us in the morning with thy mercy."

Our souls will delight to hide in the secret of his presence to learn the sweet lessons of love that enable us to resist the temptations continually thrown into our paths.

There, under the shadow of his wing, we will tell him all our sorrows and our fears. His ear is ever ready to listen patiently to our groanings and his lips always uttering tender words which cheer the drooping soul.

He will often reprove us, but his pure eye can find within our hearts sins that we hardly knew were there; so let us thank him for reminding us of our errors and leading us into the path of righteousness.

"Would you like to know the sweetness of the secret of the Lord?
Go and hide beneath his shadow, this shall then be your reward;
And whene'er you leave the silence of that happy meeting-place
You must mind and bear the image of the Master in your face."

O, fellow-Endeavorers, let our watchword for ninety-eight be, "Every Christian in Texas a comrade of the Quiet Hour."

"Father, help us during the coming years to draw near to thee each day by spending many quiet hours in the secret of thy presence, and we will love thee more and praise thee forever. Amen!"

Flora's Rabbit.

MARY COBB.

One cold rainy evening, in the late spring, little Flo was in the garden, carefully examining the beds in which her flowers had been planted. Hearing some one passing along the road, she looked up and saw a man, who had just moved into the neighborhood. He was a kind-hearted man, and as he greeted her pleasantly he held out his hand in which was a little dark-colored animal, and kindly said, "I have a little rabbit, it is cold, hungry and wet. Would you like to have it for a pet?"

Flo gladly accepted it, and almost forgetting to thank him, she bounded into the house to show her treasure. Her mamma advised her to wrap it up in some flannel and leave it until it was warm and dry. This she did and at once began to talk about what she would call it.

After seaching her little mind an hour or more for a suitable name, she decided to call it "Bunny." Bridget said that was a squirrel's name. To this little Flo replied, after studying a minute, "I guess I'll change the style and have it a rabbit's name." Though Bridget laughed the rabbit was called Bunny.

Flo now began to wonder if the little animal was hungry. She coaxed Bridget to warm some milk and then tried to feed Bunny, but he absolutely refused to drink.

Now Flo's bedtime had come, so Bunny was put to bed in a little box and Flo also retired.

I need not tell you of the pleasant dreams she had that night, in which Bunny played an important part, but her eyes were scarcely open the next morning when she sprang from her bed and ran to the box in which Bunny slept, only to find that he believed in rising with the sun and had acted accordingly. Flo's eyes filled with tears; mamma said that he could not get out of the house and was hidden behind something. Our little girl's face brightened, and she began the long search in which the whole family joined.

After we all had become discouraged and Bridget had repeatedly declared that Pussy knew something about Bunny, if she only chose to tell it, Tom looked under the bookcase and saw a little dark-colored ball that had ears. He excitedly told Flo to see what was under the bookcase, as his hand was so large he couldn't get it under far enough to reach back in the corners.

With tears in her eyes she put her little hand under, when out something jumped, and it started across the floor. Mamma just had a glimpse of it and jumping on a chair she screamed, "There goes a mouse." A second look showed that it was only Bunny.

While papa and Tom were laughing themselves hoarse, mamma, blushing, climbed down from her place of safety and Flo danced with delight. Meanwhile, Bridget had closed the doors and after running from one corner to another she succeeded in catching the frightened little animal.

Flo was sure it was hungry now, after having such vigorous exercise, and this time her attempts at trying to teach it to drink were successful. By this time mamma's fear had subsided and she laughed heartily to see it put its little tongue out at first one side of its mouth and then the other. Seeing that it was awkward about drinking, she donated some of her young cabbage plants and Tom brought some clover leaves for it. But contrary little Bunny seemed to think he was too young for such coarse food and would not touch them.

Flo as well as Tom had great fun with Bunny and planned to go to grandma's that afternoon to show her how Bunny could drink. However, the rain just poured, so they were obliged to stay at home. This disappointed them, but Flo busied herself by laying more plans and even engaged Tom as a carpenter to build a house for Bunny.

That night Bunny was put to bed in a deeper box, so Flo was sure that he could not get out. The next morning, to her great disappointment, he was gone, and though repeated search was made, Bunny was nowhere to be found.

We could not imagine what had become of him until Bridget said that the kitchen door blew open sometime during the night and remained open until morning. This solved the mystery and filled Flo's heart fuller of sorrow than it had been of joy, the evening she received the pet.

That afternoon she climbed into her mamma's lap and, with tears in her eyes said, "Mamma, how do you suppose Bunny could run away and make me feel so bad after I had been so good to him when he was helpless?" Mamma said, "Bunny is just like people. You know we are helpless and our Father in heaven takes care of us, but sometimes we do naughty things. Then we do not love him. We are trying to get away from him, just as Bunny was trying to get away from you, when he hid under the bookcase and you know Bunny kept on trying and trying to get away and at last he succeeded. When we keep doing nauhgty things, we keep getting farther and farther away from our Heavenly Father and often succeed in getting clear away. This makes him feel much worse than you do about Bunny."

Flo was silent a long time and then said, decidedly, "I am never going to be naughty again, for I love Jesus and don't want to make him feel bad about me as I do Bunny."

Sail On.

IRA M. BOSWELL.

He who upon life's unknown sea
Some unseen danger fears
Will never great in this world be,
Nor live beyond his years.
O, youth, there's nought behind, life's ocean lies before.
Be brave, unfurl thy sails,
And lift thy anchor from the shallow shore.
Know this: True courage never fails.
Wouldst thou thy impress leave
Upon thy fellowman,
The battling waves of ocean cleave,
Depart the smilling land.
If on thy ship, O, youthful soul,
Fears and doubts in mutiny arise,
Bid hope and courage still be bold,
Press onward toward the prize.
When tempests howl and lightnings dart,
And thunders shake the sea,
Sail on, fear not, have heart,
Let faith thy pilot be.
And when the sun into the deep
Hath plunged his burning face,
Sail on, let hope not sleep;
Nor fear usurp his place—
Sail on, though night with clouds be dark,
Nor pause to look behind;
For on the troubled track of thy frail bark
The light of duty's star will shine.
When in the night no stars appear,
Then to thy task with courage bend,
The breaking day will bring thee cheer—
Thy journey soon will end.
Soon o'er the waves the sun will glow,
And in the hopeful morning clear
The floating driftwood strange will show
Some undiscovered land is near.
Sail on to where the water's blue
Break on the shore with many a laughing wave:
Reward is for the good and true;
The victory's for the brave.
Now plant thy banner deep into the soil,
Its silken folds to the breeze unfurled,
Then know:—There is no gain without its toil;
'Tis work that makes the world.
When base ingratitude shall bind thee with his chains,
Have thou no fear: his purple robes will rot.
With each succeeding year thy reputation gains,
Thy name, thy deeds, shall never be forgot.
Sail on, sail on, whatever be the wind,
Give God thy precious soul;
Trust self, trust God, trust all mankind,
Through storms you'll reach the goal.

Short Stories.

A very rich man once upon a time chanced also—strange to say—to be a very unhappy man, and offered an immense sum of money to any one that would make him happy.

A philosopher brought to him a new game that he had invented. It was a good game, and whoever invents a good game does a good deed. But in a few days the rich man wearied of the game.

Came next a philosopher who set the rich man to work sawing boards and planing them and making things; and for a time he was very happy, for labor is a great lightener of the heart. But one day he could think of nothing else to make, and of no place to put it after it was made, so that all his gloom returned.

Whereupon came a third philosopher, who set the rich man to doing things for other people. And the rich man has been happy ever since.

Men who are always in a hurry, and most men are, want a soap for the toilet that will lather quickly and freely in hot or cold water. Other soaps than Ivory may have this quality, but will likely contain alkali, which is injurious to the skin. Ivory Soap is made of pure vegetable oils, no alkali; produces a white, foamy lather, that cleanses thoroughly and rinses easily and quickly. Money cannot buy a better soap for the toilet.

Of the late French Senator Renaud, the Kolnishe Zeitung tells the following anecdote:

When Renaud first came as senator to Paris, he engaged a room at a hotel and paid a month's rent—one hundred and fifty francs—in advance. The proprietor asked if he would have a receipt.

"It is not necessary," replied Renaud; "God has witnessed the payment."

"Do you believe in God?" sneered the host.

"Most assuredly," replied Renaud; "don't you?"

"Not I, Monsieur."

"Ah," said the senator, "I will take a receipt, if you please."—Congregationalist.

Tho Homiletic Review tells the following characteristic story on Sam Jones:

Having been invited to hold meetings in Dr. Talmage's Brooklyn church, he called upon the latter gentleman before the first meeting. Talmage was a little shocked at the evangelist's shabby apparel, and asked him if he would accept a new suit of clothes. The couple visited a clothing store, and Sam Jones was arrayed in new raiment and decorated with a silk hat.

At the meeting Talmage introduced him as the "Rev. Samuel P. Jones, from Georgia."

Then the evangelist made this astonishing speech: "Yes, the Rev. Samuel P. Jones, from Georgia; and this is the new suit of clothes and the hat your pastor has presented to me. If your pastor had as much of the grace of God in his heart as he has pride, he would convert all Brooklyn, and would not need me!"

Once Spurgeon passed a stonemason who, between every stroke of his hammer, cursed and swore. Mr. Spurgeon laid his hand on his shoulder, and looking kindly at him said, "You are an adept at swearing. Can you also pray?" With another oath he replied, "Not very likely." Holding up five shillings, Mr. Spurgeon said if he would promise never to pray he would give him that. "That is easily earned," said the man, with a fresh oath, and put it in his pocket.

When Spurgeon left, the man began to feel a little queer. When he went home his wife asked him what ailed him, and he told here. "It is Judas' money!" said the man, and, on a sudden impulse, he threw it into the fire. The wife found it and took it out, and discovered who had given it to him. The man took it back to Spurgeon, who conversed long with him, warning him, and at length was the means of saving him. He became an attached member of his flock, and henceforth his home became the abode of peace.—The Standard.

When General Grant was a boy his mother one morning found herself without butter for breakfast, and sent him to borrow some from a neighbor. Going, without knocking, into the house of his neighbor, whose son was then at West Point, young Grant overheard a letter read from the son stating that he had failed in examination and was coming home. He got the butter, took it home, and without waiting for breakfast, ran down to the office of the Congressman from that district.

"Mr. Hamar," said he, "will you appoint me to West Point!"

"No, so and so is there and has three years to serve."

"But suppose he should fail, will you send me?"

Mr. Hamar laughed. "If he doesn't go through, no use for you to try."

"Promise you'll give me a chance, Mr. Hamar, anyhow."

Mr. Hamar promised.

The next day the defeated lad came home and the Congressman, laughing at Uly's sharpness, gave him the appointment. "Now," said Grant, "it was my mother's being out of butter that made me General and President." But it was his own shrewdness to see the chance and promptness to seize it, that urged him upwards.—Christian Advocate.

Can't isn't "in it"
When there is work to be done.
Can is awake,
Can't is a fake,
This is the way the world is run.
Can is at school;
Can't is a fool,
And always is thinking of fun.
Can is a worker;

Can is a master,

Can is a man;
Let can't be can;
With success, then, will life's work be done.

What I Live For.

I live for those who love me,
Whose hearts are kind and true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit too;
For all human ties that bind me,
For the task my God assigned me,
For the bright hopes yet to find me,
And the good that I can do.

I live to learn their story
Who suffered for my sake;
To emulate their glory,
And follow in their wake—
Bards, patriots, martyrs, sages,
The heroic of all ages,
Whose deeds crowd history's pages,
And time's great volume make.

I live to hold communion
With all that is divine,
To feel there is a union
'Twixt Nature's heart and mine;
To profit by affliction,
Reap truth from fields of fiction,
Grow wiser from conviction,
Fulfill God's grand design.

I live to hail that season
By gifted ones foretold,
When men shall live by reason,
And not alone by gold;
When man to man united,
And every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted
As Eden was of old.

I live for those who love me,
For those who know me true,
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my coming too;
For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

The Floors in Summer.

I believe in bare floors in the kitchen and dining-room for summer, for they are so easy to keep clean, and so much cooler than when covered with carpet. It is a positive rest to one's eyes to see a room without chair and picture-scarfs, lambrequins and other dust-catchers, and with only the necessary furniture and bare floors. Keep out the flies with screens, and let in the air and sunshine. Paint or oil the floors, or if they are too rough to look well uncovered, get oilcloth or linoleum for summer, but do not buy a heavy wool carpet. A few minutes' work every other day will suffice to keep them clean and free from dust.

Neither linoleum nor oilcloth should ever be scrubbed with a brush or mopped with hot water. Heat the water until it is lukewarm, and dissolve enough pearline in it to make a good suds. Now wash your oilcloth, changing the water frequently as it grows dark. Nothing causes it to grow dull and grimy so quickly as washing it with insufficient or dirty water. Mop a small place, then rinse with clean water and wipe dry; proceed in this way until the floor is cleansed and the entire surfice will look bright and clear like new oilcloth. Oiled or painted floors are cleaned in the same way. E. J. C.

Literature.

"Organic Evolution Considered."

I have just finished reading this "Little Drab Book," by my friend, Prof. A. Fairhurst, of Kentucky University, and published by the Christian Publishing Company, of St. Louis. There are six things I want to say about it:

1. It is a thoroughly readable book. It has a breezy freshness of style, a logical piquancy of argument and a lucid force of statement which held me with absorbed interest to the close. Books on such themes the unscientific reader expects to find dry and tough as the rind of a pomegranate, but this is a marked exception. It is full of juice from cover to cover.

2. I love the modesty of the book. It makes no loud or boasted claims. It does not crow over the eminent men whose theories it combats. It recognizes their title to respect and honor for what they have done in the various fields of scientific research, while making bold to differ from some of their conclusions. The world can stand a considerable increase of this quality in books on this subject.

3. I love also its candor. The author has nothing of the bigot in his make-up. He is always ready to admit the force of facts which may not be favorable to his side of the case. He often announces his conclusions after pages of close and lusty argument in language far less dogmatic than they would easily bear. Such a spirit tends greatly to give me confidence in an author.

4. I was much impressed by the strength of the "Little Drab Book." There is nothing puerile about its reasonings. They grapple the merits of the question in a thoroughly robust fashion. The Professor's stronghold is in handling facts, and there are places in this book where the way he does it can be described only by the word masterly.

5. I must express my gratitude for the instruction the book has given me. Not only for the fresh conviction it has revived of the vulnerableness of the evolution theories, but for important information concerning such subjects as "Instinct," "Rudimentary Organs," "Paleontology," "Design in Nature," "Embryology," etc., which are of no small value to me.

6. And finally, I am glad to have read the book for the strengthening of my faith, which has come from it. My faith in a personal God, in the truth of revelation, in immortality, in miracles, in the supernatural origin of Christianity have all received fresh confirmation from this little book of 386 pages.

And what has thus been a pleasure and a benefit to me I cordially commend to others. No man can read this book without mental and moral stimulation. No preacher can read it without adding very decidedly to the equipment needful to the success of his work. George Darsie.

ELISHA'S LAST WORDS.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

Elisha's prophetic career covers a longer period than that of any other of those great men who stood to interpret the will of God to Israel. Moses' leadership lasted for forty years; Samuel acted as judge and prophet for perhaps as long; Isaiah's ministry was of about the same duration; Jeremiah continued for half a century to proclaim the purpose of Jehovah to Jerusalem, but Elisha must have spent not less than sixty years as a prophet, and perhaps seventy-five. It was in the reign of Ahab that Elijah cast his mantle over him and called him to be his helper; his death occurred in the days of Joash, of Israel. Meantime, Ahaziah and Jehoram, sons of Ahab; Jehu, a general who put to death the whole race of Ahab; Jehoahaz, a son of Jehu and Joash or Jehoash, another son of Jehu, had all reigned.

But this long period marks a change in the position of prophecy as recognized by the royal house. Since the days of David the prophets were of small moment in the state. Solomon had elevated the priests and neglected the prophets. The kings of the northern kingdom had followed this evil example, and had even disarranged the priestly functions, putting obscure men into the sacred office. When Elijah appeared in the reign of Ahab the religion of Jehovah was in deadly danger of total extinction, and throughout his career as a prophet he scarcely gained further attention than to occasionally appear upon the scene as a reminder of the divine judgment impending over the corrupt court. This was the condition when Elisha began his work. He was unknown to the king, though he lived in the capital. But his patriotic services during the Syrian wars brought him into notice, and gradually he became known and respected, not only among the common people, but by the kings as well. When he lay at the point of death Joash came to see him, and exhibited a probably sincere affection for him, and a feeling of public calamity at his death. Elisha had spoken of his master Elijah as the defender of the state. but now it is the king himself who calls the prophet the chariot and horseman of Israel. The distress of the nation had, no doubt, assisted to bring about this result. Never did the power of the kingdom sink so low as in the reign of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, whose poor remnant of an army was at the mercy of the new dynasty of Hazael of Syria (2 Kings 13:7). Some little improvement was made under the leadership of the king's brother Joash, who presently came to the throne and who was able later on to make war with Amaziah, of Judah. But Israel had learned by the lesson to respect in some degree the men of God, and the work of Elisha must have prepared for that striking appearance of the prophetic spirit in the following reign, that of Jeroboam II., during which both Amos and Hosea preached.

But Elisha was essentially a prophet of the older order. With all his quiet ways and kindly feeling for the common people, he had not a little of the Elijah spirit. He had been in Damascus and seen something of the power of that kingdom with which Israel was at such odds for centuries (2 Kings 8:7-15). His spirit even as death approached was full of a fierce desire to sweep back the enemies of his nation beyond the eastern border, and he sought to infuse some of his fire into the too-easy nature of the king. The moment was opportune. Joash was touched with regret as he looked on the face of the dying prophet. Elisha roused himself and begged the king to send out his defiance against the Syrians in the characteristic fashion of the East. The king drew his bow, with the arrow pointed eastward through the open window. The prophet laid his weak hands on the king's in token that the divine blessing was on the royal challenge. Then the king shot the arrow far to the east, toward the camp of the enemy. But the prophet was not yet satisfied. The arrow was the signal that war was to be begun again, and the promise of Elisha was that it should bring deliverance. But he wanted to test the purpose of the king by having him thrust arrows into the earth. To him the action was not significant, and he was not of sufficiently energetic nature to do any more than was necessary. Elisha saw the meaning of the act. The king was not the man to be a great leader, such as the situation demanded. Aggressiveness and persistence are necessary qualities to bring to any enterprise. God can make little use of listless, easy-going people, who never undertake anything except under pressure, and have no persistency after a work has been begun. The victory could never be very decisive with such a leader.

A great man's power abides after he is dead. Even the bones of Elisha could revive the body hastily thrust into his grave in the time of panic. A story of this kind could only be preserved in a circle where the name and fame of Elisha were assured. It was a delight in later years to recount the wonderful things associated with his name. The number of these preserved in our accounts of the prophet's life shows how his story took hold of the popular mind.

But Elisha's words came true. Israel was sinful, but God was gracious. His covenant with the patriarchs could not be forgotten. Human sin is not as great as divine grace. The kingdom had sunk to a low level under Jehoahaz, but the promise to Joash was redeemed, and thrice over victory perched on the banners of Israel. Moreover, the successful war with Judah (2 Kings 14:8-16) gave the nation new confidence in itself, and prepared the way for the brilliant successes under the following king, Jeroboam II., in whose days Israel reached the pinnacle of material prosperity.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

A good life gets itself understood and appreciated at last. Because the prophets were often men of warlike impulses is no justification for indiscriminate fighting to-day. War is a dreadful necessity at best, and is less and less to be justified as the nations learn the will of God. Energy and persistence are necessary factors in every successful life. The influence of a life for good or evil does not end at death. If God treated us only as we deserved, for how little could we hope! It is the graciousness of our Father that fills us with wonder and love. God always keeps his promises.

TOPICS FOR SEPTEMBER 4.

REPENTANCE AND CONVERSION—WHAT ARE THEY?

(Ezek. 18:20-32; Acts 26:19, 20.)

A thief is caught in the act and is placed in prison. He is exceedingly cast down and sorry he did wrong. But he is more sorry that he was caught. This is not repentance. He might be cautious next time, but in all probability he would repeat the offense upon a favorable opportunity. Or, on the other hand, a drunkard may see that liquor is injuring his constitution and impairing his business success, and he may deliberately resolve to drink no more, and possible he might keep the resolution. This is not repentance, either. Repentance is more than sorrow for a deed or a resolution to forsake a certain practice. It is more than these two combined. Repentance is that godly sorrow for wrong-doing which recognizes the act as sinful, and which abhors the sin and determines to forsake it.

Possibly the repentant one may not succeed in putting his sin forever away. Most of us are unable to avoid the repetition of sins of which we have repented perhaps many times. But God is infinitely tender and merciful. As a father pities his children, so he pities us, and until seventies of seventies will he forgive those who repent. But the sin must not become so common with us that, grown familiar with its face, we first endure, then pity, then embrace. Our attitude must be one of continual loathing, such as Paul felt when he cried, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" as if he were carrying a decaying corpse upon his shoulders all the time. Then shall the comfort come to us in Paul's next breath, "I thank God through Jesus Christ!" We should not be forever mourning about sin, though forever repenting of sin. We should strive to be at peace and at rest, though forever should we "hate the sin that made thee mourn." We should seek for the Christian's calm, yet be forever striving against sin. Even when we have conquered, perhaps, each individual besetting sin, we shall still feel the general sense of sinfulness that stands between us and God and shall still yearn to remove it. Is not repentance, then, a state of soul which comes to the Christian, not once nor twice, but many a time? And may it not possibly be ever a continuous state?

A great deal of mystification has arisen over the word "conversion," because of a poor translation which runs all through our Authorized Version, and which has been corrected in the Revised Version. Every Endeavorer should own a revised New Testament. One can be bought for eight cents, and he should take his concordance and look up every passage in which the words convert and conversion occurs in the King James Version and read the same in the Revised. His eyes will open, then, to the meaning of this simple word, which has been wrapped in mystery. "Be converted" is not used in the numberless passages in which it formerly occurred. The only expression is, "turn" or "turn yourself." And so it is found in the Revised Version. Nobody is going to turn us to God. We cannot "be converted." We must turn ourselves. We must convert ourselves from disobedient servants to trusting and loving children. Whoever turns to God performs this act of conversion. It is a thing to do, not to receive. No man receives conversion, he converts himself, or rather turns about. He is not turned by some outside hand; he turns. You are walking along and you cross a friend's path. You pay no attention to him. By and by you feel sorry, turn back, speak to him and walk with him. When that friend is God, your act is conversion. You turn to God. The act, of course, is accompanied by belief in him, trust that he will receive you kindly, sorrow that you have neglected and wronged him, but the essential thing is that you turn. This turning in some instances may be calm, deliberate and, so far as the world sees, unaccompanied with strong emotion. In others it may be a convulsion of the whole nature by which the inmost depths are stirred. In all, a new creature, a new companion, a new child of God has been born into the world and there is joy in the presence of the angles.

BUTLER.

Sybil S. Butler, wife of the late Pardee Butler, entered into rest on Lord's day morning, August 7th, at nine o'clock. The passing from the shores of time of this excellent Christian woman deserves more than a passing notice. Sybil Carleton was born in Sullivan, Ohio, July 4, 1823. On the 17th of August 1843 she was united in marriage to Bro. Pardee Butler. In 1850 they moved to Iowa, near Davenport, Bro. Bulter preaching the gospel in Eastern Iowa and Western Illinois. In 1855 they came to Kansas, settling on a farm a few miles west of Atchinson, near a village now called Pardee. Those were troublesome times in Kansas—the dark days just before the storm of civil strife broke upon our beloved land. Bro. Butler's ardent support of the Union cause, the perils in which that support placed him, his famous forced ride down the Missouri River on a raft, are events well known in all this part of the country. He was a pioneer, too, in preaching the ancient gospel in this state. The fruit of his successful seed-sowing has been gathered, and will continue to be, in the regions round about. He was an intelligent, earnest advocate of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. He passed to his reward on the 20th of November, 1888. In all the labors and trials and triumphs of her honored husband, Sister Butler shared with splendid fidelity. Cultured, refined, beautiful in heart and life, a Christian wife and mother, training her children to know and fear the Lord, she was a queen among women. There can be no more exalted station in life than that so worthily occupied by Sister Butler. To Bro. and Sister Butler were born seven children, four of whom died when young. The three grown are Sister Rosetta B. Hastings, wife of Bro. Z. S. Hastings, a minister of the gospel; Bro. George C. Butler and Bro. Charles P. Butler, all of whom live in this county. Sister Butler's two sisters, Mrs. A. E. Riley, of Cummings, and Mrs. C. O. Dunshee, of Pardee, this county, were present at the funeral. Sister Rosetta B. Hastings has contributed much to our religious literature and is widely known. When the writer first came to Atchinson, a little more than fifteen years ago, Bro. and Sister Butler were among the first of his acquaintances and warmest friends, and many a time did he enjoy the hospitality and fellowship of their delightful home. It was Sister Butler's desire that he preach the funeral sermon, which was done at the Pardee church on Monday, Aug. 8th, at 2 P. M., the subject being, "The Positiveness of the Christian Faith" (2 Cor. 5:1), a theme deemed especially fitting, considering the firm character of both Bro. and Sister Butler and their lifelong advoacy of the principles of the Current Reformation. The services were attended by a large company of people, particularly the earlier settlers of Eastern Kansas. Bro. Claude Haskell, the pastor of the church at Pardee, had charge of the services and Bro. Marris, who had known Bro. and Sisters Butler for more than forty years, spoke tenderly of the blessed followship he had with them. The body of Sister Butler was laid beside that of her husband in the Pardee cemetery. WALTER SCOTT PRIEST.

COPE.

Died, in St. Louis, Mo., July 20, 1898, Mrs. Mary E. Cope, nee Ramsey, wife of A. J. Cope, aged forty eight. She was born in Garrett County, Ky., and moved to Missouri in 1870. She united with the Christian Church in Sedalia in 1887, and at the time of her death was a member of the First Christian Church, of St. Louis. Her remains were interred in the cemetery here, that they might rest by the dust of loved ones who had preceded her to that better land. The husband and three sons survive to mourn the loss of a most devoted wife and mother, and three brothers and one sister also weep that their loved one has passed away. May our Father guide these bereaved ones and bring them and all who mourn, at last, into that land where there is no death. J. P. PINKERTON.

KINNEY.

John Kinney died July 27, 1898. He was born in Montgomery county, Ky., near Mt. Sterling, December 25, 1829. In 1847 he was married to Caroline Wymore. After 11 years of happy home life she passed away. He served his country in the war o f 1861 and in 1867 married Eliza Yocum. A short time previous to this he was converted and united with the Church of Christ at Sycamore where he resided and officiated as elder till 1869, when he and family moved first to Minnesota, thence to Iowa, and in 1871 to Nebraska; then, after 23 years, to Phill county, Kas., the place of his departure from earth. Our brother lived a peaceful life and died in the triumphs of a living faith. A wife, six children and many friends mourn his departure to the better land.

MORRIS.

Millie L. (Kenney) Morris, wife of Reddick Morris, died on her 25th birthday, July 31, 1898, at Kenney, Ill., where her whole life was spent. Two small boys are bereft of her motherly guidance. She is mourned by husband, aged mother and a large circle of relatives and friends. Hers was a heart which seemed not to have known doubt. She gave it, in childhood, to the Savior, whose service was her delight in life, and in whose name she triumphed.

A. F. H. SAW.

WHEREAS, God, merciful in his severe as in his good providences, has removed our brother, Rev. A. F. H. Saw, from his missionary labors among us to his eternal and abundant reward in the joy of his Lord, we, the members of the five societies represented in Nanking, while we submit to the will of our Heavenly Father, desire to record our deep sorrow on account of his death and to express our thankfulness for the life and work which has so suddenly ceased.

His work during the 12 years spent among us is remembered with great admiration. The fragrance of his devoted and faithful service and his meek and quiet spirit will ever remain an inspiration to us. In love and good work he was not behind those who abound in all things and we will mourn that now we shall see his face no more. We desire to record our sincere condolence with the two families so greatly bereaved by this apparent early departure of their son, our brother, and especially we would express our sympathy with her whom we commend to our God who ever careth for the widow. Also that we desire to express our heartfelt regret that our sister mission is called upon at this time in so sudden and trying way to part with a brother beloved and that the society and friends in England and America have to endure this irreparable loss of a faithful and successful missionary. We would also express the sense of our own loss to the work in the missionary work in this field from which we can so illy afford to spare from our small number one so efficient in his chosen work. And we would express further our hope that his society may make good our great loss by speedily sending a number to take up the pressing work which by its urgency as seen by our brother was no small part of the cause which makes us all now mourn;

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to Mrs. Saw, to the family and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Saw, to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and that they be recorded in the minutes of our Association.

"Princely Knights of Character Castle."

The Home Light, a Boston monthly, from the July number of which the subjoined article is taken, stands, as its name implies, for the guardianship of the home. That it should see in the "secrecy" feature of the "P. K. C. C." (recently noticed in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST querist column) that which is inimical to the highest interests of the boys is not suprising. Presumably tha CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with its wonted spirit of fairness will not hesitate to print for its readers this review of the Princely Knights Secret Society.

W. P. KEELER.

Chicago, July 30, 1898.

"CHARACTER CASTLE."

In this era of secret societies why should the boys be overlooked? If signs and grips and all the paraphernalia of secrecy are a good thing for his elders why not for him who is "father of the man?"

"The Princely Knights of Character Castle," is a boy's secret society seemingly founded on the above idea. We have read carefully the constitution of the Order, and also several copies of The Boy's Friend, which is its special organ; and while we credit its originators with the best of motives, the Home Light would be untrue to its name if it did not throw its warning search rays on any attempt to solve the "Boy Problem" which involves the use of secret methods; which "appeals"—we quote from the official outline of its work—"to the boy's desire to learn secrets, his love of banners and regalia, and his desire for entertainment."

Why think to build up in a boy a strong and enduring character by using the weakest elements in his nature for the substructure? When men would rear an impregnable fortress do they use for the foundations "wood, hay, stubble?" Do they build it on the sand, or on the rock?

That the boy when he enters must sign a pledge "never to use intoxicating liquor in any form; to abstain from the use of profane or impure language; to discourage the use of tobacco in any form; to strive to be pure in body and mind"—all this is eminently praiseworthy. And as to its work: "To teach boys to be heroes at heart; to endure temptation and not to do wrong; to have love for all mankind; to be pure in morals and patriotic in deed"—what can we want more? Nothing but the elimination of that secrecy which spoils it all, as one crack in a costly vase renders it valueless; as one drop of poison in a cup of the purest water will make it a savor of death to him who drinks thereof.

"The Princely Knights," we are told editorially in the March number of The Boy's Friend, "is a fraternal order of men that admits boys into its membership." That these men are largely Masons, Oddfellows or members of some other secret society goes without saying. In the April issue we find an editorial strongly urging fraternity men to make it a point to join the order and thus become the means of helping "tempted and inexperienced boys from fifteen to twenty years of age." This appeal to lodgemen is just as natural and fitting as would be an appeal to church members on behalf of the Christian Endeavor Society, or the Epworth League. It is right that the parent, whether church or lodge, should support its own offspring.

But let us do a little serious thinking on the influence that boys are likely to receive at the most impressionable age, from intimate association with men who wear the square and compass, the three links, or perhaps a number of secret society badges together. In our public schools instructors are forbidden to wear the peculiar garb of any religious sect or order because of the influence on the pupil. So the display of these secret society emblems on the persons of men and to whom they are taught to look as mentors must be a constant object-lesson before the eyes of the boys, leading them to the resolve that when old enough, they, too, will join, and thus have a right to sport the same. What is the honor of a "Princely" neophyte compared to the glory of a full-fledged Mason, a Knight Templar, or a Mystic Shriner, or something else that will admit of titles and feathers and aprons galore? Do not the founders of the P. C. frankly admit that they appeal to that part of boy nature which is pleased with such things, and supply in the way of regalia and secret work just what will cause it to develop along that line?

The secrecy, as we have said, is the one feature that vitiates and corrupts what might otherwise be a good thing. It creates an artificial distinction which is the spirit of caste. The most "Princely" soul must stand aside unrecognized if he cannot give the grip and sign. And what use for secrecy any way? It gives the lie to its professed object. Why should a purpose so praiseworthy hide away from the light as if its deeds were evil? Why should a "Princely" character be best evolved under the cover of darkness where all kinds of human vermin creep and burrow? Why should an eagle created to soar with his eye on the sun seek the habitat of the owl and the bat?—ED.

The Boys' Friend and Character Castle.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Permit me to thank you for your most fraternal commendation of the Boys' Friend in a recent number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, also for your nice and pointed reply to Bro. W. P. Keeler's letter in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 28th. I am grateful to Bro. K. for noting the growth and improvement of the Boys' Friend, but I regret that he so greatly misrepreseted the purpose and relations of this paper.

The Boys' Friend is the friend of all boys, whether they be in Christian or unchristian families. It stands for an idea, namely, the bringing of noble and experienced men into a personal, friendly and vital companionship with all boys everywhere; and that during the most dangerous period of the boy's life, the adolescence. Hence, the Boys' Friend is primarily a paper for the friend of the boy; secondarily, for the boy of the age named. The chief aim of the paper is to inspire in the hearts of men a true love for any boy as he stnds before God a prince most royal, "The Child of a King," meriting the friendship of friends of the Prince eternal. That this has always been its purpose may be seen from the following statements taken from the initial number of the paper:

As friend of boys we shall defend all their innocent amusements and pleasures, and in every laudable way seek to purify the joy and intensify the happiness of boyhood. Much, however, as we desire the friendship of all boys and men, we shall never hesitate to draw the sword and strike fearlessly at all forces that tend to mar or destroy the physical health, the intellectual growth, the moral purity or the spiritual happiness of our boys.

* * * * *

While The Boys' Friend is emphatically nonpartisan and undenominational, it is an ally of home, school, church and state; and we intend that none shall surpass us in love's labor for Christ, church, home and native land. We covet a hearty welcome in every home and the loving friendship of every boy in America.

We desire not only to make The Boys' Friend of interest and profit to the boys, but of equal profit to men. We can scarcely hope to do a better work for our boys than to turn the hearts of the fathers to their sons; to establish a more intimate and stronger friendship between good men and boys; a friendship that will place before the boy the same high standard of purity of thought, speech and life that is placed before the girl. Indeed, we plead for a friendship that will cause society to chaperone her lads as well as her lasses.

The Boys' Friend is no more the advocate of "Knights of Character Castle" than it stands ready to do any good work for boys. Whatever helps boys to nobler living will have my personal friendship and the Boys' Friend will seek to sustain the most friendly relationship to that work, whether it be secret or public, and if it has an evil tendency no one will expose it more quickly than the Boys' Friend.

The statement of Bro. Keeler, that for the enrollment of its youthful readers in the Society of Character Castle the paper "mainly exists," is utterly false. The Boys' Friend will exist whether an other name is enrolled in Character Castle or not. Personally, the editor of the Boys' Friend is favorable to Character Castle work, because the princely knight idea is in harmony with that of the Boys' Friend. If at any time he finds Character Castle work evil in its tendencies, at once that fact will be made known. So long as he sees the work to be pure and helpful the editor will defend it. Yours for princely boyhood,

A. W. CONNOR.

The McGarvey Institute.

The Institute opened Monday evening with a sermon by Dr. B. E. Dawson, of Butler, Mo. President McGarvey delivered two lectures on the Pentateuch Tuesday. He contended for the Mosaic authorship, and his arguments seem to the writer to be unanswerable. The plain statements of the O. T. and N. T. writers, the belief of the Jews, the affirmation of Jesus Christ and the fact of such authorship being unquestioned for nearly eighteen centuries, was made to stand out clearly against the arbitrary analysis and guesswork of the critics. King Stark, of Lamonte, preached Tuesday evening. There were three lectures Wednesday and three Thursday; two on the knowledge of Jesus, based upon Phil. 2:5-8, and Luke 2: 52, were fully met by such passages as John 1:32, 33; 3:34, 35, and Luke 4:14, showing conclusively that whatever may have been the limitation of his knowledge from the incarnation to the beginning of his ministry, this was ended when he received the Holy Spirit without measure.

Pres. McGarvey believes in one Isaiah and that his book is one book. The position of the critics was shown to be untenable and mere guesswork.

All of these lectures were heard by large and deeply interested audiences. Our church and community have been richly blessed by the presence and instruction of this servant of God. It would be a great blessing if all of our churches could hear such a course of lectures. The people of Windsor will long remember the McGarvey Institute.

AN OPPORTUNITY.

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that has so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial posessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

In the history of the world there has never been a more opportune time for Protestantism to show the errors of Catholicism. The curtain has just risen revealing a long line of misrule and oppression by the Romish Church. It only now remains for the world to look on Rome's theater of action and decide for itself on the merits of the part she has played.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

True Charity, a plant divinely nursed,
Fed by the love from which it rose at first,
Thrives against hope, and, in the rudest scene,
Storms but enliven its unfading green;
Exuberant is the shadow it supplies,
Its fruits on earth, its growth above the skies.
To look at Him, who form'd us and redeem'd,
So glorious now, though once so disesteem'd;
To see a God stretch forth his human hand,
To uphold the boundless scenes of his command:
To recollect that, in a form like ours,
He bruised beneath his feet the infernal powers,
Captivity led captive, rose to claim
The wreath he won so dearly in our name;
That, throned above all height, he condescends
To call the few that trust in him his friends;
That, in the heaven of heavens, that space he deems
Too scanty for the exertion of his beams,
And shines, as if impatient to bestow
Life and a kingdom upon worms below;
That sight imparts a never-dying flame,
Though feeble in degree, in kind the same.
Like him the soul, thus kindled from above,
Spreads wide her arms of universal love;
And still, enlarged as she receives the grace,
Includes creation in her close embrace.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

Vol. xxxv. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, September 1, 1898. No. 35

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Peace Commission, as arranged at present, consists of Secretary Day, Senators Davis and Frye, Whitelaw Reid and Justice White. The latter has not as yet officially notified the President of his acceptance, but it is believed that he will accept the appointment. There has been an unusual hesitancy on the part of a number of public men to accept a position on this Commission. The chief reason of this, perhaps, is not simply that the Commission will have a very difficult and and delicate work to perform, but chiefly, no doubt, from political reasons. The results of the war may have important bearings in future political campaigns, and men who are looking for political promotion are exceedingly cautious abont taking any position that may compromise them in any way in the eyes of their constituency. The persons named, however, are of such character as to give weight to their ultimate decision. The Commission is to meet in Paris as soon as practicable to begin its work. The American members expect to sail for Paris about the middle of September. The sessions of the Commission will be held in the Salon des Ambassadors, through the courtesy of the French Government. It is probable that considerable time will be required to canvass all the questions that will be involved in the treaty of peace which they are to prepare. The indications are that Spain will exhaust all her resources of diplomacy in order to gain by peaceful artifice what she has lost in war.

The custom of celebrating the return of peace or the victory of arms by a parade of the victors, reaches far back into the dim twilight of history. The hundreds of thousands of people that thronged the banks of the Hudson on the 20th inst., to welcome the return of the North Atlantic squadron, under command of Rear Admiral Sampson, were moved by the same impulse that led the people of old to celebrate the exploits of Xenophon. For three hours the steam whistles of all sizes, and small guns along the shore, shrieked and boomed the enthusiasm of the people on the return of the naval heroes with their battleships. Early in the morning of the day mentioned, the New York, Iowa, Indiana, Brooklyn, Oregon and Texas, lay in New York Bay, while the admiral in command had no idea of the preparation for the big reception that awaited him. The shouts of the people were mingled with the booming cannons as the stately ships moved out of the bay into the Hudson on the way to Gen. Grant's tomb. A correspondent describes the entire width of the Hudson River as "a struggling, fluttering, darting mass of color, confusion and cheers." The tomb of the hero of Appomattox was the center of attraction, and just as the squadron began their return from that place there was a national salute of twenty-one guns fired. President McKinley, much to his regret, could not be present to witness the pageant, but four members of his Cabinet were there. It was a memorable occasion and one that will go down in history in connection with the close of the war which it celebrated.

The severe ordeal through which our navy passed at Santiago is telling upon the health of the various commanders. Admiral Schley, Capt. Evans and Capt. Clark are all reported ill as the result of the severe strain through which they have passed. Capt. Clark's condition is perhaps the most serious, and some time will be required before he regains his health. His long journey from San Francisco to Key West with the strain which it imposed during a large part of the time, would be a severe tax on any man's nerves. The whole nation sympathizes with these naval heroes, and will rejoice at their complete recovery. The burden of anxiety and official responsibility borne by the commanders of our army and navy in the time of war makes their position a more trying one than that of the common soldier whose physical hardships and privations are greater than those of the officers. The feeling that human life, the cause at stake and the nation's honor are all involved in the campaign, or blockade, or battle, for which they are responsible, is not calculated to promote sleep or relaxation of nerves. We are glad that both officers and private soldiers are to have a chance to rest, after the dangers and hardships of the Cuban campaign.

Gen. Shafter, who was sick a part of the time during the attack on Santiago, is coming home, and has turned over the command to Gen. Lawton. In an interview on the eve of embarking he expressed himself as highly satisfied with the success of the military operations in Cuba, and said that he desired to command no better army than that which he commanded during the campaign ending in the surrender of Santiago. He has been criticised for exposing his men unnecessarily to severities and dangers in pushing his attack upon that city, but we believe, in the light of subsequent developments, that his energy and haste in securing the surrender of the city are entirely justified. With a long siege our army would have been so decimated by sickness and death that the object of the campaign may have been thwarted, while the loss of life would have been greater than it has been. We believe he pursued the proper course in pushing his campaign to a successful issue, and that history will, in the main, justify his military operations. The difficulties that had to be overcome in the way of transportation and in the movements of the army can hardly be appreciated by those unacquainted with the country and with the nature of military movements. That there should have been, under all the circumstances, lack of medicines, provisions and suitable equipments at the front to make the soldiers comfortable is not at all surprising. The disposition to criticise, especially by those who are unacquainted with the facts, has led to some injustice toward Gen. Shafter, Secretary Alger and others, which we have no doubt time will correct. The irregularities complained of were no doubt in the main such as grew out of a freshly organized army, hurried to the front, and without that experience which is necessary to bring order out of confusion. A nation that depends on making its preparation for war after war has begun must expect such irregularities.

We are glad to note that the President has found it possible to take a little vacation from his official duties. The responsibility which he has borne during the past three or four months, with the care and anxiety attendant thereon, must have made severe demands on his physical strength and vitality. He is to visit his brother, Abner McKinley, at Summerset, Pa., and will extend his trip to Cleveland, O., and will visit the soldiers at Montauk, L. I. He has signified his desire for a quiet trip unattended by official ceremony and public demonstration. In consideration of his need for quiet and rest it is to be hoped that this wish will be respected. This will be the first vacation the President has taken since the war assumed a threatening aspect. Through all the trying scenes and incidents he has borne himself with a dignity and with a practical wisdom and foresight worthy of the head of a great nation. Our readers, regardless of politics, will join with us in wishing him a restful vacation.

The threatening attitude of the Philippine insurgents, and especially of their leader, Aguinaldo, we are glad to say, has yielded to the tact and firmness of Admiral Dewey and Gen. Merritt. The situation has greatly improved within the last few days. Aguinaldo has ordered all his men to lay down their arms and to resume their agricultural pursuits. He has also voluntarily opened the waterworks which he had under his control and the city is now amply supplied. Gen. Merritt is in control as military governor, and Gen. Otis has succeeded him as Commander-in-Chief of the American forces. Business is said to be on the boom, and order is being restored.

President McKinley has telegraphed his congratulations and thanks both to Rear Admiral Dewey and Gen. Merritt, and has received grateful acknowledgments from each. Gen. Merritt has notified the President that he does not require any more troops in the Philippines, which is in itself indicative of a more peaceful outlook than existed a few weeks ago.

On the 12th of August, with simple but impressive ceremonies, the Hawaiian Islands passed under the sovereignty of the United States Government. The ceremony of lowering the flag of the Hawaiian Repulic, and raising the Stars and Stripes, was witnessed by the assembled multitude with deepest interest. There were those whose eyes moistened to see the Hawaiian flag lowered, never more to be raised, while there was great rejoicing over the hoisting of the Stars and Stripes, never more perhaps, to be lowered. President Dole turned over the government and all public property to the United States, and Minister Sewall accepted it in behalf of our government. It is significant that this important event took place on the day of the signing of the protocol which marked the close of the war to which the annexation of Hawaii at this time is due. For the present the same officials will administer government in these islands and the same laws will be in force. This completes the process of adding this Pacific group of islands to our national domain, and gives us standing ground for looking after our interests in the far East.

Just at a time when the flames of war seem ready to burst forth between Russia and England the Czar of Russia has surprised the world by inviting the powers to an international council for the purpose of securing a real and lasting peace. Not since the close of our war with Spain has a more surprising and significant communication been given to the world. Some of the leading journals are disposed to look upon it as a new diplomatic freak, while others regard it as the sincere wish of the Russian Emperor. The Chronicle, London, says that it is one of the most striking documents of the century. Whatever may be the hopes or the fears of any person or journal concerning this message from the Czar it must be admitted that great and cogent reasons are presented in justification of his course and call; reasons that will go to the heart of every lover of good government, peace, prosperity and Christianity. What a grand thing it would be to usher in the 20th century of the Christian era with the mind of all great nations set upon the science of good government instead of the science of war. Then indeed will men begin to believe in the verities of Christianity and the Bible. The news seems almost too good to be believed, but let us hope and pray for the realization of the Czar's prayer and of a permanent peace for the 20th century as the result of the conference. This note was written by Count Muravieff, Foreign Minister, by order of Emperor Nicholas, and its purposes certainly entitle it to rank as one of the greatest state documents ever given to the world. It is a frank acknowledgment of the evils of war and declares for a higher object than conquests as the apology for governments. We give the text as it appeared in our dailies on last Monday morning:

"The maintenance of general peace and the possible reduction of the excessive armaments which weigh upon all nations, present themselves in existing conditions to the whole world as an ideal toward which the endeavors of all governments should be directed.

"The humanitarian and magnanimous ideas of His Majesty, the Emperor, my august master, have been won over to this view in the conviction that this lofty aim is in conformity with the most essential interests and legitimate views of all the Powers, and the Imperial Government thinks the present moment would be very favorable to seeking the means.

"International discussion is the most effectual means of insuring all people's benefit—a real, durable peace, above all putting an end to the progressive development of the present armaments.

"In the course of the last 20 years the longing for general appeasement has grown especially pronounced in the consciences of civilized nations and the preservation of peace has been put forward as an object of international policy. It is in its name that great states have concluded among themselves powerful alliances.

"It is better to guarantee peace that they have developed in proportions hitherto unprecedented their military forces and still continue to increase them without shrinking from any sacrifice.

"Nevertheless, all these efforts have not yet been able to bring about the beneficent results desired—pacification.

"The financial charges following the upward march strike at the very root of public prosperity. The intellectual and physical strength of the nation's labor and capital are most diverted from their natural application and are unproductively consumed. Hundreds of millions are devoted to acquiring terrible engines of destruction which, though to-day regarded as the last work of science, are destined to-morrow to lose all their value in consequence of some fresh discovery in the same field. National culture, economic progress and the production of wealth are either paralyzed or checked in development. Moreover, in proportion as the armaments of each Power increase, they less and less fulfill the objects the governments have set before themselves.

"The economic crisis, due in great part to the system of armaments l'outrance, and the continual danger which lies in this massing of war material, are transforming the armed peace of our days into a crushing blow, which the peoples have more difficulty in bearing.

"It appears evident that if this state of things were to be prolonged it would inevitably lead to the very cataclysm it is desired to avert, and the horrors thereof make every thinking being shudder in advance.

"To put an end to these incessant armaments and to seek the means of warding off the calamities which are threatening the whole world—such is the supreme duty to-day imposed upon all states.

"Filled with this idea, His Majesty has been pleased to command me to propose to all the governments whose representatives are accredited to the imperial court the assembling of a conference, which shall occupy itself with this grave problem.

"This conference will be, by the help of God, the happy presage for the century which is about to open. It would converge into one powerful focus the efforts of all states sincerely seeking to make the great conception of universal peace triumph over the elements of trouble and discord, and it would, at the same time, cement their agreement by a corporate consecration of the principles of equity and right whereon rests the security of the states and the welfare of the people."

Our soldiers at Santiago had a new realization of the meaning of the old phrase, "The heat and the burden of the day."

EXPANSION OR CONTRACTION—WHICH?

This is one of the burning questions raised by our recent conflict with Spain. It is not usually put in this form, but that is what it amounts to. It is a law of national and individual life that we must either expand or contract. When a tree ceases to grow it is not long until the process of decay sets in. The same is true of the individual and of the nation.

So far in our history we have been an expanding nation. Beginning with a narrow strip of country along the Eastern Seaboard, our territorial domain has expanded across the Alleghenys, across the Ohio, across the Mississippi and the Missouri, across the Rocky Mountains, and the Sierra Nevada on Westward to the Pacific Coast and Southward to the Gulf. Not content with this, we have extended our possessions to the Northwest to include the new territory of Alaska. Recently we have reached out into the Pacific Ocean and have raised the American flag over the Hawaiian group of island.

The question now is whether we have reached the limits of expansion, or whether we may justly add Porto Rico, which has already been virtually added, and any part or all of the Philippines. It is a source of gratification to every true American to know that nearly all of this vast domain has been won peaceably and that the spirit of conquest without regard to the rights of others has not been the controlling factor in our national expansion. The true principle to be applied to the present question which confronts us is that of fulfilling our national destiny, and the obligations we are under to the peoples of the islands in question. If the permanent occupation of Porto Rico or any part of the Philippines be necessary for the accomplishment of the moral purposes of this nation, and essesntial to the fulfillment of our obligation to impart to the people of these islands the blessings of civil and religious liberty which God has vouchsafed to us, then we should retain them, and such expansion is not a departure from the traditions of the past, but is in perfect harmony with our national history.

The contraction which would be the result of an opposite policy is not necessarily territorial contraction, but a contraction of the high purposes and missions of the nation. If we say the welfare of Cuba and of Porto Rico and of the Philippines is no concern to us, and leave them to their own fate, we will have entered upon a policy of national selfishness which would curtail our influence abroad and exert a paralyzing influence on that "enthusiasm of humanity" among us which has been the mainspring of our recent war with Spain. A nation may suffer from the contraction of its currency or of its territory, but the most fatal contraction that can befall any country is a contraction of its moral aims and purposes.

The question is equally applicable to the kingdom of God—Expansion or Contraction—Which? The kingdom of God is destined to be a universal kingdom. It is intended to cover the earth and exert its moral sway over the life of all its inhabitants. Are we to plan our religious campaigns and mobilize our spiritual forces in harmony with this broad aim, or shall we contract our plans for only a partial conquest? The moment we lose sight of God's purpose to redeem the whole world and to fill it with righteousnes, the process of moral contraction has set in, which will soon end in spiritual impotency and death. If we say the kingdom of God must not be extended so as to cover all the vast areas of human interest—its business, its politics, its legislation, its social life—because its principles are not adapted to trade and commerce and government, then we are contractionists. Our plans and purposes at once become out of harmony with God's purpose, and only failure can result. "We can do nothing against the truth."

The same thing is true of institutions and religious movements. Concerning our own religious movement, shall we Expand or Contract—Which? One or the other is sure to take place. Either we must enlarge our sympathies, our charity, our missionary activities, our educational plans and plants, our conception of our mission as a religious force, or else the process of contraction, which has already set in in some places, will continue until it results in the irretrievable failure of a movement that has in it marvelous possibilities of good. We cannot stand still. We must go forward or backward. Our horizon must be enlarged or diminished; our ears must be attuned to hear the voice of God speaking to us in the current movements of our time, or we shall grow dull of hearing and lose the inspiration which we could have gained from catching these marching orders and watchwords for our age. Every incentive except that of moral inertness urges us onward. To the eye of faith the hands of unborn millions are beckoning us on to a mighty future, while the voice of the great Captain of our salvation calls us on to higher conquests and to wider dominion.

It should be remembered, however, that this expansion in our national life, in the kingdom of God, in our own religious movement and in our individual life, to which it equally applies, involves and demands the deepening and strengthening of moral convictions, and the intensification of our religious purposes. If we are to carry the blessings of civil and religious liberty to the world, the process of national purification must keep pace with the growth of our commerce and of our material domain. If the church is to be the divine agent for extending the kingdom of God, its life must be of such character as to commend it to the approval of God, and of all right-thinking men. It must rise above its carnality, its schisms and its petty strifes, and consecrate its resources to the accomplishment of the divine purpose. If our religious movement is to go on, increasing in numbers and influence, reaching out into new fields and conquering new areas, the inner work of deepening the spiritual life and grounding the faith of its members in the knowledge of the truth of God must keep pace with this outwark expansion. There must be the strengthening of the stakes as well as the lengthening of the cords of our Zion.

In a word, all of God's purposes concerning man, whether as nations, churches, movements or individuals, require expansion, and this expansion requires the building up of the inner and spiritual life to enable the nation, church, movement, institution or individual to accomplish their respective missions in the world.

AN ATTEMPT TO ABOLISH MYSTERY.

In another place we publish an article on the Personality of the Holy Spirit, by Jas. O. Carson. The article in the beginning speaks of "the disposition in the religious world to mystify everything connected with the Holy Spirit in his relations and intercourse with and work among men." There is a manifest disposition, in our time, to deny everything that is mysterious or miraculous, which is more to be feared than any disposition to mystify. The article referred to is a good illustration of the tendency to deny any fact or truth that is above one's comprehension. Our Savior himself taught that there is a mystery connected with the Holy Spirit and his methods of operation. Paul taught that "great is the mystery of godliness."

There has been a tendency among certain teachers connected with our own movement to banish the element of mystery from the Christian faith by reducing the facts and phenomena so as to come within the range of human intelligence. Brother Carson is not able to see how the Holy Spirit can be a person, when it is affirmed of the Holy Spirit that he dwells in every Christian. He says that the Scriptures are silent regarding the personality of the Holy Spirit. We cannot accept this statement for a moment. On the contrary the Scriptures constantly speak of the Holy Spirit in a way that implies personality; such as, "the Holy Spirit says" so and so; the Holy Spirit is "grieved" and guides, instructs and comforts the followers of Christ. Since we accept a thousand things we do not understand, we see no occasion for denying the personality of God or of the Holy Spirit, because we are not able to comprehend how a person, even a divine person, can be omnipresent.

Another illustration of this writer's tendency to discard facts which he cannot bring within the sphere of his comprehension is seen in the following statement: "Man is so constituted that he cannot take cognizance of things except through his senses. Hence it is that when God would communicate with men he does so in manners and forms that are cognizable through his senses, and never otherwise." Certainly not, according to Locke's philosophy, but this writer should know that the philosophy of Locke, known as the sensational philosophy, is out of date. It is utterly discredited by the developments of modern science, and never was in harmony with the teaching of the Scriptures, nor with the facts of human experience.

What Bro. Carson says about the embodiment of God in the person of Christ and in the church is true enough, but it in no way disproves the larger movements of the Spirit of God, which are not limited to the methods mentioned. There is a tendency toward rationalism on the one hand and a mechanical or purely ecclesiastical conception of religion on the other, growing out of this theory when carried to its logical conclusion, which must be guarded against. No organism, however perfect, can claim any monopoly of the Spirit of God, or assume to be the sole channel of His communication with man. God does not limit Himself by these organizations. It is this theory that leads to the presumptuous claims of the Roman Catholic and Anglican Churches. They assume to be the channels through which the Holy Spirit and the grace of God alone can descend to man. On the contrary, the true Protestant theory brings every soul into direct relation with God. The one theory means despotism, the other liberty. The position that we must reject the personality of the Spirit because we cannot conceive of the personality of a disembodied being would of course lead to the rejection of God and of everything above the power of the the human reason to explain. It would empty our faith of its divine content, and there would be nothing left worth believing.

PAUL ON THE FINANCIAL SUPPORT OF THE MINISTRY.

We have seen in a former paper that the possession of property is not condemned by Jesus nor by his ambassadors. Its possion is altogether legitimate—from the point of view occupied by the Son of Man. Even the possessors of great wealth are not condemned, on this account, by Holy Scripture. How could this be, when wealth is spoken of as a gift from God? "Both riches and honor come of thee," said David. "The Lord maketh poor and maketh rich," said Hannah, the mother of Samuel the prophet. "Give me neither poverty nor riches," said Agur. "Of thine own have we given thee," said David, when he and his people made an offering for the building of the temple in Jerusalem. How could the possession of wealth be condemned by Holy Scripture, when the sacred writings speak of "riches" as a gift from God?

We have also learned that men who have business ability should use it. But, under Christ, they are not at liberty to use this talent selfishly. It is their duty to use it for the good of man. If a man can organize and conduct business, he ought to do so, that he may glorify God in helping his less fortunately endowed brethren, who are lacking in business talent. There are a few men—and only a few—who deserve to be called "Captains of Industry." It seems to be natural for some to organize and successfully conduct needed enterprises on a large scale.

Paul said: "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel!" He had ability to preach. The man who can make money ought to feel: "Woe is unto me if I make not money!" He ought also to feel: "Woe is unto me if I use not this money, or property, for the good of man and so for the glory of God!"

Charity—in the sense of alms-giving—has been spoken of. This is a Christian duty. Those who have ought, under certain conditions, to give to those who have not. Jesus said: "Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye can do them good." But good is not always done when charity is bestowed. The giving of a dollar or a dime may inflict an injury—may be a curse rather than a blessing. How to do good with one's means is a question not always easily answered. To help men to help themselves is real Christian charity.

THE FINANCIAL SUPPORT OF THE GOSPEL MINISTRY IS NOT AN ACT OF CHARITY!

How many will believe this? It is not an unusual thing to hear persons speak of giving to the preacher. He is looked upon and spoken of, in instances not a few, as if he were a person supported by the alms of the church. Why not regard the school-teacher in the same light? The faithful preacher renders an invaluable service to men and is entitled to at least a support. Paul put the matter in this way.

To the Galatians Paul said: "Let him that is taught in the Word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." From his point of view the support of the gospel ministry comes under the head of: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Speaking of "a certain contribution for the poor among the saints that are at Jerusalem," Paul says that "if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, they owe it to them"—mark well the words—"they owe it to them also to minister to them in carnal things." Even the contributions of Gentile Christians to the Hebrew Christians, when the latter were in distress, was not mere charity—it was the payment of a debt. "They owe it to them," says Paul. Why? On what ground? Answer: "The Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things." The doctrine of "reciprocity" is not a new teaching. It is certainly as old as the time of Paul and the New Testament. Nor is it a mean policy; it is justice; it is right; it is a part of religion. "Let him that is taught in the Word communicate unto him that teacheth." It is but right that carnal things—material goods—should be bestowed on those who come to us with spiritual blessings. Away with the thought that the financial support of a true minister of the Word is an act of charity!

PAUL CLAIMED THAT HE, AND THOSE WHO WERE ASSOCIATED WITH HIM IN THE MINISTRY OF THE WORD, HAD A RIGHT TO A MATERIAL SUPPORT.

"No soldier," he says, "serves at his own expense." When a man plants and cultivates a vineyard, all recognize that he has a RIGHT to eat of its fruit. If a man cares for a flock has he not a RIGHT to at least drink of the milk of that flock? Even the law said: "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn." Certainty, the toiling ox has a RIGHT to eat! But Paul says that this principle of the Mosaic law has an application to the support of the ministry. Does God care alone for oxen? Has he not a care also for those who preach his Word? Reasoning after this fashion he concludes: "If we"—not I, but "we"—"if we sowed unto you," who are in Corinth, "spiritual things, is it a great matter if we shall reap your carnal things? If others partake of this RIGHT over you, do not we yet more? Nevertheless, we did not use this RIGHT." Notice, please, that Paul speaks of RIGHT when he talks on this subject. He says: "I have a RIGHT, as a preacher, to a material support." He says even more than this. He says: "We sowed unto you spiritual things." "Is it a great matter if we shall reap your carnal things?" "We," he continues, "did not use this right." Who wrought with Paul in Corinth that he should use this plural pronoun? Silas, Timothy, Titus, Aquila, Priscilla. Who was associated with him in the writing of "The First Epistle to the Corinthians?" Sosthenes. Paul, then, claims for Sosthenes, for Priscilla, for Aquila, for Timothy, for Silas, for Titus—and by implication all who preach the gospel—material support as a RIGHT.

But when Paul preached in Corinth he supported himself by the labor of his hands. He and Aquila and Priscilla made tents. He worked with his hands during the week and "reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath." Why did not he demand from those to whom he ministered a financial remuneration? He had a RIGHT to do so. Why did he not enforce this RIGHT? He himself, fortunately for us, answers this question. He says: "We did not use this RIGHT; but we bear all things, that we may cause no hindrance to the gospel of Christ." "The Lord," he says, "did ordain that they which proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel. But I have used none of these things." Why? His reply is: "That we may cause no hindrance to the gospel." How easy it would have been for his enemies in Corinth and elsewhere (and he had them) to say: "Paul is in this work for what he can make of it. He is selfish—Paul is. He is mercenary. He is, therefore, unworthy of confidence. Have nothing to do with him. Turn away from him." Do you not see how, if he had asserted and enforced his RIGHT—he called it a RIGHT—in this matter it could and doubtless would have been used in such a way as to hinder the gospel?

A similar condition existed in Thessalonica. He, therefore, labored in order to support himself while he preached in that place. To the church of the Thessalonians he said: "Ye remember, brethren, our labor and travail; working night and day that we might not burden you, we preached unto you the gospel of God." This in the first epistle. In the second he refers to this matter again and says: "For yourselves know how ye ought to imitate us; for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you; neither did we eat bread for nought at any man's hands, but in labor and travail, working night and day, that we might not burden any of you; not because we have not the RIGHT, but to make ourselves an example unto you, that ye should imitate us." But concerning the permanent ministry in the church of the Thessalonians, and the duty of the brethren toward this ministry, he says: "We beseech you, brethren, to know them that labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you, and to esteem them exceeding highly in love for their work's sake." These words certainly include a material as well as a moral support.

In Ephesus Paul pursued a course similar to that pursued by him in the cities named, and doubtless for similar reasons. In his farewell address to the pastors whom he met at Miletus as he was on his last journey to Jerusalem, in a review of his three years' work in Ephesus, he said: "I coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. Ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. In all things I gave you an example, how that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Paul possessed business ability to such a degree that when there was a necessity for so doing he was able not only to support himself, but also those who were associated with him in the Master's service.

Paul certainly did not object to receiving financial assistance. Philippi was the first city visited by Paul in Europe. When he was a prisoner in Rome he addressed a letter to the saints in Philippi. In this epistle he acknowledges the receipt of a contribution which the church sent to him by Epaphroditus. He says that it was "an odor of a sweet smell, a sacrifice, acceptable, well-pleasing to God." In this connection he says: "Ye Pilippians know that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving, but ye only; for even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my need." Remember that it was in Thessalonica that he worked night and day that he might not be a charge to any person in the place. He says also that when he was in Corinth he robbed other churches that he might serve the Corinthians. "When I was present with you," he says, "and was in want, I was not a burden to any man; for the brethren, when they came from Macedonia, supplied the measure of my want."

The ideal ministry in the teaching of Paul is a ministry wholly devoted to preaching and to the work of caring for the spiritual welfare of all the churches. He speaks of his "anxiety for all the churches."

Paul's conception of the ministry is quite fully expressed in his epistles to Timothy and Titus. To the former he said: "No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life; that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier." He enjoins on Timothy to give himself "wholly" to reading, to meditation and to preaching "the Word." In this connection also he employs language similar to words above quoted from the ninth chapter of the "First Epistle to the Corinthians"—the place in which he speaks of the RIGHT of the ministry to a material support. To Timothy he said: "The husbandman that laboreth must be the first to partake of the fruits."

The pedigree of Christianity runs back to Judaism. In a subsequent paper the financial system of the Hebrew people will be considered. B. B. T.

"THE DISCIPLES."

The editorial paragraph following my reply to inquiries, published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of August 11th, implies a misunderstanding of my position. I do not hold that the disciples who comprise the Current Reformation movement are never to be thought of or spoken of as a separate body of people. For, as Bro. Garrison said once before in criticism of what I had written, my own language implies and even expresses such a distinction. I have just now drawn such a distinction.

But my protest is against the effort to draw the distinction in Scripture language. I do not think that calling this party "The Disciples" is the "least objectionable method of designating the churches of the Current Reformation." It is more objectionable than other ways, because it is so nearly scriptural in form as to really involve a perversion of Scripture. In drawing a distinction not drawn in the Scriptures, why should we imitate Bible language? There is no reason for it. We should "call Bible things by Bible names." But why should we call anything not mentioned in the Bible by a "Bible name?"

It may be that any protest is vain, and that this new denominational title has come to stay. If so, one of the "immortals" has "nodded."

A man has a thousand sheep inclosed in a thousand-acre pasture. He builds within this inclosure nine smaller inclosures and pens up a hundred sheep in each one. The other hundred are held only by the outside fence. He names one pen "Methodists," another "Baptists," another "Presbyterians," etc. The last hundred, which are not penned up, he refers to as, "The Sheep," with a capital "S." After you have got used to his whim, you can perhaps understand him. But most people think there is a better way. And so do I.

JOSEPH FRANKLIN.

The only point in which we misunderstood Bro. Franklin's position was as to the necessity and propriety of distinguishing ourselves as reformers from other Christians by the use of any terms. Many who object to the name, Disciples of Christ, claim that we do not need to distinguish ourselves and our religious movement from others. We naturally supposed Bro. Franklin held the same view. It now appears that he does not so hold, and that the only difference between us is as to how this distinction should be made when it seems necessary to make it. His "protest is against the effort to draw the distinction in Scripture language." This is strange, in view of our professed zeal for Bible language. When a scriptural term happens to serve the very purpose of distinguishing ourselves from others, and when it carries with it no implied claim of exclusiveness, it seems to us in every way preferable to any phase or term we might invent. Especially is this true when the name is not only scriptural, but beautifully significant of our relation to Christ and to oneanother. Suppose we should designate ourselves as "Restorers," and our churches as "Restored Churches of Christ." These are not scriptural names, and would be free from Bro. Franklin's criticism. Even waving the fact that they would not designate us, would any one feel that this would be an improvement on the name, Disciples of Christ?

Bro. F. saks, "Why should we call anything not mentioned in the Bible by a Bible name?" We were under the impression that persons owning allegiance to Jesus Christ as Lord and Master and seeking to carry out His will on earth are called "Disciples of Christ" in the New Testament. In what sense is it a departue from New Testament usage to continue the use of that name to designate those who sustain the same relation to Christ? The answer to this, by Bro. F. and others, is that the name, Disciples of Christ, includes many more than those connected with our special religious movement. This is readily granted, of course, but it so happens that these other disciples have chosen other names by which to designate themselves, leaving unappropriated a name which we can use in perfect harmony with our plea for Christian union and the restoration of New Testament Christianity, and in such a way as not to imply that we are the only disciples of Christ. The matter of the capitalization, is a matter simply of good grammar and good manners. The illustration about the sheep and the pens is very good, but it overlooks some facts in the religious situation which have an important bearing on the question under consideration.

1. It is not the person who owns the sheep that has built the pens in Christendom, but the sheep themselves, because they did not wish to keep company with the others.

2. It is not the sheep-owner that has called these different groups of sheep by the names "Methodists," "Baptists," "Presbyterians," etc., but either they themselves, or some other sheep, and they have accepted the designations and use them as their proper names. Our chief concern should be to get these fences out of the way that keeps the sheep apart. When this is done the names will take care of themseves.

3. The Good Shepherd has given appropriate and significant names to his spiritual sheep, which express their relation to Him. Among these are disciples, Christians. Now, if other groups of sheep call themselves by other names, and pen themselves up, is this a good reason why the other sheep, who are content to abide in large pasture, provided by the Shepherd, with no smaller pen to limit them should deny themselves these appropriate names, provided only they do not so use them as to deny that others are Christians or disciples? We think not. If some wish to be known as Presbyterian disciples, others as Methodist disciples, etc., and we are content to be known as Disciples of Christ, the capital D. implying that we are not the only disciples, but the disciples content to be so designated, what principle is violated? If Bro. F. thinks there is "a more excellent way" let him say what it is.

Hour of Prayer.

GREAT AND PRECIOUS PROMISES.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Sept. 7th.)

Seeing that his divine power hath granted unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that called us by his own glory and virtue; whereby he hath granted unto us his precious and exceeding great promises; that through these ye may become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped from the corruption that is in the world by lust.—2 Peter 1:3,4.

Hope is an element of human nature which "springs eternal in the human breast." But Christian hope is based upon the promises of God in Christ Jesus our Lord. It hath pleased Him in his goodness toward our poor, weak and sinful race, to make certain promises to us which the Apostle Peter, in this lesson, describes as "precious and exceeding great." This shows that Peter himself had a very vivid appreciation of the value of these promises. It is well for us to remember, when we are inclined to complain because God hath not made known to us certain things which we should like to know, that "His divine power hath granted unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness." We can afford to wait for the remainder until we have passed beyond the region of shadows.

Among the "all things" which he hath granted unto us "through the knowledge of him that called us by his own glory and virtue" are these "precious and exceeding great promises." Before calling attention to these promises, let us note a significant change in the Revised Version, in the text quoted, in which it is said that Jesus Christ has "called us by his own glory and virtue," instead of "called us to glory and virtue," as it reads in the King James Version. According to the revised rendering we are called into a Christian life by the glory and virtue which shine out in the character of Jesus Christ, as portrayed in the gospel. This is the power by which He draws us to Himself. Let it be noted also that it is "through the knowledge of him that hath called us by his own glory and virtue" that we come into the possession of these great and precious promises. Consider what some of these are.

There is first of all the promise of forgiveness of sins and reconciliation with God. Who that has ever felt the weight of a guilty conscience, and has tasted the sweetness of forgiveness, can fail to realize the preciousness of such a promise? The value of this promise is enhanced by the fact that our sins when forgiven "are remembered against us no more forever." They are utterly and forever blotted out. This promise, of course, comes to us through Jesus Christ, whose death in our behalf, by disclosing the goodness and love of God which lead us to repentance, makes forgiveness possible. Not only are we promised forgiveness of past sins on entering the Christian life, but if we are led astray as Christians and commit sin, "He is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanseus from all unrighteousness." There is no need, then, that we carry about with us the burden of a guilty conscience. We may obtain forgiveness through repentance and confession.

Then there is the promise of the Holy Spirit which the Lord Jesus gives to all them that obey Him. This is a precious promise, and exceeding great because He brings with Him a train of blessings which beautify and enrich human life. We saw what the fruit of the Spirit was in our last lesson. When we remember that the Holy Spirit is our Advocate whom Jesus promised to His disciples on His leaving the world, and that He stands by us and pleads our cause, teaches us how to pray and imparts life and power to us in our conflict with sin, temptation and trial, we can realize that it is, indeed, a great promise and a very precious one. How strange that any Christian should be indifferent about claiming and seeking to realize such a promise!

The comradeship of Jesus Christ is another one of these great promises. "I will never leave you nor forsake you." "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Not in prosperity, or in triumph alone, when the sunlight floods our pathway, but in darkness and defeat, when the way is toilsome and difficult, He is with us. His rod and staff, they comfort us. What can give more courage and strength to the weary pilgrim, making his way through earth to heaven, than to feel that he has the companionship of Jesus Christ, as Friend and Brother, who will stand by him in every trial and give him strength to overcome every difficulty?

Then there is the great promise of life everlasting. "In my Father's house are many mansions; if I were not so, I would have told you." Death is only the passage way from the mortal to the immortal. We are to live forever. We are to be where Christ is, at the right hand of the Father. Who can measure the greatness of this promise? What infinite comfort it has brought to the human soul through all the toiling and struggling ages!

But, as if this were not enough, and as if our hope needed the fuel of another great promise to make it blaze out through all the darkness of human life, we are assured that it is God's predestined purpose that we who are called to be Christians shall be conformed to the image of his Son. It is not yet made manifest, John tells us, what we shall be, but "we know that when Christ is manifested, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." Think of such a destiny as that! How all the rewards and prizes of this earthly life fade into utter insignificance in comparison with this marvelous transfiguration into the glorious likeness of Jesus Christ! It is not given to human imagination, quickened by the power of faith, to paint the glories of such a destiny. We must wait for its fulfillment in order to the full realization of its greatness.

No wonder the Apostle Peter calls these "precious and exceeding great promises." But why are they given to us? Peter's answer is, "That through these ye may become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped from the corruption that is in the world through lust." The purpose of these promises, then, is to beget within us Christian hope, and to strengthen us in our conflicts in this present evil world, so that we may realize the purpose for which we were created and called into fellowsip with Christ.

Let us, then, keep these promises before our minds, and encourage our hearts with them, that they may accomplish the end for which they were given. Above all, let us remember that these promises are "yea and amen in Christ Jesus," and can be claimed only by those who are struggling to do His will and to be like Him even here in the world.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the revelation of Thyself in Jesus Christ our Lord, and for the precious and exceeding great promises which Thou hast made to us through Him. We thank Thee that Thou has seen proper, in Thy great goodness, to hold up before us these wonderful promises, to strengthen us and to cheer us in the conflicts, the trials and the misfortunes of life. We thank Thee for the Christian hope that is built on these promises, and which sheds its radient light on our pathway in the darkest hours of our human experience. Help us, we beseech Thee, strengthened and girded by such promises, to turn our backs upon all the sinful allurements of this present world, and seek glory and honor and immortality from Thee. Grant us the joy of realizing the fulfillment of many of these promises, while we are yet in the flesh, and at last permit us to realize the fulfillment of our highest hopes in being with Thee and with our glorified Lord, to enjoy unbroken fellowship with Thee forever. In His name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

OR MACATAWA MUSINGS.

The editor of this paper has not seen the Apostolic Guide for some time, being absent from the office, and does not know who the present editor is. Some one, however, has sent us an editorial clipping from the paper, in which the editor takes occasion to lecture us on the evils of division and the desirability of Christian union! This struck us first as an instance of "bringing coals to Newcastle," as this has been almost a hobby with us for a third of a century; but perhaps the young man—we take his youth for granted—may have a theory of union that would need to be urged upon us before we could accept it. Some of the Kentucky brethren, however, should explain to this Apostolic editor the difference between recognizing the necessity of distinguishing things that differ and the approval of sectarian divisions. As long as love and hatred both exist it is necessary to have different names for them, for the calling of hatred by the name of love would not change its nature. What the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is laboring to bring about is such a unity of Christians as will do away with the necessity of denominational names. Our special offense, which has drawn upon us this criticism of the Guide, was the position that if we are justified in assuming a distinct and independent position among the religious forces of Christendom, it is essentlal for us to use some name by which to designate ourselves, if we are to be intelligible. The editor of the Guide regards this as the relinquishment of our plea for Christian union! And yet, like all other critics of this school, he uses the pronoun "we" and "us" in making the very distinction which he criticises us for making!

There is a noticeable and increasing desire on the part of our ministers and other intelligent brethren to have our membership more generally read one of our best religious journals. They have come to see that those who read our representative journals are more intelligent Christians, are more in sympathy with our general interests, have a better knowledge of the brotherhood and its co-operative work, have a clearer understanding of the spirit and meaning of our religious movement and are in every way more useful members of the body of Christ. There is also increased zeal on the part of our publishers in extending their circulation. This zeal may take one of two forms: It may make increased expenditures for the improvement of our religious journals and adopt special means for bringing these journals before the attention of the Christian public; or it may take what seems to us the injurious form of cutting rates, and cheapening prices until a price is set which will make it impossible for publishers to bring their religious journals up to the standard of literary merit of the journals of other religious bodies. There are always some people who welcome the cheapening process and who hail with gladness a reduction in the price of our papers, but we are persuaded that the more intelligent membership believe that the highest interest of religious journalism among us is not served, but hindered, by this reduction in price. It is a well-known fact that the religious journals among the Disciples of Christ have always been published at a lower rate than those of equal merit in other religious bodies. This has been done at great sacrifice. Any further reduction in price we believe will tend to lower the standard of our papers more than to increase their circulation. What we wish for all our religious journals whose influence is right and good is the highest degree of prosperity and the largest possible circulation. Above all we wish for them a constantly increasing standard of excellence. A dollar paper may mean a few hundred or a few thousand more subscribers, but it must necessarily mean, in the long run, a lower grade of religious literature.

Life at Macatawa is a little more quiet since the close of the Assembly, and there is already a slight decline of the summer population, though there are some new arrivals that partially compensate for the departures. The summer days are passing away too swiftly and autumn with its bracing atmosphere will call the people homeward very rapidly. Never have we known summer days to go more swiftly than during the pressnt season. We have not been troubled with heat, or flies, or mosquitos, nor with dust, mud or ennui. The days have seemed too short and the nights are not quite long enough. There is something in this atmosphere and in the music of the unresting lake to produce somnolence. No one looks forward with much pleasure at the idea of leaving Macatawa. Many of those who are here for the first time, this summer, are planning to become permanent summer residents of the place. They are purchasing lots and planning cottages to be built for the coming season. A new addition of the Park has been laid out on the lake front, south of Edge-wood-on-the-Lake, in which many are purchasing lots for summer homes.

While, as we say, life here at the Park is more quiet since the close of the Assembly, it is anything but monotonous. There are a number of things going on to occupy the time and attention of the people who are here. Recently Mr. E. C. Westervelt, one of the owners of the Park, gave a free excursion for the cottagers up Black Lake and return, lasting from eight until eleven in the evening. It was a merry crowd, and there were music, recitations and impromptu speeches, with a vote of thanks to Mr. Westervelt for his kindness. Mr. J. C. Post, another of the proprietors of the Park, has also shown many kindnesses to the cottagers, and planned a free excursion down Lake Michigan to Saugatuck one day this week, but the rough sea prevented many from going. On last Sunday afternoon at the close of the service, the members of the Central Christian Church, of St. Louis, present here in the Park, determined to give their pastor, F. G. Tyrrell, a little surprise on his thirty-third birthday. He was conducted by his wife, under pretense of taking a walk, into a secluded nook down one of the wooded canyons, where had gathered the members of the Central, together with some of their neighbors at the Park, and there were refreshments and congratulations and a few short speeches, and a happy response from the surprised pastor. The pastor of the Central is very popular here at the Park, and the whole populace would have turned out if they had been let into the secret. On one evening of the past week a few families of us gathered on one of the sandy knolls overlooking Lake Michigan and had what is known here as a "corn roast." The young roasting ears in their husks are buried in the sand and hot coals are piled over them until they are thoroughly roasted; then they are taken out and each one takes his ear of corn, pulls back the husks carefully, and after supplying the necessary condiments, proceeds to eat it from the cob. Of course there are other things to go along with it. In these ways do we manage to drive dull care away and banish ennui. But this applies only to the vacant hours, for after all nearly everybody who comes here, even though they do not, like the editor, bring their work along with them, have something to do to occupy a part of each day, and the things we have mentioned only serve to fill the otherwise unoccupied hours. To one who has to spend most of the time at his desk, they afford a welcome relief from the tedium of daily tasks.

Last Lord's day we were favored with another magnificent audience at the Auditorium and with an able sermon by J. J. Haley on the meaning of life. He gave the four prevailing theories of life—the Ascetic, the Hedonic, the Puritanic and the view best illustrated by the life and teaching of our Savior, who regarded life not as pain, not as pleasure, not as discipline, but as opportunity, and opportunity for the development of character, the great aim of life. Bro. Haley is now occupying his beautiful cottage, "Melbourne Heights," on Cedar Walk, which affords a splendid view, through rifts of greenery in the intervening forests, of the Great Lake. The beach meeting at night was one of the largest and one of the best. It was conducted by President J. H. Hardin, of Eureka College who, with his wife, is occupying a cottage on the Grove Walk, near the hotel. Several of our preachers yet remain on the ground, though Richardson and Tyrrell take their departure this week, and others are to follow pretty soon. Among recent transient visitors to the Park are Z. T. Sweeney, Bro. Reeves, of Columbus, Ind., Henry Meier, of St. Louis, F. E. Udell and wife, of St. Louis and Bro. Ball, of Muncie, Ind.

Geo. A. Bellamy, head of the "Hiram House," Cleveland, Ohio, who was married on the 17th inst. to Miss Marie Laura Parker, at Bedford, O., was tendered a reception at the residence of his father, Wm. Bellamy, in Grand Rapids, on the evening of the 18th. The house of Bro. Bellamy was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and the rooms and hall were filled with the throng of happy guests, mainly our church people, at Grand Rapids, to welcome and congratulate the newly wedded pair. There were refreshments and music to add to the attractions of the evening. It was in every way a most delightful occasion, and a deserved compliment to these young people, who have dedicated their lives to the elevation of the neglected population of Cleveland. The young couple will spend a fortnight at the cottage of the groom's father, at Macatawa Park, before resuming their labors. In this connection it gives us pleasure to add that the Christian people of Cleveland, recently, without regard to church affiliations, resolved to stand behind this work of Bro. Bellamy, and to furnish him proper support and buildings for carrying on the same. This speaks well both for the manner in which Bro. Bellamy has conducted his work, and for the Christian spirit of the churches at Cleveland. During our visit at Grand Rapids, on the occasion referred to, it was the pleasure of myself and wife to spend the night with the family of Ex-Mayor L. C. Stow, who have been our neighbors at the Park for several years, but on account of the sickness of Sister Stow have not been here the present season. We were delighted to learn that Sister Stow's health is rapidly recovering as the result of a recent surgical operation. They have been much missed from the Park, this season, but they hope to be here later, and during coming seasons.

RELIGION PRACTICAL.

NO. III.

JAS. M. CAMPBELL.

Now concerning the collection for the saints.—1 Cor. 16:1.

The balance of truth demands that the heaven-side of things do not overshadow the earth-side. As Socrates caused philosophy to descend from heaven to earth that it might enter into the cities and homes of men, religion must be brought down into human life as a working power for righteousness. The life beyond is always viewed in Scripture in its relation to the present. It is brought to bear as a practical force upon present duty. The charge that religion is unpractical; that it has more to do with a visionary life in the future than with the actual life of the present is a very shallow one. It is true that the church has often done a great wrong to humanity in representing the actual life as a matter of no moment, but in doing so it has misrepresented Christianity. The transference of the aim of religion from this world to the world to come is a perversion of the Christian ideal. The design of Christianity is not to prepare men for heaven, but for earth; not to fit them to die, but to live. A Christian is not to spend his time star gazing, but in faithful performance of the duties of daily life.

In the middle ages, when the world was regarded as doomed, and separation from it was looked upon as necessary to a life of holiness, there was a dwarfing of the importance of the present. It was the complaint of Tyndale in his day that men gave attention to the building of cathedrals and neglected the construction of harbors and public works. Happily the point of emphasis has changed. We do not now think of forsaking the world, but of improving it. We recognize the dignity of the common life. We inculcate diligence in business as a Christian duty. Indeed, the pendulum swings to the other extreme, and the danger is that we shall overemphasize the present life and forget its true relation to the hereafter.

Out of the future come life's deepest motives. "Earth is the battle ground of the eternities." Between the spiritual and the practical there is an intimate connection. The step between the highest doctrine and the humblest duty is a very short one. We see this illustrated in the abrupt transition of thought from the lofty argument of Paul about the resurrection and the reality of the life beyond, in the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, to the words of practical exhortation in the beginning of the sixteenth chapter, which stand at the head of this paper. The unfortunate break between the chapters has, however, destroyed completely the force of the apostle's appeal. His plea is this: "You as Christians believe in a glorious resurrection; you believe in eternal rewards; you believe in the recognition or all good-doings by the King of kings; then show your faith by ministering to the poor saints in Jerusalem."

The practical bearing of the future upon the present is seen in furnishing a right motive to social action. Materialism takes away all incentive to good-doing. It selfishly says, "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." Belief in a future life, by setting life in etarnal relations, leads men to seek the welfare of their brothermen. It leads them to labor for the establishment of justice, and the enforcement of humanity. The times when men feel most deeply the powers of the world to come are times when their interest in others is intensified, and their efforts to benefit them are redoubled. Times of unbelief are always times of stagnation in beneficent effort. In promoting a spirit of beneficence, in stimulating high thought and lofty endeavor, in furnishing a motive to self-sacrifice, in gendering spiritual energy that expends itself in present service, the influence of the future upon the present cannot be overestimated. Am I to live forever? Am I heir of all the ages? Is my present life introductory to the ageless hereafter? how exalted, then, ought to be the manner of my life! Am I to meet my brother again at the judgment-seat, and shall I then be asked, "Have you done the right thing by him?" Then let me see to it that my conduct toward him is such as shall commend itself to the Lord of love, who will be the judge of us both.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

JAMES O. CARSON.

The disposition in the religious world to mystify everything connected with the Holy Spirit in his relations and intercourse with and work among men, his personality, dwelling-place, the methods and means by which he influences men to righteousness and carries forward the work which he came into the world to accomplish, is to me inexplicable. Some of the teachings on this subject are so marvelous and mystical, and at the same time so at variance with established laws both in nature and in grace, as to suggest the suspicion of intent to mystify and bewilder. Prominent among these teachings and probably the most popular, are those respecting the "personality" and "personal indwelling" of the Holy Spirit. The teachers in this school of marvels and mysteries insist on the "personality" of the Holy Spirit, and at the same time they as strenuously insist that this personality dwells at the same moment of time in the individual body of every Christian on the earth.

A moment's reflection ought to satisfy any one that both of these teachings cannot be true, for if it be true that the Holy Spirit occupies at the same moment of time millions of other personalities like man, and scattered as they are all over the earth, then it is not true that he is a personality of which man has knowledge, or which he can form an intelligent conception.

Respecting the "personality of the Holy Spirit," it may be said that the Scriptures are silent; that we have no knowledge of our own, and do not possess capacity to even form an intelligent conception. As well might one attempt to form an intelligent conception of the personality of God. And yet those teachers do not hesitate to insist upon men accepting this as a fundamental doctrine of the New Testament. Personality as understood by men and as the term is applied by them in their daily intercourse with one another, and moreover the only personality of which they possess knowledge, is a person—a sensible, tangible body—having capability to think, to reason, to purpose, to devise, to execute. Contrast with this the popular orthodox mystical idea of the personality of the Holy Spirit, and we will agree with a brother who says: "If the Scriptures teach the personality and personal indwelling of the Holy Spirits, it must be in a mystic spirit sense, accepted by faith." This mystic idea of personality, as we gather it from orthodox teachings, partakes largely of that entertained by people who believe in ghosts. A Spirit without corporeal existence; a being whose every action is mysterious; who in his intercourse with men, in "his own good time," manner and place, and without means or instrumentalities, influences them to be good; who shines into human hearts to comfort them, even as a sunbeam shines into a drop of dew and warms it; a personality that has been in the world almost two thousand years working with and among men the works of God, feeding the hungry, clothingthe naked, visiting the sick, providing homes for destitute widows and orphans, and sending the gospel of the grace of God to the ends of the earth—and yet has never been seen by human eyes, heard by human ears, or handled by human hands, as was the "Word" when he was in the world doing the same works. In the absence of more specific information it is assumed that this is the idea of personality of the "mystic Spirit sense." It is certainly not a simple, common-sense idea.

But scarcely less marvelous and credulity-testing is the doctrine of the personal indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the individual bodies of men. According to this doctrine the Holy Spirit in his own personality dwells in each separate individual body of every Christian man and woman in the world! The simple statement of this proposition ought to be its own refutation.

One word just here in regard to the too common idea of understanding and accepting things spiritual "in a sense." Respecting this we will say that God never does anything of himself, nor does he ask man to do anything for him "in a sense," not even in a "mystic Spirit sense." Whatever he does, he does absolutely and requires the same of man.

But it may be asked: "Can a spirit be seen by human eyes?" Certainly not. Neither can an unembodied spirit hold intercourse with or in any wise influence men. Man is so constituted that he cannot take cognizance of things except through his senses. Hence it is that when God would communicate with man, he does so in manners and forms that are cognizable through his senses, and never otherwise. This is at once the reason and explanation for the several manifestations of God known to men as the "Word of God," the "Spirit of God," the "Son of God" and the "Church of God." These are manifestations, not mysteries. Each came for a separate, specific mission. One was to make known the "infinite power and deity of God;" another his wisdom and goodness; another his character, and yet another who is the consummation of all who have preceded him. This is he in whom we are now interested, and concerning whom we desire to learn the things that have been revealed. Fortunately, much has been revealed and in language so plain that the simple-minded can understand. Let us look at these. When Jesus was about to leave his disciples they were very despondent, and he said to them: "When I go away I will not leave you alone; I will send to you another, the Advocate, who is the Spirit of Truth, who when he comes will lead you into all the truth; he will bring again to your minds whatsoever I have told you, and he will take of mine and show [explain] it to you. He will convict the world of sin, of righteousness and of judgment, and he will abide with you always." Here, then, we have given to us the name of him who was to take the place of Jesus, "the Spirit of Truth," his office that of "advocate," and his mission to lead the church into all the truth, and to convict the world of sin, of righteousness and of judgment.

Besides these we have been advised of the time, the place where and the manner of his coming, so that it remains only to ascertain the place in which he took up his abode, assured as have been that wheresoever he took up his abode when he came, he abides still. Concerning these the divine historian says: "When the day of Pentecost was fully come, the disciples of Jesus, numbering one hundred and twenty persons, had by appointment assembled in one place; that suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of a great rushing wind which filled the place where they were assembled; that there appeared among them tongues like unto fire which, separating, sat upon each of them; that they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak in foreign languages as the Spirit empowered them;" that when the multitude, attracted by these events, had come together, Peter and the other apostles, in explanation of these marvelous occurrences, said: "Having received a promise from the Father, he [Jesus] has sent forth this which you now see and hear."

From this record we learn concerning the events attending the advent of the Holy Spirit to the earth, that the church, consisting of one hundred and twenty members, was assembled by one consent in one place; that the Holy Spirit in a visible form and miraculous manner came to this organized body and took possession of it as he did the body of Jesus of Nazareth at the time of his baptism and entry on his ministry, and the announcement in all the languages of the earth, that this same Jesus whom you crucified, God has highly exalted, having constituted him Lord and Christ, the result of all these being the addition of three thousand men and women to the list of the saved.

These are momentous events, and are in exact harmony with the promise of Jesus to his disciples and of his intercessory prayer. He said: "I pray not for these alone, but for all who may believe on me through their word, that they may be one [among themselves] as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee." And then he adds these significant words: "The glory which thou gavest me I have given them, that they may be one as we are, I in them as thou in me, that they may be perfect in one [body] that the world may know that thou hast sent me." The glory which Jesus received from the Father was the descent upon him, in visible, bodily form, of the Holy Spirit at the time of his baptism and entrance upon his ministry, accompanied by the voice: "This is my Son, hear him." This is the glory which Jesus said, "I have given them," and which he did give them on the day of Pentecost when, in visible, bodily form, the Holy Spirit descended upon the assembled church and announced, through his body, in all the languages of the earth, the exaltation of Jesus to be "Lord and Christ," King and Savior of the world.

Jesus needed the divine presence and help to perfect him for the work which had been given him to do, and "God gave to him the Spirit without measure." The same divine presence and help was needed by the church to perfect her for the work given her to do, and Jesus having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit hath sent this forth which you now see and hear. "I in them as thou in me" is the need of the church to perfect her for the great work of bringing the world to the acknowledgment of the Christ.

The same divinity, then, that was in Jesus of Nazareth was by him transmitted to the church, and is there to-day, and is presenting to the world the same evidence of the divine presence with her that Jesus presented to the Jews of this presence with him. The Jews said: "No one can do the works which thou doest except God be with him," and Jesus said: "If I had not done among you the works which none other did you had not sin, but now you have no excuse for your sin." To his disciples he said: "Greater works than these shall ye do when I go to my Father;" and these greater works are now being done by the church—works which could not be done except by an organized body under divine direction and power.

In further support of the contention that the Holy Spirit dwells in the organism kown as the church, the body of Christ, and not in the separate individual bodies of the members of that church, attention is directed to the fact that in the New Testament the dwelling-place of the Holy Spirit is spoken of under the figures of "a building," "a temple," "a body," and always in the singular number. This is in exact harmony with the divine order, both in nature and grace. "One body for one Spirit." One dwelling-place or building for one family; one temple for the one living God. God never had more than one temple on the earth at one time. So, then, the reputed many bodies for the one Spirit would be a monstrosity, and many temples for the one and only living God would be idolatrous. Speaking of this "building" the apostle says, "It is compactly framed together for a habitation of God by his Spirit." Concerning this temple (not temples) he says it is constructed of the bodies of men, which are "living stones," in which a holy priesthood may offer spiritual sacrifice to God; and that this body is composed of many members, of which Christ is the head and the Holy Spirit is the life. So closely allied are the members of this body that if a single member becomes diseased, the whole body is affected; so sacred and perfect is this temple that if a single stone becomes defaced the beauty of the entire edifice is marred. "There is one body and one Spirit." The church is this "one body," and is an organism as complete as is the human body. In this organism the Holy Spirit, as we have seen, took up his abode on the day of Pentecost, and if so he abides there still. By becoming a member of this body, and in no other way, a man enters into relationship with God and Christ and the Holy Spirit, and becomes "a partaker of e divine nature"—the Holy Spirit—who vells there, and thus becomes a partici-ant in the honors, privileges and bless-gs which are inherent in the body, by rtue of the presence there of the Holy pirit, just as a member of the human ody, by reason of its relation to that ody, becomes a joint participant in the essings which are inherent in the body. here is no miracle or "impenetrable ystery" in this. It is natural, sensible nd scriptural.

ASSOCIATED EVILS.

C. H. WETHERBEE.

There are several evils of a very danger-is character which are associated with hristian and church life. From many arts of the country reports come that a ast deal of worldliness is pervading the nurches. Correspondence with ministers nd laymen, located at different and dis-nt points, reveal the fact that worldly nusements of various kinds are being in-reasingly patronized by members of the nurches, and that these things are serious-affecting the lives of these Christians. ow, I have been studying the situation mewhat and I think I see an association evils, which seem to have significant con-ection with each other. One evil is a cer-in degree of laxity in the pulpit. For uite a number of years a great many pas-rs and evangelists have failed to bring the front, with any frequency whatever, ose sterner aspects of both law and gos-el, which are very essential to a full voic-g of God's mind concerning sinners. The ild features of the gospel have mostly vered the ground. The awfulness of sin, nd the certain and eternal perdition of all ho die in sin, have not been presented om the pulpit in due proportion. This is ne serious evil, which is having a mighty ffect on church life. Another is great ackness in receiving people into the nurches as members. It is the truth to ay that almost any one can become a mem-er of a Christian Church to-day. Only et one go before either a pastor or a hurch and say that he intends to lead a etter life or that he desires to be associ-ted with God's people in a church capaci-y, and he will be received. I am far from aying that this is so in all cases, but I am onfident that it is in the great majority of ases. The sad fact is, the churches are eing filled with raw, unconverted material, nd if this thing keeps on much longer nany of the churches will not be in any rue sense Christian, for the members will ot be Christians; they will simply be orldly church members. Another evil is xtreme indifference to church discipline. Who gets excluded from a church in these ays of love, liberality and liberty? Very ew. O, this brood of church evils! A reat revival is needed among all the hurches, not to get additions, but to make ubtractions.

Since 1871 the Broadway Tabernacle hurch, New York, has contributed to ission and charitable causes $625,000. Be-ides this, and during the same time, it as contributed toward its own support, oward its debt and toward Bethany Mis-ion, $900,000. During the same period the omen of the church have contributed to ission work, in money and boxes, $89,000.

Current Religious Thought

Rev. Geo. Matheson's articles, in the July and August numbers of the Biblical World, on "The Feminine Ideal of Christianity," are deeply interesting, alike for their originality of thought and application of some of the Beautitudes. In the opening of the second article, in the August number, he says that Christianity has done greater things for women than for any other class —"It has given her dominion." And at the conclusion of this article he tells us wherein and of what this greatness consists. We quote Dr. Matheson's concluding lines:

> The greatest thing which Christianity has done for the spirit of woman is to put into her hand a microscope—to give her the power of seeing little things. The spirit of womanhood is the spirit of the new charity. It ceases to look at masses; it keeps its eye on the individual life. It regards not his price to the state; it considers not his advantage to the community; it views only his need. The strength of his claim is the strength of his necessity. The Roman dropped the protective hand where the argument of utility failed. Christianity's argument for charity only began there. It took up men because they were useless, because they were unprofitable to the state. It took them up just because the state had laid them down, and just where it had laid them down. It gathered from the highways and the hedges—from the waste places of the community. It was a new order of chivalry which it proposed to inaugurate. The old order of chivalry was to redress the wrongs of beauty. Beauty was an adjunct of the state, because beauty was power. Pagan fiction could describe the retaliation of the injury to Helen, or could tell how the last Tarquin was banished for a Roman matron's sake. Christ brought in a higher chivalry—to redress the wrongs of ugliness, to follow the ninety and nine which had no beauty, no excellence, no power. Mercy is the youngest born of the children of God, and the prerogative of mercy is this: "To seek and to save that which was lost,"

For reasons hinted at in the following paragraph the Christian Commonwealth, London, thinks any union of the Roman, Anglican and Russian Churches would be a curse rather than a blessing to the world:

> What, however, are the Eastern Churches like? Are they worth uniting with? Not unless it is desired to plunge back into darkness and superstition instead of dvancing to clearer light. The Babylonian apostasy of a corrupt and fallen Christendom prevails in Eastern as well as in Western Christendom. Should the Anglican find a way of reunion in this direction, its ruin would be completed. A Russian Church is the home of endless ceremonies. There is much that is instructive, but the ritual and the symbolism have become extravagant and overwhelming. At the Eucharist two round-flat cakes are presented, united together in the baking, representing the two natures of Christ in one person. Five such cakes are used at each celebration. Each is marked on the upper side with a cross and an inscription, "IC. XC. NIKA."—i. e., Jesus Christ conquers. After the priest has taken the first phosphora, or cake, he makes on it with the spear used as a knife the sign of the cross. The piece which he now cuts off is called "the Lamb," which he cuts in half, indicating that Christ gave himself as the Lamb for the sins of the world. He then pierces it with the spear. All through he recites appropriate texts. The second cake is cut in memory of the Virgin, and the piece is put beside the Lamb. From the third nine little pieces are taken in honor of the various saints. Out of the fourth more pieces are cut, while prayers are offered for the Emperor, Synod, etc. Out of the fifth other fragments are cut, while the priest prays for deceased members of the church. All these pieces are now covered with the asteriskos (cross-star), in order to recall the star over the house where Jesus was born. Then follow other ceremonies in immense and complex elaboration, until the question arises, What has become of the simplicity of Christian worship? The same question repeats itself at every point connected with Eastern Christianity. Preaching is almost unknown. Pictures are adored in churches, homes, shops and streets. The priest enters everywhere. True, he is to be preferred to the Roman celibate priest, for he must be a married man. But the sacramentarianism and sacerdotalism which threaten to eat up Anglicanism have long ago swallowed up the Eastern Church, until now reformation is hopeless. That can only come from without, and at present a cruel civil despotism is allied with this corrupt and superstitious communion to crush all Nonconformity directly it attempts to propagate the truth. We repeat that only those ignorant of the real state of Oriental Christianity can excusably imagine that reunion with it would be anything but a curse.

Until the mystic enchantments of the faith-healer lose their charms the following sensible remarks of the Interior and similar criticisms will be in order. After pointing out certain historic facts, bearing on the history and nature of various cures, the Interior says:

> On the whole, as we said at the beginning, it would be hard to invest a process of "cure" under which the recuperative powers of nature will not restore most of the sick provided the method be not in itself injurious. And if so be the method require abstinence from the popular patent medicines of the day, which depend for their effect largely upon the morphine or the whiskey they contain, we ought to be grateful. And we try to be. But when with this beneficent result there are spread abroad crude metaphysical speculations and monstrous perversions of sacred Scripture, it is a more serious matter. It is a sorrowful sight to see tens of thousands of good peopie turned aside from the simplicity which is in Christ and taught to believe that the Holy Bible is a book of so difficult an understanding that it requires an abstruse philosophy to supplement it, all because people who accept such dicta "get well." The wonder would be if they did not get well, for they have recovered under eve y and any system that man has ever devised, unless the system were in itself fatal.
> Meanwhile, there is an honest and honorable profession of therapeutics which has approved itself by the suppression of smallpox by the arrest of cholera at infected ports, and by the stamping out of yellow fever the moment it shows itself upon our coasts. The only real test of the value of any system of medicine is when it is brought face to face with an epidemic. The science which can arrest a bubobic plague is a verity, and any that cannot check its progress is a fraud, however lofty its claims. Failing to take a common-sense view of these facts has wrecked many a believer's faith; for when the collapse comes, which is sure to come, whatsoever is built upon the theory falls with it.

There is much wisdom in the following short article in a recent number of the Standard, by Rev. Walter B. Vassar.

> Whatever else a minister may or may not be, he should never be a talking machine. Ability to give utterance to his thoughts, this is one sign among others of a call to the ministry, but glibness of speech, if that is all a man can set forth as a reason for church orders, it were well the fallacy were dispelled early in his career. Greatness seldom shows itself in a great mouth. So long ago as the age of Moses, men saw that to be a herald there was a demand for easiness of speech, but if Moses had been efficient here and deficient in all else, how poorly he would have served his day and ours. Laws that never have been repealed—the Ten Words which Moses spoke—came from a man so far removed from a talking machine that his chief complaint and disquietude when called of God was, "O, my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant; but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue."
> Taken all in all, the open mouth has done more damage than good, thus far in the centuries. "Speech was given to the ordinary sort of men, whereby to communicate their mind; but to wise men whereby to conceal it." The training not only of children, but also of ministers, to think twice before they speak, might engage the attention of faculties of instruction, who are supposed to turn out the ready-made minister. None but the wise are of the opinion—
> "I had a thing to say;
> But I will fit it—with some better time."
> We hear the long sermon reprobated. It is not the long sermon, but the sermon long drawn out by word of mouth. It is this which kills devotion and makes the old refrain of Job pregnant with meaning in our own century—"Who is he that darkeneth counsel with words?" We speak of the minister, making him the pattern for all, though, alas, the responsibility.
> Swift had a way of using a lash that left a smart, and none the worse for that if the medicine were needed—
> "She [he] sits tormenting every guest,
> Nor gives her [his] tongue one moment's rest,
> In phrase batter'd stale, and trite,
> Which modern ladies call polite."

Our Budget.

—The terms soldier and hardships are almost synonymous.

—Next Sunday, September 4th, is the day for the offering for Church Extension. Though last in the year, it should by no means be the least.

—The great national debts of the world are chiefly war debts. What a sad comment upon the dispositions of men! What a tremendous burden thrown upon innocent parties!

—"On to Chattanooga" is again the cry. This time it is the gathering of the hosts of Zion for counsel on things pertaining to the kingdom of heaven. See notice in this paper.

—The International Evangel, of this city, for September, contains a good account of the World's Sunday-school convention, London, by its editor, W. J. Semelroth, of St. Louis. The Evangel is a good, all-round Sunday-school journal.

—The First Christian Church, of this city, having renovated, painted, grained, frescoed and carpeted their auditorium, and in fact the entire church house, in the absence of their pastor, on last Friday night, on his return to the city, gave him an informal reception. The house, in its new electric light and new, clean dress suit, presents a fine appearance, all of which will be enjoyed alike by the pastor, church and strangers within its gates. The reception was an occasion of much joy to all present.

—"Close the all-night saloons," says the Chicago Record. And permit us to add, the all-day saloons as well. They are crime-breeding places and have no decent claims to a place among civilized men.

—The war is proving a prolific source of literature for magazines and religious journals as well as for the secular daily press. Every phase of battleship and army life, equipment, heroism and hardship has been made the theme of repeated articles, and the end is not yet.

—Our readers will find an enjoyable article in this paper from our esteemed contemporary, the St. Louis Christian Advocate. We print the editorial in full because of its exhilarating influence upon the reader as well as for its interest and facts so interestingly portrayed.

—The range finders used so successfully on our warships in the late war has suggested to the Interior the idea of suggesting to the ministry the use of such an instrument in the delivery of their sermons. The idea is a good one provided the preacher has any solid shot to send toward an enemy; otherwise it would be an expensive luxury. By the way, why don't some inventive brain suggest to preachers the propriety of useing smokeless powder in the delivery of their sermons? Many good points in a sermon are often concealed in smoke, and sometimes there is nothing but smoke!

—Some people, preachers and papers talk about the annexation and non-annexation of the Philippine Islands as some other people talk about joining or not joining the churches, as though such a step affected our responsibilities pro or con. in the case. The non-annexation of the Philippine Islands cannot lessen our responsibilities toward the people of those islands in the face of the now wide-open door. Moral obligations of this character cannot be thrown off by closing our eyes or stopping our ears to their condition and to the facts. These obligations exist whether we annex these islands or not, and if not annexed it must be for some better reason than the fear of moral obligations.

—The second number of the Register-Review, Kansas City, Mo., has not devoted much space to lengthy, learned articles, but it is brimful of state news.

—If any appointments in the Santiago campaign or at Montauk Point, N. Y., were made for political effect, as some papers have alleged, tho political party making the appointment will in all probability be surprised at the result, in due season.

—At the August meeting of the Foreign Society at Cincinnati, the following appropriations were made for buildings in the foreign field: $2,000 for a lot and house in Lu Cheo Fu; $3,500 for a hospital in the same city; $4,000 for a home in Shanghai for one missionary family, and $4,000 for another. This money will be paid out of the Annuity Fund. Had it not been for the money received on the Annuity plan these buildings could not be erected. From this same fund buildings are now in course of erection in Japan and in India. Ten new missionaries leave for the field in September. Some go to India, some to Japan, some to China and some to Turkey. A special committee was appointed to take under advisement the propriety of entering Cuba and Puerto Rico. A number of men are ready to enter these fields with a view of establishing missions in them. The receipts for the month were $19,261.08. Of this amount $9,690 was received on the Annuity plan. The regular receipts for the month were slightly larger than those for the corresponding month one year ago.

—It is reported that Commodore Philip has protested to the Secretary of the Navy against his own promotion because it is made at the expense of his comrades and friends, who he believes have performed their duty quite as bravely and ably as he; but he cannot decline the promotion, for that would be equivalent to a resignation from the service. We cannot but commend this spirit of consideration for others. It is one of the noblest traits of our nature, and may be even called one of the Christian graces. Commodore Philip is not the only navy and other official who has shown this excellency of heart, but is none the less deserving of praise for it. The same principle carried into all our vocations would greatly alleviate jealousies, bickerings, strifes and other evils so prolific of friction and troubles among men.

—Allow me to express my sincere appreciation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I have often thought when reading it, What spiritual manna this is to me. Of the religious papers that come to my table the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is much the superior. May the brotherhood support you, that you may continue to give us such a paper, so full of spiritual food.

Fraternally yours, JOHN P. SALA.
Randolph, Ohio.

—From the Missionary Voice for August and October, a number of unusual interest, we learn that the receipts for Foreign Missions now aggregate $117,324.03. It also states that more churches, Sunday-schools and Endeavor Societies have responded this than any previous year. This is encouraging; but if this amount was the least of all our different missionary department receipts for the year, instead of the greatest, we should have much greater cause for rejoicing. Since writing the above we are otherwise informed that the total receipts have now reached $120,499.92.

—President McKinley has written a congratulatory letter to the army and navy Christian Commission and expresses the hope that this good work may continue. The D. L. Moody letters which have appeared in our columns will give our readers some idea of the character and extent of this Christianly work. The interest which Christian people have taken in the moral and spiritual welfare of the soldier in our war with Spain is somewhat unusual, and betokens the deep hold of Christian influence upon the conscience of the nation.

—The knowledge of the fact that "there's plenty of room at the top" is a strong temptation to some men to get there by the shortest route. Some succeed by climbing over the wall, but these become thieves and robbers. Only those who enter by the door of honest labor, real merit and a pure heart are worthy of the place.

—W. J. Russell, pastor of the Church of Christ at Kalamazoo, Mich., has a short article in the Daily Telegraph of that city severely criticising the double moral standard, and especially the church that refuses forgiveness and fellowship to penitent fallen women. The article was provoked by a reported case of this kind in "the Darlington Presbyterian Church," and concludes with the following strong but just rebuke of the unforgiving spirit in any church:

That church that refuses to grant forgiveness and welcome to the returning sinner has no mission in this world worthy to give it an existence. The curse of God rests upon such a congregation. The church has something to do to prepare herself for the coming Christ. This spirit of unforgiveness will send to hell many who profess to be Christians. It is time to do away with an empty profession, and show to the world the Spirit of the Master, who said: "Father, forgive them." When this is realized we can expect that the world will have confidence in the church, and not until then. In conclusion, let me appeal to the young women that they show "mercy" to the unfortunate of their number, and throw around the young womanhood of to-day all the help they possibly can.

—The Central Christian Church, San Antonio, Texas, believes in printer's ink. It has a conspicuous ad in the Sunday Light, of that city, accompanied by pregnant Scripture quotations.

—Our first statement concerning the time of the General Convention at Chattanooga, Tenn., was Oct. 14-20. We now learn that it is Oct. 13-21. The first statement is not in error but seems to include the full time. Remember the date Oct. 13-21.

—Next Monday is Labor Day, and its observance in honor of labor seems to be increasing with the passing years. There is no doubt but that the processional display of laborers and their professional classifications has a good effect upon the world. It is well for society to see occasionally how dependent it is upon labor for its existence. The moral effect of the observance of such a day is also good, barring the evils of drink and some other associated evils. The intellectuality of the laborer is manifested, and the value of good habits and good morals emphasized. A man does not lose his right to be called a gentleman because he is a laborer. Intellectually, morally and spiritually he may be as fit for the best society as the most polished autocrat in the land. It is good also to show that in the field of manual labor there is a demand for every mental, moral and spiritual faculty of man. Enlightened labor moves the world.

—The remark is frequently heard, "What a short summer this has been." This is a complaint most peculiar to elderly people, but this summer it is heard from both old and young. Doubtless the chief cause of this remark this year is the war which has just closed. The destruction of the Maine in Havana Harbor in February threw this country into a fever of excitement, and sensational events have since happened so rapid that the people were unconscious of the rapid transit of the months. And yet there are doubtless many exceptions to this rule; many to whom hours of anxious waiting for news seemed weeks of dreary time; many sick and suffering soldiers to whom the passing weeks were months of sluggish, painful life; many sad-hearted mothers who have lived years of time in the few months in which their sons have faced the dangers of the camp and the battlefield, and many whose remaining life will be spent under the shadow of death. How unequal, therefore, are our lives, and how imcompetent the sands of the hourglass to measure either the length or the number of our days.

PERSONAL MENTION.

A letter from Joel Brown, field agent for the Christian Orphans' Home, written from Goodland, Ind., states that he is receiving considerable encouragement wherever he has opportunity to present his mission. He was especially well received at the Fountain Park Assembly, where he was given $40.25 for the Home.

J. V. Coombs will dedicate the new church at Spring Creek, Cass county, Ind., September 11th.

B. S. Ferrall, pastor of the church at Watseka, Ill., with his wife, has been spending vacation at Lake James, Ind.

A. O. Swartwood will sing for W. A. Baker in a meeting at Walnut Corner, Ill., in September.

The Baptist News incidentally pays the following excellent tribute to Bro. J. C. Creel: "It is due Bro. Creel for us to say at this time that he is one of the most gentlemanly men we have ever met in public debate. It is also a fact that we have met very few who were abler."

J. T. Boone has returned to his work at Memphis, Mo., from his vacation in Tennessee.

F. M. Rogers, of Edina, Mo., has closed his labors for the church there in order to do evangelistic work in North Missouri. He was at Edina fifteen months, added thirty-three members, and raised $197 for missions. J. T. McGarvey, of La Belle, will succeed Bro. Rogers at Edina.

A. O. Hunsaker is singing for J. V. Coombs in a short meeting at Princeton, Ill., where Chas. D. Purlee ministers. Large audiences and good interest in the meeting are reported.

The editor of this paper preached at Grand Rapids, Mich., on last Sunday. On the same day the assistant editor preached at Compton Heights church in this city.

Miss Benella Davenport, a grandniece of Alxander Campbell, will teach in the Summerlin Institue, Barton, Florida, this summer. Miss Davenport's parents were married in Mammoth Cave, Kentucky, Sept. 29th, 1868, at 9:30 A. M.

The address of T. A. Abbott, Corresponding Secretary, is now 4760 Kennerly Ave., St. Louis, Mo. Don't send to Louisiana. Be sure and put street and number on, and your mail will reach him promptly. This is now his permanent address.

M. S. Errett has resigned as pastor at North Topeka, Kas., and has accepted the position of district evangelist for the second district of Kansas, consisting of eight counties along the eastern boarder. He is now in a meeting at Conway Springs, where Clyde Sharp is pastor and will begin work in the district with a meeting at De Soto, Sept. 1. E. R. Phillips is the pastor at De Soto, and reports everything ready for a good meeting. I. A. Smith, of Ossowotomie, held at week's institute at De Soto two weeks ago that was well received by the people.

David Husband and wife, of Olivia, Minn., were recently made happy by the gift of a daughter to their home.

W. H. Bybee, of Bolivar, Mo., writes that he has resigned his work for the church at that place on account of its financial burden or stress, and is at liberty to engage elsewhere. For information about his efficiency inquiring parties are requested to write to Dr. J. R. Winn, a member of the official board of the church at Bolivar.

J. P. Davis, who has been preaching at Paw Paw, Mich., for a year, will be compelled to change his field of labor for want of sufficient support. He is loved by the church and highly commended for his efficient services, but they are not strong enough financially to retain him. He will be at liberty to engage for work elsewhere October 1st. Correspondence may be addressed to him at Paw Paw, Mich.

T. E. Jones, the evangelistic singer, of Chicago, has been spending a week at Macatawa Park and delighting the audience with his fine singing. Evangelists desiring a fine soloist to accompany them will do well to correspond with him at 9 Lane Place, Chicago, Ill.

Cecil J. Armstrong, the minister of the church at Edgerton and Grayson, Mo., recently resigned there in order to attend Kentucky University. In 1896 he graduated in the College of the Bible, but now desires to take a more extended course. Any congregation in reach of Lexington, Ky., desiring a preacher might secure one by addressieg Bro. Armstrong at once.

I. N. Hale writes us from Monroe, Wis., that Eld. J. H. Berkley, formerly a "Christian Adventist," together with his family, all of that city, have taken membership in the Christian Church at that place. Bro. Berkley has an extensive reputatin as a lecturer on temperance, having lectured in many states east and west and is said to be a man of great efficiency and usefulness. We trust that his field of usefulness will be greatly enlarged by taking his stand with us for Christ and for primitive Christianity.

J. H. MacNeill, pastor of the church at Rushville, Ind., recently made formal announcement of his resignation, which had already been tendered the official board. The announcement was the occasion of deep sorrow to the audience, in whose esteem Bro. MacNeill occupied a high place. His pastorate began in March, 1888, and since then 800 new members have been added to the church. His great work was the erection of the magnificent new $30,000 church house on North Main Street, and the $4,000 parsonage adjoining. His untiring zeal for the welfare of his flock is known to all.

The writer was called to Albany, Ore., on the 19th of this month to baptize Rev. C. M. Lane who, for the last three years, has been preaching for the Cumberland Presbyterians. Bro. Lane had "become tired of creed bondage and desired the liberty of Christ," as he expressed it, and is now happy in a service as full and free as the New Testament allows. Bro. Lane is a man of good ability and pleasing manner. He is a graduate of the Southwestern Presbyterian and the Vanderbilt Universities, 38 years old, married and has held pastorates in San Francisco, Oakland and Middletown, Cal., before coming to Oregon. The Christian Church in Albany was without a pastor and will be served by Bro. Lane for sometime.

MORTON D. ROSE.

Ex-Governer Mathews died at the home of Isaac Meharry, ten miles north of Crawfordsville, Ind., Sunday, Aug. 28th, from a stroke of paralysis received while addressing the old settlers of Montgomery county during the week. He was elected governor of Indiana in 1892.

B. B. Tyler, who has been spending the summer with the church at Colorado Springs, will leave that city on the 12th prox. to hold a meeting in the Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky. From there he will go the Chattanooga Convention, and thence return for awhile longer to Colorado Springs, where he is filling a temporary engagement. He reports the work there as in excellent condition, the audiences testing the capacity of the house, and the free-will offerings of the people more than meeting the current expenses. The outlook, he says, is full of ecouragement.

The Bulletin, Kent Ohio, August 13th, announces the resignation of of F. M. Green as pastor of the Christian Church at that place. He has been the preacher of the church at Kent for two years. He is also well known to the entire brotherhood as a vigorous writer for our church papers and an author. The Kent Bulletin says: "Rev. Green is a faithful and ardent worker in the Christian cause and the members of his congregation, as well as a wide acquaintance outside of the church have learned to love and respect him as a Christian man, an eloquent preacher and a genial gentleman." After a few weeks' rest Bro. Green will be available for duty elsewhere. Any church in need of a strong, efficient preacher should not lose this opportunity of securing the man they need.

J. W. Allen, of Cleveland, O., who was pastor of the West Side Church for thirteen years, and saw it grow from a small body of believers into the grand company that now compose its membership, came to preach for us last Lord's day, on his annual visit to the church he loves so well. This visit, like all previous ones, was an occasion of great joy to all the members, who fairly took Bro. Allen in their arms, so happy were they to meet again their former pastor and beloved friend. And Bro. Allen fully reciprocated this generous and true expression of love and esteem on the part of the members. He spoke in glowing terms of the solidarity of the West Side Church; its marvelous growth and perfect unity of its members, and the cordial and undivided support which they are giving their pastor. Its future, he declared, was "brighter than ever." Indeed, we have been wonderfully blessed. In the past seven months there has been added to the church ninety-two earnest, active and consecrated members, and a special service of thanksgiving will be held when the number of additions shall have reached one hundred. The Lord has helped us beyond our faith. The magnitude of our audiences and the healthy state of our finances are things which our fondest expectations hardly hoped to realize. BRUCE BROWN,
Pastor West Side Church, Chicago.

A MISSIONARY'S WIFE

Interesting Letter from India—A Long Summer Season.

The following letter is from the wife of an American Baptist missionary at Nowgong, Assam, India: "After living here for several years I found the climate was weakening me. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla every summer. This I found so beneficial that I now take one dose every morning for nine months in the year, that is, through the hot weather. My general health is excellent and my blood is in good condition. My weight does not vary more than one pound throughout the year. I find Hood's Sarsaparilla indispensable in the summer and recommend it for use in a debilitating climate." MRS P. H. MOORE.

The above letter is similar to thousands received and constantly coming in.

AMERICA OR ROME? CHRIST OR THE POPE?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

In the history of the world there has never been a more opportune time for Protestantism to show the errors of Catholicism. The curtain has just risen revealing a long line of misrule and oppression by the Romish Church. It only now remains for the world to look on Rome's theater of action and decide for itself on the merits of the part she has played.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA—WAR COMING.

Ever since I traveled in Russia I have loved the Russian people as sincrely as I have hated the Russian Government. That bureaucratic despotism is the most brutal form of tyranny now existing on earth, excepting only the rule of the infernal Sultan of Turkey, with whom your American ambassador was not ashamed to dine, according to the reports current and uncontradicted in the dreadful days of the Armenian massacres. The Sultan and the Tsar answer very well indeed, for all present practical purposes, to the two Beasts of the Revelation. Of course this is not meant, on my part, by any means as a theological interpretation, but it is a sensible and intelligible political one. The young Tsar of Russia is doubtless a very amiable fellow, but unfortunately, he is but a gilded figurehead to the hideous battering ram which is ere long to be sent crashing with fatal impetus into the fabric of modern civilization. For the last two years the chief agents of the Tsar, Muravieff and Pavloff, have been lying and cheating in their diplomatic dealings to an extent which is perhaps only fully known by Lord Salisbury. First about Armenia, then about Crete, then about Greece, and now about China these two Muscovite statesmen have been forging unbroken chains of falsehood. In every case they have stolen a march on Europe, and they have specially aimed at deceiving England. I wish the whole world could be made to understand that there is at this moment arising in Britain a quiet, suppressed but intense feeling of anger at the astounding and cold-blooded treachery of the Russian Government in all its dealings with the international difficulties. Lest it may be imagined that I am writing from the standpoint of individual imagination, I will right here quote the words written in an English paper this week by one of the most accomplished men I know. This gentleman says, "Russia is playing so fast a game in China, that if she continues it, it will inevitably land her in war with us, and no personal affection of princes will avert it. If Lord Salisbury ventures now to retract his stated policy in the Lords, in his August speech, he will find the solid earth of confidence is a mere shivering morass into which he and his government will be gravitated and be swallowed up by public anger. There is no capitulation or going back now or ever any more possible. And if we are to have war it could hardly come at a better time. In ten years it could hardly come at a worse. Give Russia time to make Port Arthur another Kronstadt, and then whistle to the winds for any success ahead and they will not hear us! The true diplomacy would have been a working policy with Russia, but her Muravieffs and Pavloffs will respect no treaties and are bound by no promises. That line of diplomatic life is certain, and that is that Russia will never go to war with England unless she can rely on the co-operation of France and the neutrality of Germany. Unfortunately, she is fairly sure of both. I fear that at no remote date war will ensue, that it will involve all the great nations of Europe, that it will be the final crash so long expected, out of which a totally new state of things will emerge, and that the present discipline of America in her war with Spain is a Providentail warning to your great nation to get ready for the tremendous duty which will devolve on your grand republic. I fully credit the whispers that are mooted privately about, according to which it is hinted that Lord Salisbury knows too well that a great coalition is being steadily plotted by the carnal military despotisms of the continent against England, who is execrated as the representative in Europe of democratic right and civil and religious freedom. The time is approaching when the world's only hope will be in something more than a sentimental alliance between Britain and America.

PASTOR RAPKIN'S NEW BOOK.

I willingly pass on to a more peaceful topic. Our indefatigable evangelist at Margate is bravely pursuing his remarkable work. His nightly open-air preaching on the beautiful beach is again bringing friends into sympathy with our cause. He has been baptizing, as in previous summers, persons who, visiting Margate from London and elsewhere, have stopped to listen to him on the shore and have learned the truth there under the sky which they had never heard before. I have just received from Bro. George Rapkin a copy of a new book from his pen, entitled "Baptsm." It is a small work of only 174 octavo pages, but as a simple, lucid, scriptural and popularly written treatise it is a masterpiece. For Baptists who are in a muddle, as most Baptists are whom I ever heard of, and for those who are entirely opposed to the New Testament truth on the subject, this is the ideal volume, although it is not intended by the author for students who need a learned and exhaustive presentation. There is a feature in the book which makes it exceedingly pleasant and enlightening to read. In every case the texts which are referred to are fully quoted. How very desirable this is, and how few authors help their busy readers in this way! Generally we are pointed to a crowd of texts which few people have time to hunt up. But in Rapkin's pages all the verses of the New Testament on baptism are displayed before the reader's eyes as they come along in the easy and triumphat argument. The only blemish in the book is the lapse of the printer into an occasional curious misprint. You have perhaps a plethora of books on this subject in America, but if any are looking for something fresh to put into the hands of seekers after truth, they might do worse than to secure this work. It will be mailed direct to American friends from Pastor G. Rapkin, Myrtle Villas, Margate, free for 50 cents a copy, bound in cloth, or 40 cents in paper, the cash to be sent in stamps.

TOO MUCH GRANDFATHER.

The holiday vacation still proceeds with its "usual severity." Our churches are greatly depleted in the towns inland, though great congregations are assembling to rejoice the hearts of ministers of seaside churches. The English people are in one respect admirably faithful. They certainly transport their religion with them wherever they go. At Cromer, on the lovely Norfolk shore, I found that the churches and chapels of the little town were crowded out, and at the parish church, a grand and stately building, the vicar had to arrange for overflow meetings in the town hall. Moreover, I found that notwithstanding the attractions of a beach and cliff, moors and woods, were naturally supreme in their claims on people seeking well-earned rest and recreation, yet week-evening meetings were excellently attended. I have always found it so. Our Christian people for the most part act up to their profession, with all their faults. The salt has not lost its savor in dear old England. One thing at our English resorts, or at very many of them, I may mention, from which you Americans are free. It is very tiring and embarrassing in this country to be unable anywhere to get away from one's great-grandfather, who is of course an interesting old fellow, but is rather a tedious drag when we want to ramble about, forgetting the cares of the dead past and seeking only to enjoy life for a brief spell, on the "carpe diem" principle of old Horace. At almost any of our nicest watering-places we have history flung at us in a heavy volume at every corner. For instance now, take a trip to dear old Whitby, on the lovely Yorkshire Coast. Can anything be more charming? Hardly. But you soon have to learn that the history of Whitby goes back to Roman days and to 547, when Ina landed at Flamborough and founded the Saxon kingdom of Northumbria. I am very glad that it happened, but yet I think it is a little bit boring to have to venerate these musty worthy ancestors when we just want to stop our "thinkers" for a few dreamy hours, while we listen to what the wild waves are saying. However, as I mentioned Whitby, I may say that it lies on a coast which would charm any strolling American friends. The fame of the quaint little fishing town is intimately connected with its abbey and its famous abbess, Hilda. About 656 Hilda, accompanied by the king's daughter Aeflida, who afterwards succeeded her, founded a relig ous settlement on the East Cliff. The church was probably formed of the trunks of trees split in two, having side lights partially secured by light lattices, or boards pierced with holes. The building would be thatched with rushes. Around it were huts of the simplest character in which the nuns resided. There now! That is how religion grew up in Britain more than a thousand years ago. And that is how we poor weary Britishers have to tire ourselves out in the perpetual study of history when we go off for a holiday. Oh, what perambulating encyclopædias we ought to be! It would send Mark Twain silly. Perhaps that is why he keeps far away from our shores. Now, I envy you Americans your country for holiday making, for the most comfortable feature about the United States is that they have no history, and it will take them over a millennium longer to grow one such as we have on this side. Nobody in America has a great grandfather. What a blessed negation of Providence! I notice, Bro. Garrison, that you do not have to "get up" anything about your beautiful Macatawa, for it is not burdened with history, chronology, mythology, archæology and ecclesiology! I wish I could come there to get away for a season from too many great-grandfathers. Be very thankful for your escape—and carpe diem!

Wheeling Through England.

VII.

A visit to Hawarden has two objects. One is to see the place where Gladstone lived; the other is to talk with the villagers and get their view of the great man who lived in their midst. The first-named object is easy enough of accomplishment. The park and grounds about Hawarden Castle, which was Mr. Gladstone's home, are open to the public at all reasonable hours. The grounds are of considerable extent and the mansion is such as was appropriate for the home of the great commoner—beautiful and dignified, but not magnificent like the castle of a lord. Even more interesting than the ride tarough the park were the conversations which we had with the people of the village, but the latter required more tact. One feels it in the air, somehow, that the name of Gladstone is not one to be lightly spoken in the presence of these people who knew and loved him. To ask them bluntly what they thought of Gladstone would be like abruptly asking a man what he thinks of his father and wife. There is a reverence and affection in the attitude of the villagers of Hawarden toward Gladstone for which it is difficult to find a parallel. One would be convinced here, if he were not elsewhere, of the goodness as well as the greatness of the man. We found accommodations for the night at the humble cottage of a dear old lady whose daughter, as we afterwards learned, was in service in the Gladstone household. Gradually, as she became convinced of the genuineness of my admiration for "the old gentleman," as he was called in the village, she spoke more and more freely of his character, his many acts of kindness to the poor of the village and to the servants of his own household. "He was such a good man," she said, "and he had so much good-will for everybody that it made us all kinder to be near him and to see him once in a while." Tears came to her eyes as she spoke of the last time she had seen him, and showed me a copy of his last picture. When Gladstone died, the world placed a wreath upon the grave of the statesman and the scholar, but the villagers of Hawarden are still mourning the loss of a father.

It is only half an hour's run from Hawarden into Chester. To the left we get an occasional glimpse of the "Sands o' Dee," the estuary of the river Dee, with its treacherous quicksands. An old lady told us that she almost lost her first husband there, and her tone seemed to imply that the experience of later life had taught her to be more careful with her subsequent husbands, and not to lose them so recklessly. Chester is a charming city, which unites the quaintness of mediævalism with the more modern virtues of cleanliness and general municipal respectability. The secret of the combination lies in the fact that everything old has been retained with judicious restorations and repairs, and that the new buildings have been built in architectural harmony with the old. After a stop of a few hours, part of which is utilized in walking entirely around the city on the top of the old city walls, we ride on a few miles into Berkinhead, whence a ferryboat takes us across the Mersey to Liverpool. Just six weeks have elapsed since we left Liverpool in a rainstorm, and the distance, as we have made it, from Liverpool to Liverpool by way of Dover and Land's End, is one thousand six hundred and sixty-nine miles.

We go to bed early that night in Liverpool, preparatory to an early start for a day's run which will carry us into the heart of the English Lake District, and straightway fall to dreaming of shimmering lakes, of rivulets bounding down mountain sides and of frothy waterfalls. The waterfalls, even in the dream, become more noisy than a dream has any right to be, and gradually, but all to soon, I realize that instead of a visionary Lodore, I am listening to a very real and very wet Liverpool rain on a Liverpool tin roof. It proved to be the persistent sort of rain, the conscientious and hard-working kind which begins its day's work before sunrise and continues until the six o'clock whistle blows. Obviously it was no day for cycling, neither was it much of a day for seeing Liverpool to advantage, except that part of it which is indoors. Accordingly we spent the day visiting art galleries and museums. Perhaps on the whole the most cheerful feature of the day was a giddy set of chimes in some church steeple or in the tower of the town hall, which played the gay and classic air which is generally designated by the first line of the words which accompany it, "My father and mother were Irish." So the day passed. The next day was fine, and with a wind at our backs it was an easy ride of ninety miles from Liverpool to Bowness-on-Windermere. It was twilight again when we rode along the shore of Windermere, and the scene will have a place in our gallery of English twilight scenes.

Harriet Martineau, who lived for several years in this region, described the climate of the Lake District as "moist, but not damp." If I dared to put my experience of three days against her of several years I would say that the Lake District is neither moist nor damp, but soaking wet! Perhaps this generalization would be too hasty, for our first day in Lakeland was one of the sort unparallaled in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. A steady downpour of rain, punctuated and emphasized by thunder and lightning, left us little chance of seeing the land of Wordsworth that day, but gave a splendid opportunity to read his poetry. With this preparation we were the more ready on the following day to plunge into the midst of what Lowell called "Wordsworthshire," and what another has called "the 'Oh my!' country." Both names are appropriate, for whenever the delight of the traveler rises above the point of mere incoherent exclamation ("Oh my!" "Ah!" "Um-m-m") it is sure to run in the channel which Wordsworth has made for it. Southey and Coleridge come to mind occasionally, but Wordsworth is never absent. He has become an element in the scenery.

The road from Bowness to Keswick, through Windermere, Ambleside, Rydal and Grasmere, is the north and south diameter of the Lake District. The total distance is little more than twenty miles, but it furnishes ground for one full day of riding, with occasional digressions on foot into the mountains at either side. Late in the afternoon, as our road is winding between the foot of Helvellyn and the edge of Thirlmere, it occurs to us that this mountain, the second in height in England, ought to be ascended to obtain a comprehensive view of the district. A stony bridlepath leads to the top, but the recent rains have transformed this into the bed of a mountain "beck," and it is more convenient to pick a path for ourselves up the green and grassy slope. It is an easier ascent than Snowden, and though it is not as high by six hundred feet, the view from the top is perhaps even more beautiful. It was dark when we rode into Keswick that Saturday night, and there we stopped over Sunday.

Chicago Letter.

In my last letter I referred to the Tidewater convention, which was royally entertained at Mathews, where our energetic, wide-awake Bro. Walker labors. Mathews county, Va., is so indented by inlets from the Chesapeake Bay that I was informed a stob could not be driven in the ground anywhere in the county more than two miles from tidewater. Many of our best workers in the churches on the Atlantic Seaboard have gone from this county. Here J. Z. Tyler's noble soul-mate was reared. After meeting Sister Tyler's excellent mother and hospitable sisters, I can truthfully say she is a fair sample of the entire family. Here Captain Bohanan, of Baltimore, fished, plowed corn, ate fried chicken and grew to man's estate. I was entertained at the home of Judge Garnet, where I saw a watermill with a wheel which turned one way when the tide was coming in and in the opposite direction when the tide was going out. The foundation of this mill was laid before the Revolutionary War. The old colonial house, built facing the water and surrounded by century-old trees, makes a delightful summer resort. Here the Judge, Sister Garnet and their manly Christian sons regale their guests with oysters and chickens of their own raising. They keep carriages for driving through the pines, and a fine sailboat for sailing on the water. I commend this quiet retreat to those who contemplate spending a few weeks on the Bay Shore. Here I found Bro. Bagby, who writes our Washington letter. He will write up the convention.

No one of our preachers on the Atlantic Seaboard is working more heroically to advance the cause of primitive Christianity in that important section of our wide domain than Peter Ainslie, who in addition to the duties of a city pastorate edits the Christian Tribune. Bro. Ainslee, like the great poet Wordsworth in his day, has a sister to whom he owes much. It was my pleasure to spend a day and night on the Chesapeake Bay in the company of this pure-minded, noble-hearted brother. His brother preachers, who have known him from early boyhood, tell me that Peter Ainslie's thoughts were as pure and his language as chaste when he was a schoolboy as they are in ripening manhood. Indeed, the child is father of the man. The steamer ride on the Chesapeake Bay from Mathews to Baltimore was a very instructive one to me. The thousands of square miles of shoal water is the secret of its great fisheries. Oyster tonging, crab catching, poggy seining, herring netting and shad fishing are all carried on on a scale which is simply stupendous, yielding millions of dollars to the dwellers on the bay. At one landing, just as the sun was setting, I saw fourteen large sailboats, each having a crew of sixteen or more men, and all loaded with fish (I was told several thousand in each boat) from which oil could be made for the railroads and fertilizing for the farms. I did not realize before how many millions of fish were used every year in our country for fertilizing.

After several weeks of very hard work, speaking two or three times each day, I came direct to Chicago from Baltimore over the Baltimore and Ohio. I have hardly ever had a more delightful trip from Washington to Pittsburg over this line. At Harper's Ferry I saw many historic landmarks. At Connecesville I saw miles of coke-ovens; at Braddock, where the memorable defeat of the general of that name occurred, are the great Carnegie iron foundries where several hundred tons of iron are turned out daily. From Harper's Ferry the road gradually ascends the mountains, keeping close to the Potomac River. Beyond Cumberland you plunge through a long tunnel and descend the Alleghenies, following the line of Washington's march along the Youghiogheny River. I paid my fare over the Baltimore and Ohio, and these lines are not written to advertise that road, but I want my friends to enjoy the rare scenic beauty and exhilarating mountain air which I enjoyed on this trip. I reached Chicago after a twenty-four hours' run, really rested.

The churches of Chicago usually take a rest during the summer, while his Satanic Majesty is especially active. This summer, however, most of our churches have been pressing forward in the midst of difficulties, which only workers in a great city like Chicago can appreciate. Our evangelist, E. W. Darst, has gone to Vermont for a brief vacation, but before going he planted a new congregation at Irving Park, a suburb of Chicago. The writer spoke for them last Lord's day. They have a nucleus of seventy-five good members, many of whom Bro. Darst has recently baptized. I have never known a new work in Chicago to start out under more hopeful conditions. It is an excellent commentary on the importance of city evangelization. Young Bro. Morrison is holding the fort at Monroe Street. Every one speaks highly of him and his work. His brother, Charles Morrison, will become the permanent pastor of the congregation in September. The congregation at Monroe Street are most excellent people, and with such a leader as Bro. Morrison they have a bright future before them. We regret to learn that Bro. N. S. Haynes has been ill. After a number of years of most faithful service he has resigned his pastorate at Englewood. The Englewood church has a number of noble, consecrated members. Bro. Haynes is not only a strong preacher, but also an efficient Bible teacher, and his congregation, fed upon the truth as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord, has grown strong in word and doctrine. A large number of our preachers have been attending the summer school of the University of Chicago. I had hoped to give their names in this letter. Perhaps the head of the Disciples' Divinity House will furnish me the names of those who are in residence, for a future letter. Bro. F. N. Calvin and family, of Waco, Tex.; Bro. Ellis and wife, of Nashville, Tenn.; Bro. Jno. Darsie, and many others have spent part of their vacation in Chicago.

The closing lecture in the series on Christian union, given under the auspices of the Disciples' Club, of the University of Chicago, was given in Haskell Hall last Friday night. The lecturer was Bro. J. H. O. Smith. The previous lecturers have been representatives of various religious bodies. Bro. Smith's lecture was not only scriptural, but was also a fine literary production. It is my understanding that this series of lectures are to be published. However, I cannot pass it by without a brief notice. The three points the lecturer was asked to consider were—1. "Is Christian union practical?" 2. "If so, in what form?" 3. "What is the attitude of your denomination toward Christian union?" The paper dealt with Christian union as a union of persons rather than of denominations. First, he maintained the practicability of Christian union. This was illustrated by the history of the early church. Second, as to form, "Not a union of denominations, not a compromise, not an ironclad ecclesiasticism, not uniformity of opinion, but unity in Christ." Here the scriptural meaning of the phrase, "In Christ," was clearly brought out. As our readers are familiar with the attitude of our brotherhood on the question which has been so fully discussed under the auspices of the Disciples' Club, they will appreciate the thorough treatment Bro. Smith gives the subject when this lecture is published. In closing I shall give a brief and inadequate statement of the year's work at the People's Institute, under the leadership of J. H. O. Smith and his helpmeet.

The Union Christian Church was organized a year ago with two hundred and eighteen members. During the year the membership has grown to six hundred and fifty. The Sunday-school has grown from three hundred and seventeen to seven hundred and eighty-three in attendance, with an enrollment of one thousand. The three Endeavor Societies from 165 to 650; the C. W. B. M. from fifteen to seventy-five; King's Daughters from twenty to fifty-five; Ladies' Union from twenty-five to forty-eight, etc., etc. These facts speak volumes. They mean unceasing work and strong leadership. This is a great work to be accomplished in such a great city as Chicago.

C. A. YOUNG.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

Since the war before the late war our cause in old Virginia has not made very rapid progress.

There has been a decided growth in Richmond and in several of the cities in the Shenandoah Valley and the southwestern section of the state. In the country districts of the Tidewater and Piedmont sections we have made but little advance. The work in the latter district for some years has been especially discouraging.

The annual Piedmont convention was slimly attended, but little money was raised and the results of co-operative work meager. Those who foresaw the possible disintegration of the Piedmont co-operation, which had once been the pride of the state, decided upon an advanced movement. This year the Piedmont Assembly was inaugurated. We believe it will mark the beginning of a new era in the history of the Disciples of the state. The site chosen is an ideal one.

In a beautiful oak grove, about one mile from Gordonsville, upon a slope commanding a magnificent view of the Blue Ridge Mountains, the tabernacle with a seating capacity of 1,500 has been built. The meetings this year were eminently successful. Some days as many as 2,000 people were upon the grounds.

The sons of Old Virginia are loyal to their mother and usually come home for their summer vacation.

The committee drafted these into service. Among the preachers present were L. A. Cutler, Z. P. Richardson and Richard Bagby, of Louisia; H. C. Garrison and L. M. Omer, of Richmond; Preston Cave, of Hagerstown, Md.; F. D. Power and E. B. Bagby, of Washington, D. C.; W. J. Cocke, of Uniontown, Pa.; Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, Md.; W. H. Book and J. C. Dickson, of Clifton Forge; C. A. Young, of Chicago, Ill.; P. B. Hall, of Orange, Cal.; S. R. Maxwell, of Rockville, Md.; M. A. Stickley, of Strasburg; L. W. Cave, of Spotsylvania; E. R. Perry, of Virginia.

No one need doubt the loyalty of these brethren to the old plea. It seems that nearly every one who came was loaded with a sermon on Christian Union. After having three addresses on this theme the committee requested every speaker to choose some other subject.

The week following the Piedmont Assembly the brethren of the Tidewater district met in their thirty-second annual convention. One hundred delegates and visitors from the various churches were present. The 28 churches in this district report a membership of 4,370, additions during the year, 358, and $17.881 raised for all purposes. The missions in West Point and Fredericksburg were assisted. Special attention will be given to the building up of the church in the latter place during the coming year.

One of the most interesting sessions of the convention was that given to the ladies of the C. W. B. M. The reports show 21 auxiliaries with 450 members and $536.65 raised.

Mathews is not one of the largest counties in the state, but it is certainly one of the most delightful. There is not a farm in the county more than two miles from salt water. Yet in spite of this Mathews is known as a dry county. Some ten years ago the good people made an effort to expel the saloon. There were 600 ballots cast and of these only 55 were for abolishing the saloon. Two years another effort was made and a glorious victory resulted. Judge G. T. Garnett, who entertains so royally all visiting preachers at his palatial home, Poplar Grove, gave during the convention an interesting account of this election. Both sides knew that the issue hinged upon the vote of the colored people. The negro preachers were a unit against the saloon and this meant much. There lived upon Judge Garnett's farm a colored man, Robert Brooks by name, who wielded considerable influence. The judge argued with him by the hour, but could not convince him that it was his duty to come out on the side of the temperance people. The negroes had arranged an anti-saloon meeting in White's Neck. The baser element of that section began to collect bad eggs and other missiles and said they would break up the meeting. The officers of the Westville Christian church offered their colored brethren the use of their house of worship for their rally.

At this meeting the negro leaders arranged an ingenious scheme to capture Bob Brooks. The meeting was called to order and the leader called Bob Brooks to offer the opening prayer. That settled it. Of course Bro. Brooks could not pray for the triumph of liquor, but must beseech the throne of grace for its suppression. Then this brother in black knew no better than to vote as he prayed, and many followed his example. At his precinct it was three o'clock before a vote for license was cast. The county went dry by a vote of 761. After this triumph for temperance the key of the old jail did not turn in its lock for three years. Eight out of every ten boys in the county under twenty-one never saw a drop of liquor sold.

W. G. Walker, the pastor of Westville church, has been holding tent meetings in a section of Mathews county where there is no Christian church. Twenty-four persons had been baptized at last report and the meeting continues. A new church will be the result of this meeting.

This has not been a favorable season for tent meetings. In Baltimore, W. J. Wright has been greatly hindered by thunder storms that have been of almostly nightly occurrence. Some converts have been gained, much good seed sown and the work goes on.

EDWARD B. BAGBY.

Texas Letter.

The liquor question is a living question, and good people are always anxious to know the facts about it. The department of labor at Washington has been investigating it, with some interesting results. We learn that distilled spirits are decreasing and that malt liquors are increasing. The change in the per capita consumption for the 16 years between 1880 and 1896 in spirits was from 1.27 gallons to 1 gallon; in wines from 0.56 of a gallon to 0.16 of a gallon; and in malt liquors from 8.26 gallons to 15.16 gallons. This shows that the drinking of distilled spirits fell off one-fifth in sixteen years, and that of wines about one-half; while the increase in the consumption of beer almost doubled. The production of spirits decreased about 1,400,000 gallons, notwithstanding the population increased 20,000,000, while the production of beer increased 175 per cent. Five-sevenths of the manufacturers take into consideration the drinking habit when employing men, and one-half require their men to abstain entirely during working hours. Night work and exposure does not increase the inclination to drink. This is quite opposite the popular opinion. But irregularity of work does increase the drinking habit. The custom of treating is the source of much if not most of the drinking. Thus the social instincts, a thing most harmless and desirable in itself, is at the bottom of most of this wickedness and waste.

R. E. Grabel leaves Mesquite and takes up the work at Big Springs. Grabel is a fine fellow, but he lacks a female assistant in his work.

M. L. Hoblit, our Mexican missionary, was married to Miss Orpha Bennett, of Keokuk, Iowa, on August 18. Now we may expect better work down in the the land of the Montezumas.

A. S. Henry, financial agent for Add-Ran University, is an unqualified success. For example, he went to Midland, one of our far-West churches, a few days since, and raised $3,000! He then turns prophet and says, "You need not be surprised if this church gives $10,000 to Add-Ran within the next five years." But it must not be forgotten that he could not have done this but for the assistance of that splendid church and its brilliant pastor.

R. R. Hamlin, of Palestine, has done more fine work at Martindale. There were 52 additions; 37 baptisms. Two of them were husband and wife, aged 76 and 67. As the husband came up out of the water he said, "Thank God, it is done; but I wish it had been done forty years ago." Money was raised for a pastor half the time.

B. F. Wilson changes from Sherman to Plano. And on the threshold of his ministry the people are talking new house. That is good, for they need it.

J. B. Faulkner and J. G. Huddleston have held a good meeting at Johnson, with 22 additions. Three years ago we had almost nothing here, but now we have 100 members, and a controlling influence in the community.

J. B. Boen held a meeting last year in Meridian, a good railroad town. They have had no regular preaching, and yet they have built a tabernacle with a seating capacity of 1,000; and best of all, every member is an active worker in the church.

Granville Jones, our pastor at Midland, has organized a church at Granado. It was a new place and he preached several days before giving an invitation. But on Sunday morning he extended an invitation to all who desired to become members of a church modeled after the New Testament example, and to be known as "Christians," when 33 people responded. They were organized, and the meeting continued with 20 more additions. A lot was secured and more than one-third of the money for a house was raised. Rosenberg, El Campo and Edna are good towns, and it is hoped that they will also have congregations and houses soon.

Tom Smith's meeting at Farney closed with 21 additions. It was a success. The work at that important point is doing well in the hands of Pastor McClendon.

H. B. Lingan reports successful work at Smithville. A sure evidence of this is seen in the fact that they expect to have a new house in a few months.

Our colored brethren have just closed their annual convention in this city. The attendance was small, and the outlook is not encouraging. M. M. DAVIS.

Chautauqua Notes.

The meeting of ministers of all denominations is held daily in Methodist headquarters, and the experiences, hopes and fears of a class of thinking men, responsible for so much as these men are, to the people, makes the hour very interesting. One from the West accounts for an improvement in the schools of theology by teaching more of God's Word, by searching for explanations of truth, Christ and the apostles, while a Baptist felt there was something lacking in the theological training, and queried if the theological mysteries were helpful. He could not help but say, there was need of Scripture teaching. The modern way of evangelizing, by great men of reputation and large pay, was objected to by a Methodist brother, and it was repeated by several, that the converts did not stay with the churches. A Presbyterian was deploring the lack of family worship, and reading of the Scriptures, while another excused his people on the ground that workingmen in cities left home early in the morning. One old brother thought men should not be preached straight to heaven, but that the Word said there was a hell, and people should know it, ere it was too late. Another minister laid aside all papers and helps in Sunday-school class and took the Bible into the school Sunday morning and taught from it with gratifying results.

These meetings are very interesting and the very great feeling of unrest in the religious world causes anxiety, while all stand firmly for a return to the true teachings of the Bible.

Prof. H. L. Willett's straightforward work cheers, brought many charms, and his making of Bible truths to explain themselves from all the lights of prophecy, and the explanations of the epistles, as helpers to those who had lived so near to the life and times of Christ; all of which was said in the most happy way, of which the Professor is master, make him an acknowledged power in the class-room and on the rostrum. Bro. Sweeney had profound attention on Sunday evening, and the Monday lecture was popular, gainingen thusiastic applause. John Miller spoke to the Grangers on Saturday, and in discussing his subject took great pains in his masterly speech to show that the United States is sufficient unto itself for all needs as a nation, and to hold her own place independently in the world. Dr. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., spoke yesterday on living and eating food, the health of man, etc. His theory of vegetables and fruits, to beat the microbes, was well given. And so we have all subjects discussed here which are healpful, and in a very strong spirit of union and strength does Chautauqua go forward.

The most good can be accomplished here with smallest expense of money of any place in America, and so we all rejoice in the help which comes in to pay for the headquarters. A world of thinking people come here, and they see and ask to know us. Of the hundreds of names registered I note a few: Bro. J. W. Thomas and wife, Bro. Walker and wife, Bro. Hilligan and his mother, from Kentucky; Bro. Smither and wife, from California; the Blanks family, from Texas; L. Darsie and family, Bro. Smootz and family and Bro. L. C. McPherson, New York; Bro. Gable and family, from Cleveland, Mrs. Mary Cain and daughter and T. W. Phillips and family, from New Castle, Pa. Officers at the association were all re-elected. There is still another week of the Assembly. W. J. FORD.

A Farmer Among the Turks and Russians.

During the most frienzied fury and wildest excitement of Turkish atrocities and Armenian massacres, we made a journey through the Turkish and Russian Empires. In 100 days our passport was in greater demand than in twenty years of travel in almost every other part of the world. Before getting through Servia, Bulgaria and Roumelia, it had been vised three times in twenty-four hours, and when we had been aroused at various hours of the night to answer, "Whence? What? Who? Whither?" During the second night we were the only occupent of a coupe of an European car. About midnight we were suddenly aroused from a profound slumber as the train crossed over into the Turkish frontier. We were dazed by Oriental colors and the glitter of carbines, pistols and swords! Policeman, soldiers and censors blustering in unknown tongues and pulling at our baggage. They seized about all the books we had and took them to another part of the train. One book in the shuffle and scramble we managed to conceal, presented by Spencer Trask, of New York. The title was in big, red letters, "Horrors of Armenia!" by an Eyewitness. This book was highly prized, but we sacrificed it on the altar of prudence, by backing up to an open window and dropping it from under our coatskirt into the darkness outside the rushing train. All our other valuable books on Turkey the Government of the Sultan will probably keep until a great fleet of our battleships some day steams into the Dardenelles and demands indemnity for American losses!

In the early gloaming of nearly every morning we were in Constantinople several Armenians would be found hanging on improvised scaffolds on a pontoon bridge near our hotel. A few days after we left this hotel, 6,000 Armenians were murdered in the streets around it. Imagine a farmer sleeping in the fourth story and suddenly aroused about 2 o'clock, the still hour of the night, when all sounds are supposed to be hushed, to hear 10,000 dogs barking at once, on every key of the chromatic scale, and carrying all the parts! Leaping from our slumber and couch in confused consternation and rushing to an open window to see whether the city is on fire or whether it is being stormed by the combined powers of Christendom! Amid such a babel of human tongues by day, there was some satisfaction in finding all this army of dogs to be barking in English! Only man has had a Babylonian tongue-tangle. Every other genus of sentient life speaks the same language the world over.

While gazing from that window we thought of a night just 2,236 years preceding, when Philip, of Macedon, was beseiging old Byzantium. While he was secretly tunneling under the walls, a light in the form of a crescent suddenly appeared in the heavens, which awakened the barking Byzantium dogs, and thus the garrison was aroused and the city saved. Since then dogs have had the right-of-way by the Golden Horn and Bosporus, and the crescent on Saracen banners has floated for 455 years in Europe, Asia and Africa.

A few of the visions of life linger in memory like a renaissance or new birth. A solitary midnight stroll through the Yosemite, a day-dawn on Kinchinjunga and Mount Everest, a sunrise on Athens and the Bay of Salamis, a sunset on the Vega of Andalusia, seen from the tower of Alhambra, the Bay of Rio Janiero from the summit of Corkovada, the midnight sun from the North Cape, and our first view of Jerusalem. But for the royal richness and marvelous blending of colors, there is nothing on earth comparable to the Yellowstone Chasm and a sunset view of Constantinople from the summit of the Galata Tower. The majesty of Michael Angelo, the delicacy of Raphael, the gorgeous glow of Rubens and the sombre shadows of Rembrandt are seen at every angle from the top of this ancient tower. If all the colors of the artists of all the ages were spread upon one canvas, it could not exceed the splendor which Europe, Asia, nature, art, land and sea have here artlessly combined in one picture. The purple domes and white minarets of a multitude of mosques, the dark green of majestic cypress trees in a hundred cemeteries of six cities, red-tiled roofs toned by weeks, months, years or centuries into every conceivable shade; Jewish synagogues, Greek and Armenian churches, palaces, barracks, homes and harems of a score of nationalities; the sea of Marmora, the Bosporus and Golden Horn, on which float the many-colored flags and ships of the world, all softened, blended and glorified in the crimson sheen of the setting sun.

Over all hangs the pall of Mohammedanism, and back of it is the horrid history of Turkish terror and astrocities. But in front of this black background of history will ever flit and float two fair figures in white, like angels of mercy—Florence Nightingale and Clara Barton. In Scutari, across the Bosporus, in the edge of Asia, is a vast lemon-colored hospital with 1,000 windows gleaming in the face of the setting sun, bearing the name of the heroine of the Crimea. Here she wove the golden halo that will ever surround her musical, magical name, in softening the asperities of war, alleviating the suffering and cheering the drooping spirits of wounded heroes. Here the wounded, grateful, chivalric spirits kissed her shadow upon the wall as she ministered to them by day

"There is so much trouble coming into the world," said Lord Bolingbroke, "and so much more in going out of it, that it is hardly worth while to be here at all." If a man and a philosopher comes to this conclusion, what must be the natural conclusion of the thousands of suffering women who undergo untold torture in bringing their babes into the world?

Philosophy of this kind is based upon gross ignorance. The fact is, that there is no necessity for the severe pangs undergone by the average woman. If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the majority of women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can always be remedied. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a sure, speedy and permanent cure for all disorders of this description. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic. It banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits. Honest druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as "just as good."

"I suffered fourteen years," writes Mrs. Mary J. Stewart, of Box 46, Saratoga, Santa Clara Co., Cal., with female weakness, nervousness and general debility. I tried everything to no avail. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery' cured me."

The names, addresses and photographs of hundreds of women cured by Dr. Pierce's medicines are printed by permission in the "People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." It's free. For a paper-covered copy send 21 one-cent stamps to cover mailing only. French cloth binding 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Every woman needs a great medical book. Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser fills this want. It contains over 1000 pages and nearly 800 illustrations.

and by night. On the opposite shore we met the brave, radiant, heroic Clara Barton, the story of whose life in our Civil War and the Franco-Prussian War, sounds like romance. The dawning rays of a life beyond are gleaming above her brow, but the stranger would never supect that she has passed far beyond her threescore and ten. It required more real couraged to do what these two women have accomplished than it did for the Earl of Cardigan to lead the charge of the "noble six hundred" into the valley of death at Balaclava.

We were with Miss Barton and her financial agent, Mr. George H. Pullman, a short time while they were distributing $100,000 among the bleeding, starving Armenians, a few thousand of which were raised through the St. Louis Christian Advocate. Then we entered the Russian Empire, traveling about 8,000 miles in unbeaten paths, around the Black Sea, over the battlefields of the Crimea, to the old city of Tiflis, North of Mt. Ararat, across the Caucasus with horses, over the Caspian Sea and 2,000 miles up the Volga. We visited the Pan-Russian Exposition at Nishni Novgorod, traveled over a part of the great Siberian Railroad, which will be completed in the early years of the coming century, about 7,000 miles in length, and will connect Petersburg and Vladivostok. Then we visited Moscow, Petersburg and Warsaw, of all of which we will write more extensively in a book soon to be published on "What a Western Farmer Saw in the Turkish and Russian Empires."

Russia now has a law prohibiting a minister entering the empire as such. The preachers representing the British Bible Society enter as book merchants. Fortunately for us we have been identified with and supported by a farm for fifty years. We were born on a farm. The first twenty-two years of life our home was on a farm not our own. The larger part of this first twenty-two years of life we plowed and labored as a regular farm hand. For about twenty-eight years we have owned a little farm of our own. It contains only 320 acres, but it happens to be in the garden-spot of the world. The $20,000 invested in it does not yield a very large per cent. of income, but it furnishes our entire personal needs: board, clothing, educational and traveling expenses. A man may have one vocation and several avocations. What little money we have made by way of our avocations, such as merchandising, preaching, lecturing, publishing, writing and editing, we have been able to use in some other way than in personal expenses. We have ever felt a little awkward and but poorly qualified in all our avocations, but perfactly at home and thoroughly prepared for our vocation, by which we have been supported for a half century. So we did not hesitate to suspend or lay aside our avocations, and enter Russia as a farmer. We would not have attempted to preach in Russia for a thousand dollars a sermon. Had we attempted it, possibly we would now be languishing in a Siberian prison. Count Pashkoff, who was converted under the preaching of Lord Radstock, also became a great preacher, and was banished by the Russian Government. He owns a very large farm in Russia, which he is allowed to visit once a year, on the condition that he signs a written obligation not to preach while in the empire.

Some of the Russians were a little curious to know how a farmer could be so far away from his farm in harvest time. Our invariable response to this inquiry was a candid explanation of the fact that we do not cultivate our farm with our own hands, but by tenants. We stay on our farm a very small part of the time, but keep a vigilant watch of every department and detail, directing largely by mail.

The Spirit and the Letter of the Gospel.

To one coming from the ranks of sectarianism, like myself, the difference between the legalism and the spirit is of great importance. It seems sometimes hard to determine just where the one ends and the other begins. Still, I feel that the letter adhered to in all sincerity and the spirit will not be far away. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST occasionally has something to say along this line which is always of interest to its readers.

A few weeks ago the writer was asked if he could go and see a very old man who, in consequence of being burned, was not likely to live. Learning the particulars I perceived that it was a case of neglecting the great salvation, and now some one to read and pray was wanted, and this with the usual idea of death-bed repentance would be all that is necessary. Am sorry to say I felt relieved that I could not go. What sort of prayer ought to be offered, and where could I find Scripture selections to comfort a man out of Christ, and who had sinned away life's opportunities?

It was like trying to obtain a passport into heaven under false pretences. And how could I muster up courage to tell him the naked truth?

We are told that the Lord is able to save unto the "uttermost," and they that come unto him shall in "no wise" be cast out, and Jesus said, "Come unto me," etc. All true, of course, but suppose the sick man cannot "come" in God's appointed way, then what? I know of no recorded case of a death-bed repentance in the gospel.

Again, the man at death's door may be a believer, but the unbaptized believer does not appear to be recognized in the New Testament. The friends of the sick man may think that baptism is a nonessential, or if it is essential, sprinkling will do, or perchance God will accept the will for the deed. I fail to find such teaching.

Suppose a man, having abundant opportunities in life, whereby he might have obtained a competency, utterly neglects the same, and at last, unable to work, is in great need. We presume that no one would feel under obligation to provide him with the home and the comforts of life that a competency would have afforded, and which but for his folly might have been his. The verdict will be, that he must suffer the consequences of his own neglect.

Try a little of this "natural law in the spiritual world." How shall a man escape who has deliberately neglected this great salvation? Must God accept him because in view of approaching death he desires to be saved, and yet he has not and now cannot comply with the divine requirement?

In such desperate cases, which so often occur, who has the courage to quote John 3:5, or kindred passages, or say, You have deliberately sinned away your day of grace and placed yourself beyond the pale of God's mercy and must now accept the result of your own folly? The majorfty of professed Christians would listen to such utterances in horror. But would it not be infinitely better for the living, if awful plainness of speech should characterize such cases? It would surely tend to put a stop to the patched-up, so-called death-bed repentances — or am I too much of a legalist?

J. H. LACEY.

La Porte, Ind.

[It is not well to limit God's mercy, even against death-bed repentance. Why specify the neglected duty of baptism. Is that a more unpardonable sin than other neglected duties? If a man on his death-bed, when brought face to face with death, repents of his neglect to be baptized, is he not as likely to receive God's mercy as one who, under similar conditions, repents of his covetousness, or of his hard, unforgiving spirit, and seeks God's pardoning grace? It is not improbable that when we all come into the presence of death, we may feel the need of invoking God's forgiveness for neglecting duties and opportunities. It is always right to ask every rational man to render whatever obedience may lie in his power at the time. If one can truly repent and confess Christ with the mouth, by all means encourage him to do it, even if he can make no public confession in baptism. Why should we deny this privilege to him because he is about to die when, if he should live a score of years longer in sin, we would not deny him the privilege of repentance in health? If death itself, as it approaches, may serve to rouse a soul from the stupor of sin and lead it to repentance, let not this door of hope be closed. Much wiser is he, however, who in life and health prepares to meet God in peace than he who procrastinates till the dying hour.—EDITOR.]

Free Medical Advice

You need a doctor many times when you don't call one. You suffer pain in fifty forms and yet won't call the doctor, because you hope that the pain "will go away after a while." And, too, you know by experience, that that first visit of the doctor is generally followed by many others, with the inevitable consequence of a big bill "for professional services." You don't know what to do for yourself or what to take.

But suppose that you could get free, absolutely free, the advice of one of the most in the United States? You can. The physician is right here. He has an office in the building, he has a staff of correspondents to assist him, and anyone and everyone, who needs medical advice is invited to write to him. If it's baby's health or mother's or the health of any member of the family you may write about it, sure of a careful reading of your letter, sure of a conscientious diagnosis of your case, if cure is possible. Every letter will be held as a strictly confidential communication. Remember these facts.

Sure of a Cure

We offer you medical advice from one of the most eminent practitioners in the United States, whether our medicines suit your particular case or not. We offer you this advice at the cost of the two cent stamp which it will take to bring your letter to our office. Address the Medical Department, Dr. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Facts Speak. Not what we claim for a certain remedy, but what it actually does, tells the story; we will let Mr. Thomas Voigt, Mound City, S. Dak., tell it in his own words:

"My mother became ill, caused by a terrible cold she caught. Our physician succeded in relieving her, but she never seemed to get perfectly well. Her appetite was poor, she had occasional chills and felt extremely weak. This was her condition when we began the treatment with Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. To our great joy I can inform you now, that before she had used up all of the box, she got well and now she is as spry and active as her age admits. We are very thankful for these good results."

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is not handled by druggists, but only by special local agents. If you can't procure it in your locality, write to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 So. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Sampling Preachers.

Our churches are slowly growing out of many old and injurious customs, one of which is the sampling of candidates for the pastorate. When the pulpit is about to become vacant a committee is appointed to open correspondence with a host of available preachers, and for weeks and months the people are regaled with a procession of new men, each one preaching a trial sermon or two, and without any action being taken on the part of the church in making a selection the victims are kept coming and going until the minds of the people are so confused that a unanimous choice simply becomes impossible. I know one church that had kept this miserable custom up for five years, and the longer they played at it the more impossible it was to get a man to suit them, until through sheer disgust and exhaustion, they took up with the first mediocre that came along and, at last, were in a measure contented, because they were utterly weary of their discontentment. Something like this is the style of letter that is usually addressed to the person they expect to set up as preacher for the people to bid on in competition with others who are willing to go on trial:

BROTHER JOHN JONES:—We anticipate a change of pastors. Owing to the distance, we cannot afford to defray your expenses here, but if you are coming this way we would arrange for you to preach one or two sermons as a "trial," and pay you $5 or $6 for the same, but with no obligation resting on us to engage you unless, of course, you should prove our choice. Our pastor, a grand, good man, intellectually and spiritutally, is on his vacation, and during this trial the pulpit is being filled by our preaching brethren, with a view of employing one very soon. This is a grand field for the right man. Especially do we need a good "mixer," etc., etc.

Yours in the faith, DEACON SMITH.

The commercial idea of competition, push, hustling and self-seeking has crept into almost everything, so that before we know it our religious life is cast on the same lines, and without suspecting it there is a mad scramble of unemployed preachers seeking to break into a few desirable empty pulpits, in order to secure the lucrative loaves and fishes it can offer. A Congregational minister once said to me, "If it were announced that I were going to leave, more than 46 preachers would immediately file their applications for this pulpit." I think that has been outdone many times in our own ranks, and yet, there are hundreds of vacancies that no one desires. A simple rule or two, it seems to me, if properly observed, would largely correct this state of affairs: 1st. Not being too particular, let the church take up the matter, one at time, with the most available man they can get, and settle conclusions with him alone, looking more at the past record than at their beautiful features, melodious voices, the style of their dress, the eloquence of their lips, or the first favorable impression they might make upon an audience. The best way to do this is to have the committee go and see them at work in their old fields, with power to make a contract for their services. The most happy engagements I have ever known were where pastors and people had never met until he arrived on the ground to take charge of the work. Thousands of men are settled every year in this way, and give the very best satisfaction. 2nd. A rule for the preachers: Pass by all of the easy fields, and take up with the most difficult charges you can find that will pay you a sufficient salary to afford a fair living. Result: Fewer trial-services, more martyrs and general bracing up of our work all over the Reformation.

More About It.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Noticing a communication in your journal of August 4th on "How About It?" written by one signing the assumed name of LeRoy Clendennin, we deem it well for the better information of yourself and the brotherhood to state that the writer of that article became a member of the Church of Christ at this place on May 2nd, 1897, having formerly been a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian and M. E. churches, and had backslidden from the latter into a very sinful life. We gave him a hearty welcome, a helping hand, and notwithstanding his pretensions and spiritual boastings of superior gifts and powers, we bore the affliction patiently, urging upon him constantly what seemed to us to be the teaching of the Scripture concerning pardon, the Holy Spirit, perfection, etc. That he ever heard anything, either from the pastor or any well-informed member of the church, that "works and works only would qualify for the kingdom," or that "immersion was the mainspring of it all," we most emphatically deny. He slanders ministry and membership in so stating. In many sermons in his presence and in many personal conversations the truth has been told him, that salvation has a divine and human side, and that without what God has done and is doing by his Word and Spirit man could do nothing. Of course we have insisted upon immersion, following faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and sincere repentance, as one of the conditions of pardon and citizenship in the kingdom of God on earth. This aged sinner, after having claimed to know the Christian Church many years, accepted the invitation to come to Christ, was baptized and became a member of the church here. After exploiting his theories and wondrous feelings among us for some months, he took his place again in the Methodist fold, where we bade him God-speed and wished him well. Now it seems his high state of spiritual cultivation produces false statements concerning the teaching and practices of the Christian Church. We have no desire to show up his inconsistencies, which are many, but ask him to kindly forbear criticism of those who took him by the hand and tried to help him up, when he was without favor of God or man, especially in this community. That he tried to be a firebrand while among us is perhaps true, and we may therefore be presumed to be "saved so as by fire."

A Phenomenal Educational Growth.

In 1872 I was the head of the Northwestern Normal School at Republic, Ohio. I advertised quite extensively. An "ad" was inserted in the Sandusky Register.

By chance, one Ira C. Hoops, of La Porte, Ind., was stopping in Sandusky City. Some of his laundry work was returned to him in a copy of the Register. Seeing the "ad" of our school, he sent to me for circulars. I sent them, of course, together with a request to join us. He did so and remained in school some thirty weeks.

While there he was a pupil in the classes of one of my teachers, Prof. H. B. Brown. He called Mr. Brown's attention to an unoccupied seminary building at Valparaiso, Ind., and aroused sufficient interest in it to prompt a prospecting tour. This Mr. Brown made in the early summer of 1873. On his return Mr. Brown and I were out riding one evening. Taking from his pocket a cut of the seminary building, he requested my judgment as to the propriety of starting a school at Valparaiso. I answered favorably, saying that it was an enterprising region, remote from all competitors and favorably near to Chicago, a railroad center.

In September, 1873, with one of my teachers and three or four of our students, he started for Valparaiso. His capital was about $300 in cash, an Estey organ worth about $40, a copy of Bryant and Stratton's Counting House Bookkeeping and two years' experience as teacher and student with me at Republic.

In a dingy old building, with three teachers, thirty-five pupils and comparatively no equipment, Prof. Brown began his work September 16, 1873, in the midst of an oppressive financial panic. Against all opposition and despite all obstacles the school, known then as now as the Northern Indiana Normal School, has grown until at the close of its 25th year it stands as the largest educational institution in America, its annual enrollment having reached, in 1897-98, the enormous number of 3,784 different students, representing all sections of the Union. The plant is worth now over $500,000. It has trained, during the 25 years just passed, over 75,000 young ladies and gentlemen, and fitted them for the active work of life.

Within the past scholastic year it had 1,141 graduates from its various departments as follows: Teachers, 340; Commercial, 236; Penmanship, 40; Music, 35; Elocution, 18; Psychology and Pedagogy, 9; Kindergarten, 20; Pharmacy, 67; Scientifics, 112; Classics, 18; Law, 36; Phonography and Typewriting, 210.

The school started with three departments and three teachers. It has now nineteen departments and 52 teachers. This growth has occurred within a quarter of a century, and without the aid of a single dollar of external endowment—a most remarkable exhibition of what may be accomplished in America by concentration of purpose, commendable enthusiasm and untiring perseverance.

The 25th anniversary of this most remarkable school was celebrated on the 11th inst., the occasion of the annual commencement. Hon. W. D. Owen, Secretary of State of Indiana, delivered the address, his subject being "Dreamers and Plodders." His remarks were scholarly and appropriate, and were well received.

The Northern Indiana Normal School, the fruit of a stray advertisement, is a safe institution and deserving of patronage. It is an educational marvel, whose history is stranger than fiction. It will bear careful study and repay imitation in many particulars. It is a true educational leaven that is permeating the whole country.

I have just returned from the county meeting of Montgomery county, which met with the Wellsville church the 8th and 9th of this month. It was a good meeting. Money was raised to assist two places last year and a house valued at $1,500 was built and dedicated free of debt. Money was pledged at the convention for the coming year.

Splendid sermons and addresses were delivered by T. A. Abbott, J. W. Robbins, H. F. Davis and C. C. Hill. Some promising young men who are just starting in the ministry made good talks. Montgomery county should feel a pride in her young men, such as Holly Hale, Rupert Ford, J. E. Donovan, et al.

The writer delivered his address on "New America and Heathen Missions."

On the 9th dinner was served upon the ground by the Wellsville sisters. Well, if one is ever glad he is in Missouri it is when he is called to a meal prepared by Missouri women. Montgomery county owes much to her Hills, just as Audrain county does to her Robbins, and Boone to her Winders, Howard to her Clay, Randolph to her Briney (deep), and Monroe to her Stine, as solid as the granite hills. C. C. and Claude E. Hill have been the power in Montgomery county. They have wisely and unselfishly forged ahead, and now the results are beginning to tell the the story.

DEAR EVANGELIST:—Our attempts to plant "the cause" in Harrisburg starts off very encouragingly, notwithstanding the continued wet weather. When the weather is taken into consideration (we were rained out entirely two nights in succession) the attendance is along with the attention almost phenomenal.

We are receiving very much substantial aid from Bro. H. F. Lutz, pastor at Le Moyne, and his good people.

"Our plea" is being well received and is something entirely new here, but how many will act on it is yet to be determined.

Wisconsin State Meeting.

The time of our state meeting draws nigh. It is to be at Pardeeville, Sept. 7-11.

This will be the best as well as the most important convention we have had for years. Six speakers from outside the state, as well as some from within the state, have been secured. The six are: E. M. Gordon, India; Miss Ada Boyd, India; Dr. Butchart, China; C. C. Smith, Cincinnati, O.; Mrs. Helen E. Moses, Indianapolis, Ind., and Prof. C. G. Hertzog, of President Garfield's old college, Hiram, O.

The brethren at Pardeeville have prepared to entertain a large convention. Please see that your congregation is represented. Send names of those who are going, to L. Z. Smith, Pardeeville. Make all this announcement at all your meetings from now on to Sept. 7. Printed programs will be sent you this week.

June 23 I left my home to attend the fourteenth annual convention of the S. D. C. M. S. at Bradley. It was a grand meeting and many helpful ideas were presented by able men, but the life of the convention was Bro. C. C. Smith, of Cincinnati. He talked on Ministerial Relief, and the convention promptly gave $35 for that good work.

He lectured on his trip to Jamaica, and every one laughed till he was tired. He addressed us concerning our work among the negroes, and again concerning our general home work, and each felt his interest increase with knowledge.

He preached, and every one who had named the Savior's name went out to better service—more earnest Christian living. The debt which has hampered the state work for a number of years was paid in full, and $225 pledged by individuals for new work. The outlook for apostolic Christianity in our thriving state is most excellent.

Monday, June 27, I returned to my home to find its light gone out, my darling wife having died that morning after an illness of but twelve hours. Then came the long, sad journey of a thousand miles back to the old home in Northern Ohio, the gathering of friends to do honor to one whose every acquaintance loved her, the kind and helpful words spoken by Bro. W. H. Scott, of Ravenna, and the lowering casket, covered over with flowers from South Dakota and Ohio. So young, so helpful, so hopeful, so full of zeal in the Master's work! Truly God's ways are not our ways, nor his thoughts our thoughts.

Three weeks I tarried among the scenes and friends of other years, visiting in Randolph, where H. F. McLane baptized me, in Alliance, where I met Bro. A. M. Chamberlain, in Hiram, where I called on Prof. Snoddy, who was a Dakota boy, and on Dr. E. I. Osgood, who with his young wife goes to China next month for the F. C. M. S., in Warren, in Talmadge and other near-by towns.

Now I am back in my lonely home—gladdened, however, by my mother with whom I had not lived for eight years. In all my sorrow and heartache God has raised up for me friends that are friends indeed. I am grateful to him and them. A. H. SEYMOUR.

Warning.

Notice is hereby given that one J. C. Rawlings, alias C. F. Paul, alias John Grayson Paul, etc., has been preying upon the churches of Illinois the past year, at Fulton, Mt. Auburn, etc. His past is a mystery. His present is inconsistent in name and statement with the conduct of a minister. His peripatetic habits make it difficult to anticipate his next field of operations. He is a large, heavy man of suave address and florid countenance, with reddish hair inclined to curl, a ready, fluent talker, using good language. The churches are warned against him.

By order of first district board of Illinois.

Warning.

It pains us to know that a professed minister of the gospel should prove himself unworthy the high calling and bring disgrace and irreparable harm to the cause. But Christian duty calls us to say that such is true of one R. L. Stanley, and the effect of his conduct on the cause here at Beaumont. From several persons he has borrowed money and not repaid it. It is positively known that he has partaken of the intoxicating cup while having charge of our work here. There is no question but that he is a fraud, and has no intention of paying, as he left here at night, saying nothing to any one of his leaving, and also left a small board bill unpaid, taking his grip from one of the private rooms unmolested. If he wishes to reform, let the brethren among whom he may dwell help to lift up the fallen brother, but let none again trust him with the overseeing of the flock until he has beyond question proven his sincerity in that direction.

Beaumont, Kan., Aug. 22, 1898.

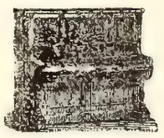
From the North End of Boone.

One phase of the social life has been giving some trouble to those in this city who desire a clear-cut religion, positive and vital, as it has in nearly every community in the state—cards and the dance. The writer addressed a union meeting of the churches of Centralia on the the theme, "Upon What Ground Does the Church Object to the So-called Popular Amusement?" by request. At the close of the services the M E. South preacher offered the following as the sense of the meeting, and it was passed by a vote of five-sixths of the large audience:

1. Realizing the potency for good or evil in the social life of our people; and—
2. Desiring to discourage that which has an evil tendency; and—
3. Deploring the use of cards and the dance as a means of entertaining; and—
4. Desiring to foster a healthful and spiritual society in our city, we, the church people and citizens of Centralia, Mo., agree to use all our influence to open the homes of the city to our young people and to build up a society which will afford pastime and pleasure to all and do violence to the conscientious scruples of none."

This resolution strikes at one of the most potent enemies of a deeper spiritual life. This, to some extent, is admitted by all. We have not a minister, so far as I have heard, who will not agree that it destroys spirituality and pulls down what the spirit of Christ seeks to build up. And yet it is entrenched in our churches and commands wealth to such an extent that it is only here and there a preacher dares speak from the pulpit his views on the subject. Some say handle it privately, which practically means not handling it at all. If it is such an evil as most all our preachers admit when talking to one another, it ought to be shown up from the pulpit, as well as come up for consideration at the meetings of the elders of the churches.

Another fact should come out: there is scarcely a girl's school in the state of Missouri to which you can send your daughter one year and have her return without having learned to waltz. There is probably no way to reach the State University, but it does for the young men what most of the girls' schools do for the young women. It is a more serious situation than many are willing to admit. And the day of reckoning with schools tolerating such things is not far off.



If the church continues to entangle herself with the prevailing and growing social customs, she will not long sustain sufficient vitality to be a power for good.

May it not now be considered time for a reformation along these line? If these things are good and harmless, let their devotees come out with the evidence of it.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The Holt County meeting at Mound City did not have such big attendance, but I have not seen a meeting this summer with more practical interest to all the departments of the church. The entertainment was characteristic of the Mound City people and their minister, W. E. Boulton, nothing being left undone for for the comfort and enjoyment of the delegates. The report of the evangelist, T. W. Cottingham, clearly indicated what could be done with funds sufficient for all one time in the district. My home during the meeting was with old time friends, Sister Mitchell's father and mother being among the first to welcome me and send me on happy in my labors in Southeast Missouri, 1876. The daughter is just as devoted to the Master and his work as mother ever was, and her husband is not one whit behind. The Bible-school reports were good and encouraging to all.

Maitland's preacher pledged us $15 to Bible-school work in Missouri, and the school remits check for the full amount, with good wishes. Thank you, brethren.

Bro. F. M. Rogers, Edina, will begin his work north of the Missouri River the first of September, and he will devote his time to all the interests of the Bible-school work, especially to the Normal features of the work. Command his services, brethren, and give him all the assistance possible. Bro. Rogers goes into the field with a desire to make it his life work and will aim to familiarize himself with every phase of this great calling. Your help will be appreciated.

The Triplett school has a superintendent who is with us, and through Alfred Guillodd the school sends its apportionment for year in full.

The work was so planned that we anticipated a great day at Pleasant Hill, Carroll County, but the rain came down with such persistency that we had to give way to it, having very few present. But one good, delightful feature of the work, to me, was the number of parents in the school, even this bad morning showing up well in this respect. This is considered one of the best country churches in north Missouri, and from what little I saw in Bogard and at the church, have no reason for gainsaying the assertion. The few present were very generous to our work, only the ladies seemed to be forninst us, not giving a thing. This is to my surprise.

The Montgomery County Meeting at Wellsville gave me the opportunity of telling the County Bible-school workers what a number one county superintendent they have in C. C. Hill, through whom every school in the county but one contributed last year to State Bible-school work, the best showing made at the Mexico convention and C. C. Hill will not let that one escape next year. Then, too, nearly all of those present not pledged to the work accepted their apportionment for the year.

Geo. E. Prewitt, Schell City, will begin his work in South Missouri, Sept. 1st., and he will also give himself chiefly to Normal work, the board being determined to better the condition and methods of the Missouri schools from now on. You will find Geo. E. a workman that need not be ashamed of his teaching, and is not. He is ready for serving the schools in that part of Missouri with good and acceptable work, and you all keep him busy. Like our evangelist on the north side, Bro. Prewitt goes in for "keeps," and his efficiency will be manifest if you will call him to your aid.

These young men mean much additional expense to our treasury, but we believe their labors will also bring us additional funds for the work, and hence send them forth, trusting God and the brethren.

Well, hurrah for Hannibal and Jno. W. Mounce! for the school sends us their pledge in full for the year, $75. What a blessing to us and to the field force. How happy it makes us all. Is it not true that he who pays promptly pays twice? Will not another good school lead in full that we may keep right up to date with all the expense? Will you see me at a county or district meeting, and will you not ask your school to accept its apportionment and tell me so there? Please.

Publishers' Notes.

"America or Rome; Christ or The Pope," by John L. Brandt, contains 530 pages, and 55 illustrations. It has a copious index and a list of authors consulted. It is regarded as a complete exposition of Romanism. None but the highest authorities are quoted. It is strictly reliable in every particular. Competent judges say it is the most thorough discussion of the doctrines, principles, spirit and practices of Romanism now before the public.

Just now it is an exceedingly timely book for the agent to handle. The war between Spain and the United States has revealed the ignorance, superstition and degradation of those countries ruled by Roman Catholics. The public has learned a few of the many facts concerning Romanism and is the better prepared to take hold of the additional facts given in "America or Rome." The agent who will use what has been revealed, together with the facts given in this book, will have but little trouble in selling this exposition of Romanism. We are offering agents special inducements to sell this book.

The agent would only have to refer to the condition of the inhabitants of Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands to show the effects of Catholicism. Each of these is great in natural resources, but left in ignorance and superstition through Rome's power and influence.

Write us for our special inducements to agents on "America or Rome." Address Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo.

"King Saul," by J. Breckenridge Ellis, is just from the press and is ready for the reading public. This book is bound in high colored cloth and contains 281 pages. The price is $1.00 per copy. Those who have read "In the days of Jehu," by the same author, will be pleased to learn that his second book on Old Testament characters is just placed in book form. This work gives the most interesting features of the life of King Saul, thus rendering Bible characters an easy and instructive study.

Ladies of Manila.

Little has been said or written about the mestizos or half-breed ladies of Manila. They combine the superstition of the negro with the grace and languor of the creole, and the features of either the Chinese or Japanese. Their favorite costume is a long, loose robe of bright-hued silk, and their long, flowing hair forms their mantilla.

The illustration in another column is reproduced from a photograph taken in Manila in 1892. It was intended to form part of the series of National Costume cards prepared by The Singer Manufacturing Co. for distribution at the Chicago Exposition, but was not secured in time. It now has a peculiar interest to the women of America because of recent events connecting the U. S. with the Philippine Islands, where Singer Sewing Machines are, as in every other part of the world, one of the foremost factors of civilization.

Church Extension Notes.

Our collection for Church Extension begins next Sunday.

Our Extension Fund was organized to assist missions to get their first building. The money is loaned to such missions as cannot borrow elsewhere.

It is sometimes stated that our Extension Fund is not needed; that churches giving good security can borrow money elsewhere. This is not the case. Trust Companies, Building Associations, Banks, Insurance Companies and Attorneys having money to lend for others will not loan money on mission church property, for obvious reasons. The mission is slow pay and irregular in paying, and if such companies as indicated above foreclose on the property they get the ill-will of the community, and to avoid trouble these corporations refuse to loan money at all to missions. Our Extension Fund is an absolute essential to the upbuildiug of our new work, and should be vigorously supported.

It is sometimes asked, "Does Church Extension pay?" Yes, it pays in manifold ways. By the encouragement of a loan to a mission in a new town it secures a lot when lots are cheap, which becomes very valuable in after years, and the churches helped by this fund generally raise from three to four dollars for every dollar loaned them.

Thus far in the ten years of its history our Extension Board has aided over 400 missions to get church houses, 100 of which have paid back every dollar of principal, with interest at four per cent. Others have paid back the first, second and third notes, and over $90,000 of principal and interest have been returned to the board. Surely, this is a successful work. Think of what our board could do with $250,000 of a fund; then think of a half a million, and finally of what a million would do when our brotherhood will be organizing 1,000 missions a year. Last year 500 new missions were organized by our evangelists and pastors.

Put words of cheer into your appeals for money for Church Extension next Sunday. Look upon the whitening fields as Christ did. Catch his encouraging words and make them ring hopefully in the ears of your congregation and you will have no trouble in even going beyond your apportionment.

Keep in mind next Sunday the 2,500 missions among us that are meeting in halls, storerooms, schoolhouses, etc., with no place they can call their own in which to spread the Lord's table; think of your own religious comforts, and then reach into your pockets for your part of the $250,000 for Church Extension by the close of 1900.

Collections for Church Extension should be sent to the writer, 600 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

The September Offering.

The time of the year for the annual offering for Church Extension is now at hand. September is the month. For eleven months in the year our churches are thinking of other matters, and other interests. It is but right, therefore, that Church Extension, one of the most worthy of all our lines of work, should receive the hearty and undivided support of our great brotherhood for this one month. Not a church and not an individual should allow the month of September to pass without making a liberal offering to this work.

Listen to the recommendation of the National Convention: "Because the board can only answer one appeal in five, we recommend that UNUSUAL EFFORT BE PUT FORTH TO RAISE OUR CHURCH EXTENSION FUND TO ONE QUARTER OF A MILLION DOLLARS BY THE CLOSE OF 1900. To this end your committee recommends that more attention be given to the September offering. Thus far we have compelled the board to raise seventy-five per cent. of this money by going out into the field after it. We must raise more by annual offering in September, and as this is the month after vacation, the month after summer sluggishness in the churches, when the pulse of the church life is not vigorous, we urge that EXTRAORDINARY EFFORT BE USED TO WORK UP A GENEROUS OFFERING FOR THIS IMPORTANT WORK."

Now it is the purpose of the Church Extension Board to carry out, so far as possible, the wishes of our people as expressed at the great National Convention, last October. To do this the board should have the hearty support of every preacher in the brotherhood.

The board, composed as it is of some of the best men that I have ever met, has a right to expect that every preacher and every member in every church does his duty in September.

The board, to carry out the wishes of the convention, has a tremendous work before it, as the following will indicate:

THE WORK NOW BEFORE US.

"From last October we have just three years in which to lift our fund from $150,000 to $250,000. To do this we must raise $35,000 each year of new money, the interest paying current expenses while this is bening done."

The "how" is as follows:

THE PLAN OF THE BOARD.

"To raise $35,000 annually the following plan is proposed: The board will endeavor to secure $20,000 annually in collections from the churches at the September offering, asking each church to raise its fair proportion in order to secure the amount. The other $15,000 the board will endeavor to secure annually in pledges and bequests."

To make our work permanent and prosper as it should we must have a large Church Extension Fund. We should house every houseless congregation in this country. No organization without a church house in which to meet can demand the respect and accomplish the work of the Lord in any community. As well expect a bodiless spirit as a houseless church to do the Lord's work. There should be one solid, forward movement from ocean to ocean in the interest of Church Extension during the only month allotted to this work. All who are in favor of this movement, let it be known by sending a liberal offering to the board.

J. T. Ogle.

Our General Convention.

The General Convention of the Churches of Christ will be held at Chattanooga, Tenn., October 13th to 20th, 1898. The sessions of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will begin on the evening of October 13, and continue through the 15th. The American Christian Missionary Society will meet at 9 A. M., October 17th, and continue until 12 M., October 19th. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society will meet at 2 P. M., October 19th, and continue through the 20th. The programs will be strong and helpful, the report will be encouraging, and everything points to one of the greatest conventions in our history.

RAILROAD RATES.

The railroads of the Central and Southeastern Traffic Associations have granted the rate of one fare for the round trip. This covers the territory from the Potomac to the Mississippi Rivers, and from the lakes to the gulf. The Trunk Line Association northeast of the Mississippi River has granted a fare of one and one-third fare on the certificate plan, or you can buy through the gateways of the Central or Southeastern at the regular rate, and get the one-fare rate through these gateways and return. The Western Passenger Association, west of Chicago and the Mississippi River, has not yet announced its rate, but we are urging the one-fare rate and hope we will get it. These low rates should secure a very large attendance. There could be no more delightful trip than to go to Chattanooga in October.

THE ENTERTAINMENT.

The churches at Chattanooga are making large plans for the entertainment of the convention. Rates have been secured in private houses at one dollar per day. This includes three meals and lodging. The hotels have granted special rates for delegates at the convention. The convention will be held in the great Auditorium buiing of Chattanooga, which is furnished us free by the city. The Mayor of the city will be present at the first session to extend us the welcome and hospitality of the city. The program is being finally revised and will soon be published.

SEND YOUR PREACHER.

Every congregation owes it to itself and to the cause of primitive Christianity to be represented in this great gathering of the hosts of Israel to plan and pray for the extension of the Master's kingdom. An earnest invitation is given especially to our business men that they come up to this gathering to help forward the cause. Our churches should see to it that their preachers attend this convention, for the good they will give and for the greater good they will receive. The minister's preaching will be richer if he can participate in this gathering of the Lord's people. If your minister is not able to go, make it a pleasure to send him. It will cost but little, and that little will be far more than repaid to you for the blessing that will come to him.

Let every good motive appeal to our brethren to attend the Annual Convention at Chattanooga, October 13th to 20th, 1898.

Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec.
American Christian Missionary Society.

General Convention News.

The place of the convention is Chattanooga, the time October 13-21. Keep these well in mind.

Indications point to a large and enthusiastic attendance. Many have already begun making preparations to come.

The local committees are exerting themselves to have everything in perfect readiness. Nothing will be omitted which will contribute to the comfort and enjoyment of those present.

Are you coming? If so, drop me a card. We want to tell the people who are going to be here. This will arouse enthusiasm, and encourage others to come. Don't fail to do this at once.

And, brethren, please begin talking about what a great convention we are going to have. Help us in a campaign of agitation. Let us strive for the largest attendance ever seen at our national conventions. Why not? This is possible, and a good possibility should be made a grand reality.

The program is going to be one of the best, and the various reports will show a decided advance in all lines of missionary and educational work. These reports will fan the flame of enthusiasm and fill the heart with devout thanksgiving to God. Nothing so thrills the heart of the true soldier as news of victory from the field of battle.

"Come thou with us and we will do thee good." M. D. Clubb.

Christian Endeavor in the Chattanooga Convention.

Our General Christian Missionary Convention will be held in Chattanooga, Tennessee, next October. The entire afternoon session of Monday, Oct. 17, will be devoted to Christian Endeavor. This is in harmony with action had by the General Convention in Indianapolis last year. All our Christian Endeavor Societies should begin at once to arrange to have representatives there.

The following attractive program has been prepared for this C. E. session:

1. Annual Report of National Superintendent—10 minutes.

2. Address: "The Manifold Mission of Christian Endeavor,'' by C. B. Newnan, Detroit, Mich.—35 minutes.

3. Paper: ''The C. E. Society as an Educational Agency,'' by Burris A. Jenkins, Indianapolis, Ind.—15 minutes.

4. Symposium: ''How May We Best Develop and Utilize Our C. E. Forces?'' Led by Frank G. Tyrrell, St. Louis, Mo.—40 minutes.

Our pastors and our papers are requested to aid us in bringing this Christian Endeavor session to the attention of our young people, so as to secure a large attendance. Let us give more thoughtful attention to our young folks, and thus build wisely for the future.

Truly and fraternally,
J. Z. Tyler,
National Superintendent of C. E.
Cleveland, O., August 20, 1898.

Church Extension.

MISSIONS THAT HAVE RECEIVED AID FROM THE CHURCH EXTENSION FUND, THAT HAVE AGREED TO TAKE AN OFFERING IN SEPTEMBER FOR THIS WORK.

When the Board of Church Extension sent out letters asking our congregations to pledge to take the September offering, the missions aided by our board were among the first to respond. In about one week one-fourth of them responded to the call to aid their less fortunate neighbors. This is the greatest argument that could be advanced for Church Extension. Those that have received help are willing to aid others and promptly come to the rescue.

This should be and will be a great inspiration to the brethren who have aided this fund and will give a mighty impetus to our September collection. Others will yet be heard from. The list would be too long to publish. Here is a part of it:

Church Extension With the American Christian Missionary Society.

Church Extension is that agency of the Christian Church which assists needy and struggling mission churches to houses of worship. The evangelization of this country, in a general way, our churches entrust to two boards—the Board of Home Missions and the Board of Church Extension. The Home Mission Board goes on the ground first, gathers together and organizes. The Extension Board gets the congregation a church home with a loan of money at four per cent., which is paid back in five years, the mission raising from two-thirds to three-fourths of the cost. No organization is permanent until the house of worship is secured. The church builder must go hand in hand with the evangelist. No one knows this so well as our mission workers in the West and South, and in all parts of the East.

Note.—This is a Building and Loan Association in the Church of Christ, to help those who cannot build without borrowing. In cities where loan associations exist, young men are early encouraged to save their money and get a home. Struggling churches, knowing this fund is in existence, are encourged in their very beginning to save for a lot, knowing that when they own their own lot they can borrow money from this fund at four per cent. and build, thus getting a church home and Christian workshop two or three years sooner than they could get it themselves, and command respect in that community immediately.

PLAN AND MANAGEMENT OF THE FUND.

The Church Extension plan is to loan this money for five years to aid the mission churches in securing meeting houses that they could not get without aid from some other source. The loans are made on the following conditions: First, that the building is actually needed. Second, that the mission asking aid has done everything possible towards buying the lot and commencing the building. Third, that all debts incurred by purchasing the lot and building are paid in cash except what the loan from this fund will pay. Fourth, that the church gives first mortgage security on the property. Fifth, that they insure the house for the full length of the loan. The mortgage clause is attached to the insurance policy. In states subject to cyclones the Board requires cyclone insurance.

Every title, deed, article of incorporation and insurance policy is carefully examined by the Board. A competent man is kept in the office in the person of T. R. Bryan, secretary and treasurer, who is very thorough in the matter of these examinations, and whenever a difficult point arises in the examination on any legal document, our attorney, Mr. Bacon, passes upon it. The money is to be returned to the Board within five years in equal annual installments with four per cent. interest, payable semi-annually. It can be paid sooner if the mission church is able. Mr. Bryan also prepares all legal papers and collects loans and interest. This fund is now $160,000, and is doing a banking business. It requires all of Mr. Bryan's time to care for the fund.

Interest and principal come back to the Board from missions in small amounts. This requires bookkeeping and much refiguring of interest. Any one close to church work knows how much effort and patience are required to get collections in local church work. So it requires time and tactful men to collect these loans and interest. Bro. Bryan is really lawyer, bookkeeper, treasurer, examiner of abstracts, copier of deeds, incorporation papers and insurance policies, and is office secretary. Sometimes a week is required to examine a single abstract. Abstracts as thick as a church hymnal are frequently received. Remember, the Board gets them from thirty-seven different states and territories where it makes loans, and laws on church titles differ in different states. The Board has laws on church titles in every state and territory in the Union, and is prepared to loan money to our missions in any place in a safe and business-like way.

The Board never loans closer than one-third the cost of the house and lot, and can report thus far that not one dollar has ever been lost on loans. If a mission gets too far behind on its payments, the corresponding secretary visits the mission on his way to appointments, without much additional expense, and helps to raise the money. Loans are made in amounts of $150 to $1,000. In exceptional cases, in cities, larger amounts must be loaned, because the ground will cost more. The Board does not loan money to pay old debts, except to save a church from sale for debt.

The National Convention earnestly recommended that we increase this fund to $250,000 by the close of 1900. To do this the Board has sent out a reasonable apportionment for each church to raise. Next Sunday the collection begins. Let each church do its duty and raise its apportionment, and the desired results will be attained.

The Garden of My Soul.

BY SUMNER T. MARTIN.

When scarce the noon of life's short day
Our weary feet have reached with pain,
'Tis hard for eager soul to say—
"I cannot reap the golden grain."

But hands of weakness are not fit
To wield Truth's sickle, Heaven-given;
With aching heart we down must sit,
Where others reap, where we have striven.

To Heaven still our prayers may rise,
For those whose strength our burdens bear,
May be our cry will will reach the skies,
And God will build a golden stair,

While, Jacob-like, our hands we lay
On stony pillow of our pain,
We hear the angel voices say—
"We'll show you field of yellow grain."

"Your souls afield has waited long
With Passion's weeds and thorns of sin
The Heavenly Father's plants among;
Make haste, O soul! and enter in."

My vision now has clearer grown,
Since lifted from the fields abroad,
And sickness' very plain hath shown
The weedy garden of my God.

With Truth's two-edged sword I slay
The tares, thick sown while I had slept;
God's grain grew riper every day,
While our my sins with prayers I wept.

He helped me grow the fruits of grace;
Faith triumphed over all my fears,
And Hope sprung up with shining face,
And Love reached out deathless years.

'Tis well to love the whole world round,
And labor for its Godward growth;
The garden of the soul ne'er found
All o'ergrown with weeds of sloth.

THE USE OF THE TONGUE.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips.—Psalms 141:3.

"Good morning, Mrs. Raymond. I just ran in a minute, the first thing this morning, to find out whether Deacon Smith has been to see you."

"Been to see me? Why should Bro. Smith have been to see me, Mrs. Blank?"

"Well," with a show of hesitation, "Mrs. Lane told me that somebody told her that Deacon Smith told somebody else that he considered our fair as nothing short of a desecration; that it was nothing more nor less than converting the house of God into a den of thieves, and that he intends to see that it does not occur again. I thought like as not he had spoken to you about it, you being one of the most interested parties. No, I cant sit down. I can only stay a minute. I just ran in to see if you had seen the deacon."

"No, I haven't seen him," replied Mrs. Raymond, "and it surprises me that he should speak in such a manner. I think it must be a mistake. As you know, we were careful to avoid charging fancy prices for our articles, simply because they were for the church, and we had no grab-bags or any other form of gambling. Our principal object was, in reality, of a social order, where the members might meet each other and become better acquainted—a need which we all feel. Surely, Mrs. Blank, it must be a mistake."

"O, no! It is not a mistake, as you will find when you see the deacon. He is very indignant over the affair. But I must be going. I can't stay a minute."

When Mrs. Blank declared she couldn't stay a minute she invariably staid two hours. She continued:

"Do you know that Bro. Elliot's daughter is soon to be married to that worthless young fellow whom her father picked up a few years ago, and has been trying to make something of?"

"And has made something of," interrupted Mrs. Raymond.

"Well, I don't know about that. When people have once been down in the world, there is always danger of their going back—not that his downfall was really his fault, I have heard people say, still I shouldn't want a daughter of mine to marry him. But of course people's tastes differ. His friend, I understand, is an admirer of your Edith. I heard a person say the other day that you had better be cautious. 'Birds of a feather flock together,' you know."

Mrs. Raymond's face flushed, but she forced herself to say calmly:

"I am cautious, Mrs. Blank. I trust I shall never be otherwise. The two young men to whom you refer are well known to me. I am familiar with the circumstances concerning the first one's 'fall' as you term it, which was not a fall at all. He was simply the victim of conditions brought about by others than himself, and Bro. Elliott, instead of giving him a push downward, extended a helping hand at the time when it was most needed; and he evidently knows his real worth, else he would not be willing to trust in his hands the welfare and future happiness of his daughter. As to the second party you mention, I have in him the same confidence that I place in the first. They are both noble, Christian young men, and well deserve the admiration of their many warm friends."

Mrs. Blank, not one whit daunted, continued:

"Well, of course they may. I really hope they do, but people will talk, you know. Did you see the disgraceful state in which our next-door neighbor came home Saturday night? He was brought in a closed carriage. Really, they could hardly get him into the house. And Mrs. L——— took the children the next morning to Sunday-school just as though nothing had ever happened. Now if my husband should come home in such a condition I should be so ashamed I wouldn't so much as put my head outside of the door."

"I think Mrs. L——— takes exactly the right course. Suppose she cared no more for her family or had no more self-respect than her husband? I honor her for her efforts to rise above all obstacles and for her determination to bring up her little ones in the right way in spite of the fact that she is unaided and unsympathized with by her husband. Many a mother has had just such a path to travel. Because Mrs. L——— has a drunken husband is no reason why she should not make an effort to save her boys from the same fate."

Mrs. Blank continued:

"Have you heard about the dreadful time they are having in the Fourth Church? The morning paper is full of it. They do say that some of the most prominent members are the most deeply implicated, and that it is liable to break up the church entirely. But I must be going, for I really haven't time to stay a minute." And she went at last, leaving poison in her wake.

Of the class to which she belongs, an eminent minister once said:

"I think among the worst of the worshipers are those who gather up the harsh things that have been said about you and bring them to you—all the things said against you or against your family or against your style of business. . . . . They bring them to you in the very worst shape; they bring them to you without any of the extenuating circumstances, and after they have made your feelings all raw, very raw, they take this brine, this turpentine, this aquafortis, and rub it in with a coarse towel until it sinks to the bone. They make you the pincushion in which they thrust all the sharp things they have ever heard about you. . . . Sometimes they get you in a corner where you cannot very well escape without being rude, and they tell you all about this one, and all about that one, and all about the other one, and they talk, talk, talk. After awhile they go away, leaving the place looking like a barnyard after the foxes and weasels have been around: here a wing, there a claw, and yonder an eye, and there a crop—destruction everywhere."

Mrs. Raymond well knew the character of her morning caller, yet her gossip had left its sting. It had robbed her morning of its sunshine. And when, early in the afternoon, she heard the gate click and beheld the familiar form of Deacon Smith, her heart was in her month, so to speak, but he was soon saying:

"I stopped to tell you, Sister Raymond, that I consider your church fair a decided success, as church fairs go. Like church festivals they are touchy things to undertake. However, I have always maintained that the two expressions, 'the house of prayer' and a 'den of thieves,' are the antipodes in meaning, and that between them there lies a wide plain which, if wisely utilized, may be rendered most helpful. I was just saying to some of the violent opposers of such things that you had struck the happy medium. The social life of the church, as we all know, is a most important factor; and if it pleases the ladies to manufacture little fancy and useful articles, I hope there is nothing wrong in their disposing of them at reasonable prices. Anyhow, your last fair seemed to me a success. Good-bye."

What a load was lifted from the heart of Mrs. Raymond! How foolish she had been to listen to the morning's gossip! She smiled at Bro. Smith's non-committalism on the subject of church festivals and fairs—a subject which has never yet and perhaps never will be satisfactorily disposed of.

With the burden of the first bit of gossip lifted, she could smile concerning the others, and quoted from Emerson:

"'We should be as courteous to a man as we are to a picture which we are willing to give advantage to the best light.' Knowing Mrs. Blank as well as I do, having lived beside her for so many years, I ought not to have allowed her report to worry me in the least. Still, what right have I to quote Emerson and blame myself for giving credence to the remarks Bro. Smith was reported to have made, without attempting to apply the same quotation to the reporter. Well, in justice to myself, and as an ease to conscience, I can say that I have tried to look for Mrs. Blank's good qualities—and she really has some—but I can't help seeing that her tongue is her greatest enemy. It seems to run away with her prudence and the result is she has few friends. It is hard to think well of such a person, yet I know it is my duty to make the attempt and to continue to pray for her. I know that I must cultivate the spirit of giving kind thoughts and of loving even my enemies, and people as trying to my patience as Mrs. Blank, if I am to be numbered among the children of the Heavenly Father."

Another visitor was announced—a woman with a face as sweet as the flowers she carried. It was a pleasure to look at her.

"I have brought you that promised book, Mrs. Raymond," she said. "I would share my roses with you, but they are for little Nellie Wayne, and I know you would rather she should have them. She loves flowers so, and her pleasures are few, poor little thing."

"It is to be regretted that there are not more of us who try to bring a little sunshine into the lives of those less favored and less fortunate than ourselves," replied Mrs. Reynolds. "I saw Nellie's mother yesterday and her eyes were full of grateful tears as she told me of all you had done for herself and for her poor, lame, little one."

"My dear friend, I am simply sharing with them the things that God has entrusted to my care to be used as he would have them used. What right have I to imagine, because I am more blessed with this world's goods than are many others, that I have the right to selfishly enjoy them all to myself instead of distributing them among others who are just as appreciative and just as worthy as I. The thanks are due to the Heavenly Father, my friend, from whom comes every good and perfect gift. We are but his servants, to whom he intrusts these things, and how careful should we be to see that we make the use of them which we know to be acceptable in his sight."

"Who is my neighbor?"

This is the question which Mrs. Raymond asked of herself after the departure of her last visitor.

"Of course," she said, "the meaning of the old Anglo-Saxon from which the word 'neighbor' is derived is 'nigh-dweller;' but the nigh-dweller is not always the neighbor. Mrs. Blank is a nigh-dweller, but she certainly does not come up to the standard which Christ laid down for a neighbor. Now my last caller lives at least two miles away, yet she is certainly a neighbor in the fullest meaning of the word to a great many people. She knows how I love books and she also knows that in this libraryless town I could not satisfy my taste for reading did not she, good Samaritan-like, give to me of the rich benefits of her own library. Her very personality is suggestive of thoughtfulness, interest and sympathy. She is never too busy to sympathize with her friends and acquaintances in times of sorrow, nor too indifferent to rejoice with them in times of gladness, or to give of her service when sickness comes to them. She seems to know intuitively who it is that finds life dull and monotonous, and how to put into that life a little variety and into the life that is very lonely she knows just how to bring a little pleasure.

"On the other hand, it is fearful to contemplate how many homes may be made unhappy and how the peace of individuals may be disturbed by the busybody—the peacebreaker—be she a nigh-dweller or far-dweller. Her influence is felt throughout the entire community. She can see further through a stone wall or a keyhole than other people can see through an open door. She can hear conversations that are being carried on in the next house. She knows all about everybody's private affairs and performs the work of the evil one so well that his Satanic Majesty disturbs himself but little concerning affairs in her community, knowing his work is well looked after."

Can we wonder that Mrs. Raymond asks, "Who is my neighbor?"

Doubtless we are all acquainted with the story of the great philosopher and his no less philosophic servant who set before his master the two dinners of tongue, but the truth it presents cannot be too well learned:

This philosopher invited some friends to dine, and ordered his servant to get the very best thing that the market afforded; and when he and his friends sat down to the table, they were served with nothing but tongue—tongue fried, tongue stewed, tongue roasted, tongue prepared in every conceivable way. The philosopher was vexed and said:

"Didn't I tell you to get the very best thing your could find in the market?"

"And that is just what I did, sir," replied the servant. "Surely the tongue is an organ most divine. It is the organ of worship. By it are expressed words of love, of kindness; the language of a pure heart. It is a most useful and blessed organ."

"To-morrow," said the philosopher, "I desire you to get the worst thing you can find in the market." And when the morrow came he again sat down to a dinner of tongue.

"Did I not tell you to get the worst thing in the market?" he asked.

"I did get the worst thing, sir," was the reply. "Is not the tongue the organ on which 'Satan plays?' the organ of lying and of blasphemy? Surely, sir, it is a most destructive organ."

O, for the right use of the tongue! the organ of which Jesus says, "It is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." O, that we might cease our fault-finding and our criticizing! It is so easy to find fault and to see the flaws of which the world is full. It requires little brains or heart to be a critic. It is a sure sign of moral decadence to be able to see only the defects, and the man or woman who becomes a gossip, critic or fault-finder cannot but lose ground spiritually. We need an eye to see the good and the beautiful in this world. We need to pray for a loving spirit—the spirit of the loving Christ—that we may have a pitying heart and judge not our fellowmen. And without ceasing do we need to pray:

"Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips!"

Going Back to Grandpa's.

Read by A. M. Atkinson at a Macatawa picnic, and reprinted here by request.

I'm going back to grandapa's,
I won't come back no more
To hear remarks about my feet
A muddyin' up the floor.
They's too much said about my clothes,
The scoldin's never done—
I'm goin' back to grandpa's
Where a boy kin have some fun.

I dug up half his garden
A gittin' worms for bait;
He said he used to like it
When I laid abed so late;
He said that pie was good for boys,
An' candy made 'em grow;
Ef I can't go to grandpa's
I'll turn pirate first you know.

He let me take his shotgun,
An' loaded it fer me.
The cats they hid out in the barn,
The hens flew up a tree.
I had a circus in the yard
With twenty other boys—
I'm goin back to grandpa's,
Where they ain't afraid of noise.

He didn't make me comb my hair
But once or twice a week;
He wasn't watchin' out fer words
I didn't orter speak;
He told me stories 'bout the war
And Injuns shot out West.
Oh, I'm goin' down to grandpa's
For he knows wot boys like best.

He even run a race with me,
But had to stop an' cough:
He rode my bicycle and laughed
Bec'us he tumbled off;
He knew the early apple trees
Around within a mile,
Oh, grandpa was a dandy,
An' was "in it" all the while.

I bet you grandpa's lonesome,
I don't care what you say;
I seen him kinder cryin'
When you took me away.
When you talk to me of heaven,
Where all the good people go,
I guess I'll go to grandpa's,
An' we'll have good times, I know.

"I'll Pay You For That."

A hen trod on a duck's foot. She did not mean to do it, and it did not hurt the duck much. But the duck said, "I'll pay you for that!"

So the duck flew at the hen, but as she did so, her wing struck an old goose who stood close by.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the goose, and she flew at the duck, but as she did so her foot tore the fur of a cat, who was just in the yard.

"I'll pay you for that!" said the cat, and she started for the goose, but as she did so her claw caught in the wool of a sheep.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the sheep, and she ran at the cat, but as she did so, her foot hit the foot of a dog who lay in the sun.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and jumped at the sheep, but as he did so his leg struck an old cow who stood by the gate.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried she, and she ran at the dog, but as she did so her horn grazed the skin of a horse who stood by a tree.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he rushed at the cow.

What a noise there was! The horse flew at the cow, and the cow at the dog, the dog at the sheep, and the sheep at the cat, and the cat at the goose, and the goose at the duck, and the duck at the hen. What a fuss there was, and all because the hen accidentally stepped on the duck's toes.

"Hi, hi!" What's all this?" cried the man who had the care of them. "I cannot have all this. You may stay here," he said to the hen. But he drove the duck to the pond, the goose to the field, the cat to the barn, the sheep to her fold, the dog to his house, the cow to her yard, and the horse to his stall.

And so all their good times were over, because the duck would not overlook a little hurt which was not intended.

Guidance.

Being perplexed, I say,
Lord, make it right!
Night is as day to Thee,
Darkness as light.
I am afraid to touch
Things that involve so much;
My trembling hand may shake,
My skilless hand may break:
Thine can make no mistake.

Being in doubt, I say,
Lord, make it plain!
Which is the true, safe way?
Which would be vain?
I am not wise to know,
Nor sure of foot to go;
My blind eyes cannot see
What is clear to Thee.
Lord, make it clear to me!

A Doctor's Bill.

A good true story is told of a San Francisco philanthropist and a doctor with a conscience. A wealthy lady several years ago developed an insignificant wen on her face. In her travels in Europe she consulted an eminent surgeon as to its removal and was advised not to have it done. An Eastern surgeon of equal eminence also declined to perform the operation.

Returning to San Francisco she happened to show it to a physician and surgeon of no national reputation—a humble homœpath—but a man whose skill was unquestioned. He examined it carefully, and said there would be no trouble about it; it was a simple operation. Dreading to risk it after such eminent warning, she delayed action, but finally asked another examination and opinion. The same conclusion was reached; and the operation followed, with wholly successful results.

One day, when the doctor called, his bill was asked for. He presented it, $50 being the amount. The lady smiled and said, "Do you consider that a reasonable charge, considering the circumstances?"

The doctor replied, "That is my charge for that operation; your circumstances have nothing to do with it."

The lady went to her desk and drew a check for $500, and presented it to him. He looked at it and handed it back, saying: "I cannot accept this. My charge for that operation is $50."

"Very well," the lady replied. "Keep the check, and place the balance to my credit."

Some months after she received a lengthy itemized bill, upon which were entered charges for treatment of various kinds, rendered to all sorts of odds and ends of humanity, male and female, black and white, who had been mended at her expense. She was so delighted at it that she immediately placed another check for $500 to her credit, on the same terms, and it is now being earned in the same way.—Pacific Unitarian.

Pay of American Officers.

The pay of army officers is higher than that of naval officers, even when the latter are at sea. Thus a general gets $15,000 a year, an admiral $13,000; a lieutenant-general $11,000; a vice admiral $9,000; a major-general gets $7,500, a rear-admiral gets $6,000; a brigadier-general $5,500; a commodore $5,000; a colonel gets $4,500; a naval captain the same; a lieutenant-colonel gets $4,000; a commander $3,500; a major $3,500; a lieutenant-commander from $2,800 to $3,000. A captain in the army $2,500, a lieutenant in the navy from $2,400 to $2,600; a first lieutenant in the army gets $2,000, a lieutenant, junior grade, in the navy gets from $1,800 to $2,000; a second lieutenant gets $1,540, an ensign gets from $1,200 to $1,400. Even the cadet at West Point gets $450, as against $500 for the naval cadet at Annapolis. On shore the navy pay is cut down from one sixteenth to to one-fifth.

The Spanish-American war will rank as one of the shortest in the world's history. Other notable conflicts of modern times bave been:

Turkey versus England and Russia—1807 to 1812, five years: estimated cost to England and Russia, $250,000,000; loss of life for all involved, estimated at 250,000.

Turkey verses England, Russia and France—1827 to 1829, two years; estimated cost to the allied powers, $150,000,000; loss of life for allied powers, estimated at 10,000.

CHRISTIANITY AND ANTI-CHRISTIANITY, IN THEIR FINAL CONFLICT. By Samuel J. Andrews, author of the "Life of Our Lord," "God's Revelations of Himself to Men," "Some Thoughts on Christian Unity." G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London. 1898.

This book was written for a purpose—to sustain a theory. The theory is that of premillennialism—the world growing worse and the church more apostate until a moral cataclysm transpires at the second personal appearing of Christ. This gives the whole book a pessimistic tone that is neither normal nor healthy. The bugbear of the author is pantheism, and this, culminating in some man, is the anti-Christ to which we are drifting. The immanence of God in nature and history, a controlling thought in our day, is with this author only a phase of pantheism. All tendency to Christian union and international co-operation is regarded as preparatory to the development of the anti-Christ, who is to revolutionize the world, overthrowing church and state. Even the growth of democracy is worked into his pessimistic scheme, as evidence of the general degeneracy of the times.

The author seems to have hunted up the most radical and materialistic uttrances of all classes of thinkers and thrown them together to describe the present condition of the church. For this reason it would be a misfortune for the book to fall into the hands of the skeptically inclined. They would find food in it to feed their skepticism.

This would be a sad world if the outlook given in this book were the true outlook. But the author has a theory according to which things must grow worse, and all movements are interpreted accordingly. Of course it states some wholesome things, but these will be neutralized by the general tone of the work.

GEORGE MULLER. By Fredric G. Wagner. Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, Publisher. Price, 75 cents.

If in the later period of the church life there were needed an illustration of the fact that God is a prayer-answering God, George Muller has helped the church to know it. The keynote of this remarkable life may be told in his own words. Speaking of the orphanages established by him at Bristol, he says:

"But still the first and primary object of the institution was and still is that God might be magnified by the fact that the orphans under my care were and are provided with all they need only by prayer and faith, without any one being asked by me or my fellow-laborers, whereby it might be seen that God is FAITHFUL STILL and HEARS PRAYER STILL. That God wonderfully blessed his labors is evident from the results. During the 63 years of his labors, there came to the orphanages about 10,000 children. In the schools established under his care about 120,000 pupils received instruction, over 2,000,000 copies of the Bible, New Testament, Psalms or other portions of the Bible were sent out, over 111,000,000 scriptural books and tracts were distributed and for the support of this work, over $7,000,000 came into my hands." Not a cent of this was ever solicited from any individual. This is worthy our study. The story is told in simple language. The teaching is plain. The example of faith is a tower of strength.

Geo. Muller passed away on March 10th last in his 93rd year, having worked up to the last day. As one said, "He just stepped quietly off home as the gentle Master opened the door and whispered, 'Come!'"

DIVINE HEALING AND DOCTRINES. By J. W. Conley. Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, publishers. Price, 15 cents.

This booklet is a calm discussion of the subject under the light of revealed truth. The writer takes up the passages referring to the use of medicine, or to physicians and healing. He does not forget the context. This is a great excellence and prevents much one-sided treatment of such subjects. He does not fail to recognize the power of God in healing. The prayers of the righteous man working in accordance with his prayer is availing. He concludes "that the Bible is favorable to the use of medicines and the employment of physicians."

The 14th annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission, a copy of which we have just received, is a voluminous affair. Why this is so, however, becomes apparent at a glance at its pages, containing as it does so many departments, positions, rules, regulations and officers. As we could give no adequate outline of its contents without a lengthy paragraph we recommend all parties interested, especially those contemplating an examination for civil service, to send to the Commissioner at Washington, D. C., for a copy.

"The United States in Relation to the Messiah's Return" is the title of a small book recently written by Caleb Davis and published by the Knox Publishing Co. This book takes the ground that the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands in Daniel's vision signifies the United States and occupies its pages with reasons for the position. Some of these, we admit, have a fitness to the vision, but these may be coincidents only. The end of the little stone—filling the whole earth—seem to signify more than the United States has yet or will ever accomplish. However, the book is interesting and the thoughts presented deserving of careful consideration.

Richard Harding Davis' account of the Rough Riders' fight at Guasimas leads the September Scribner's. He was in the fight actively from first to last, and this is his only elaborate descriptive narrative of it. It abounds in personal incidents. Nothing is given on hearsay. Mr. Davis describes only what he himself saw. Other articles are also devoted to scenes and events of the Santiago battle.

Everybody has heard of the Red Cross, yet comparatively few people have more than a vague idea of what it really is. Belle M. Brain, in a very interesting and timely article entitled, "The Story of the Red Cross," in the September Woman's Home Companion, tells all about this great movement, from its inception to the present day, with many illustrations.

The Chautauquan for September displays a wealth of literary matter which will find a hearty welcome in scores of homes. Subjects of general interest are treated by skillful writers, and from the initial paper on "The Literary Women of Washington," by Etta Pamsdell Goodwin, attractively illustrated with portraits of Mrs. Burnett, Mrs. Spofford, and other literary women, to "History as it is Made," with its concise account of the current events, the magazine is one of the best of the volume.

The Pall Mall for September contains a wide range of subjects for its readers from a strong paper by Sir Chas. W. Dilke on an Anglo-Saxon union to entertaining facts and popular fiction. This is one of the best numbers of the year.

SINS THAT KILL.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The first of the prophets whose sermons have reached us in a collection is Amos. The reign of Jeroboam II. was perhaps the most prosperous period in the history of the Northern Kingdom. Of the three monarchs whose administrations, judged from a merely political standpoint, were able and prosperous, viz., Jeroboam I., Ahab and Jeroboam II., the last was the most notable. Territories lost during previous reigns were regained, and the kingdom was greatly widened and enriched. But, as is so often the case, external prosperity was accompanied by a sad decline in ethics and religion. Growing wealth among the upper classes caused increasing poverty at the opposite end of the social scale. Religion was associated with the sanctuaries, of which there were many in the country, but the worship was mingled with elements taken from the Baal worship and had thus become corrupt, while both priests and prophets of the popular cult were men of low morals and motives, and made a mere profession of their calling. As a result the life of the common people was on a low moral level; they were not likely to rise above the practice of their religious leaders.

It was this situation which strongly appealed to a herdman named Amos, who added to his scanty income by a rather indifferent variety of fruit, such as the hilly country of Judah was able to produce. He lived at Tekoah, a town a few miles south of Bethlehem. From this region he probably took his merchandise to the market towns of both Judah and Israel. This gave him occasion to observe the low moral and spiritual conditions prevailing in Samaria, probably much worse than those in Jerusalem at the time. A man of strong religious nature, and already impressed with the awfulness of such a state of morals, he was the very man to preach the divine will to these people. Accordingly, the prophetic call came to him, and while there is no hint that he gave up his business or ceased to provide for himself in the usual way, we have the record of his prophetic work in Bethel and Samaria, which may have covered but a brief period. His contact with the merchant life of these towns gave him admirable opportunities for conversations which grew into sermons, as his listeners multiplied. He disclaimed with indignation any relation with the guilds of prophets, which may supply another hint as to the mercenary level to which their work had sunk.

The series of discourses recorded under the name of Amos discloses a nature passionately indignant at the state of affairs, and determined to register the most emphatic protest against it. The people are what they are largely because of the character of their nobles, princes, judges, priests and preachers. When these are wicked, weak or worthless men, the nation can only suffer as the result. The picture of the times as given in the lesson is graphic. The rulers in Jerusalem and Samaria, with both of which capitals Amos is familiar, are totally indifferent to any obligations to righteousness; they are "at ease." They know what right is, but do not care to practice it. Yet these men are those who are set over the people, to whom appeals for justice must be made, and from whom the pattern of conduct is derived. Israel cannot claim that her condition is the result of meagre conditions of poverty or limitation, yet the people considered that no nation has ever been blessed as has this one. Look at the great cities on the horizon. Has not Samaria been prospered as neither Calneh, Hamath or Gath? Every blessing has been hers, yet she is indifferent to God. But those other cities, rich and powerful, as they were, have perished or are perishing under the desolating power of the world-conquering Assyrian. How can Samaria escape if she continues to disregard the law of God?

Yet these men, the appointed leaders of Israel, are corrupt and luxurious men. They laugh at a day of reckoning; their court-rooms, where justice is supposed to be practiced, are seats of violence, where bribery and outrage prevail; they pass their time in effeminate idleness, in houses furnished with splendor, the fruit of their rapacity; their tables are loaded with the choicest food, which the poor have to furnish by their unjustly rewarded toil; in their revels they employ singers and dancers, and prostitute to ignoble uses the very instruments of music which David had consecrated to the holiest purposes; they drink immoderately and their debaucheries are the scandal of the land. For the real evils of the nation they care nothing. They are mere self-seeking, scheming, unscrupulous politicians, and that only, no matter how sacred the calling to which they were chosen. The result can only be national destruction. The land must suffer for its unworthy leaders. They themselves will go captive in the first deportation, and very different shall be their fate after that dreadful day. The whole land has become a stench to Jehovah by means of such practices, and their evil example has infested every rank of society. The divine law has been outraged. A process of destruction, purging, cleansing, discipline, is the only result.

In such pictures as these the condition of Israel in the eighth century B. C. is described. The striking element in these pictures is their appropriateness to our own time. We sometimes speak of the Bible as an old book, dealing with long-vanished situations; as a matter of fact, no book is so up to date as this. The problems of society with which Amos, Hosea, Micah and Isaiah had to deal are the very problems of our day; the growing distance between the rich and poor; the power of the well-to-do over the less resourceful, the avaricious spirit that lies next to its own possessions, the tendency to drunkenness in officials in county, city and state, the anarchism which breeds like a festering sore beneath the surface of a corrupt social and municipal life. The Bible is the freshest of volumes on the social questions of the day.

The root of all reformation and the hope for the future lies in the child. Much can be done to reform, but infinitely more can be done to form at the start. The hope of the race is in the child, and the child is in the Sunday-school. To use the opportunity there afforded is to save him, and through him to save society. No one method will solve the dreadful problem of drink and the ruin it works; every effective attack must be pressed—probibition, moral suasion, restriction, reformation, education. But the greatest hope lies in the child, and his war-cry—"'Tremble, monster, I shall grow up!"

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

The man who knows how to do good and does it not is the greatest sinner. Leadership imposes the greatest responsibility; in which direction are you leading? What people have received greater blessings than we? Of whom will greater results be demanded? Wealth that is held as a trust from God and is used for his service is a blessing to the world. Wealth that is regarded as a personal possession and used selfishly is a curse to the world, and a greater curse to the possessor. "True wealth consists in laying out, not in laying up." Our use of the so-called better things of life must be regulated by the effect they produce on ourselves and our obligations to share with others. The only temperance is an abstinence which permits no danger to ourselves or evil example to others. Intemperance is not confined to drink, but may appear in eating, dressing, speech and pleasure. Some people are very careful about drink, but very intemperate in temper. The best of things, like music and art may be prostituted to evil uses. Evil conduct can but bring disaster. God is too merciful to divorce sin from its consequences.

MILK CRUST

When our baby boy was three months old, he had the milk crust very badly on his head, so that all the hair came out, and itched so bad, he made it bleed by scratching it. I got a cake of CUTICURA SOAP and a box of CUTICURA (ointment). I applied the CUTICURA and put a thin cap on his head, and before I had used half a box it was entirely cured, and his hair commenced to grow out nicely. Feb. 24,'98. Mrs. H. P. HOLMES, Ashland, Or.

CUTICURA REMEDIES appeal with irresistible force to mothers, nurses, and all having the care of children. To know that a single application will afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a speedy cure in the most torturing, and disfiguring of skin and scalp diseases, with loss of hair, and not to use them is to fail in your duty. SLEEP for SKIN-TORTURED BABIES and REST for TIRED MOTHERS in a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, and a single anointing with CUTICURA, greatest of skin cures.

SELF-INDULGENCE OR SELF-DENIAL?

(1 Cor. 9:24 27; Gal. 5:16-24.)

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide," sings the poet, but the truth is, it is far oftener than once; it is many times, it is every day, that men must ask themselves the question, "Which shall I choose—to pamper and please myself, or to crucify myself?" From the moment when one lies yawning, stretching, dozing in bed and hesitating whether to indulge in a little more folding of the hands in sleep till the last flicker of the night-light, it is a strife between the worse and the better impulse. Talk of the irrepressible conflict: This is the irrepressible conflict—the question that will not down.

And according to whether the question is answered for or against, self will thrive. If we decide for self, self will be the loser. If we decide against self, self gains. There are some allies who would do better service by fighting on the other side—we are that kind of allies as far as ourselves are concerned. We save our own lives by losing them.

The word indulge means to be kind or tender, and one who is kind or tender to himself indulges himself with the invariable result of harm. Strange, isn't it, that to be very gentle and kind with a bit of grain, to leave it in the cold ground only during the day, and to dig it up and wrap it tenderly in cotton at night, to wash it gently in hot water—strange that such kindness, such indulgence to a seed should kill it, but it does. Strange that he who would spare himself all pains, give himself all comforts, in short be kind to himself, indulge himself, should kill himself, and yet that is what he gradually does. Strange that he who puts the seed into the cold ground and leaves it alone in apparent neglect is adding to the growth and glory of the seed, but it is so. Strange that a man who does not spare himself, saves himself no effort and no pain, crucifies himself—strange that he flourishes with the noblest growth. God has so ordained it. He who saves his life loses it, and he who loses his life saves it. As the ground must be broken by the plough, as Christ was pierced upon the cross, so must all of us be broken in heart and pierced in soul, before we can bear fruit and draw men unto us. "Good-bye, be good to yourself!" we cry; which is, being interpreted, "Farewell, crucify yourself!"

There are few things which are in themselves bad. There are few things which are not, in excess, bad. There is one thing which, in excess, is so exceeding bad, that to abstain from it has been called par excellence, "Temperance." Few families but have been burned somewhere about the edges, and many in the very heart by this special form of self-indulgence. Scarcely a home in the land, but if the wind should wander through its secrets, would come forth and whisper the tale of some who had indulged or been kind to themselves and been fearfully cruel both to selves and loved ones, who had sought the life-giving stream and found it a life-taking current, who had sought life and lost it.

And yet, after all, is this not but one of the many kinds of intemperance which have blasted happiness and ruined homes? Are there not other indulgences—pride, money-ambition, social-craze, jealousy, self-seeking, coldness, hardness, neglect and unkindness—are there not a hundred ways in which a subtler and less patent manner than the open so-called intemperance, self-indulgence blasts the happiness of ourselves and friends? Fellow-Endeavorers, we are not "drunkards," but are we drunkards? Do we drink of any poisoned fountain of selfishness that hardens and besots our lives, renders our homes unhappy and hinders the growth of our souls?

FULLER.

Mrs. Maria Louisa Fuller, daughter of Abram and Nancy Darst, was born in Meigs county, O., Feb. 4, 1837. Married J. L. Fuller Dec. 13, 1858, to whom were born five sons and three daughters. She died at her home July 1, 1898, aged 61 years, four months and 27 days. She gave herself to Christ at 18 and has lived an earnest Christian life ever since. The funeral sermon was preached by the writer to a large concourse of people at her home at Shelby, Ind., July 3, 1898. She left many dear friends behind to mourn their loss.
S. A. STRAWN.

FYFFE.

Allen Herman, son of Oscar and Nettie Fyffe, born in Laurence County, Ill., March 12, 1897, and died in Stoddard County, Mo., Aug. 16, 1898. He was sick but eleven hours with congestion of the brain. M. B. F.

HALL.

On June 25, 1998, after an illness covering a period of over a year, J. W. Hall passed away at his home in Roodhouse, Ill. In this sad event the community feels the loss of an honorable, highly respected citizen and the church a pillar of support and a tower of strength. Bro. Hall was born Nov. 7, 1826, in Rohan County, N. C., but early in life accompanied his parents to Illinois where, with the exception of a two years' residence in Lyons, Kas., he has since lived. On May 16, 1850, Bro. Hall united in marriage with Miss Jennie Long. To this union were born three children, John T., the oldest, who died in Dodge City, Kas., Dec. 15, 1881, Emma E., wife of Dr. J. S. Chase, of Venice, Ill., and C. C. Hall, of Milton, Ill. The two last named, with their mother, survive in deep realization of bereavement and loss. In early manhood, while yet unmarried, Bro. Hall united with the Christian Church and has ever lived a consistent Christian, sharing the burdens of the congregation and exulting in every triumph of the cause of Christ. A staunch believer in the eternal right, he was found always, on all great questions, on the side that seemed right to him. Thus the cause of religion, temperance, citizenship and charity found in him an able supporter. His death, though long expected by many, came with a shock to the community and his funeral was attended by a throng of sympathizing friends. His remains were conducted by rail to Milton, Pike County, Ill., and in the church, built forty years before by his own hands, the last sad tributes were paid. His body rests in the Blue River cemetery, while his life is held in sweet remembrance by many sincere friends. He has fought a good fight, he has finished his course, he has kept the faith. The promises of God to such as he lifts a heavy load of care from the hearts that remain. HUGH A. ORCHARD.
Roodhouse, Ill., Aug. 22.

METZ.

Maude E. Metz was born in Pike County, Ill., April 16, 1878, and died July 23, 1898. She was the daughter of E. R. and Emma L. Metz. She died of consumption. She was sick a year. She never complained, but was hopeful. She obeyed the gospel Jan. 10, 1893. Jesse Gresham baptized her. When not sick she was present at all church services. She was an active, practical Endeavorer. She did what she could. She wasn't perfect, but was a good and obedient girl. A. C. ROACH.
Chambersburg, Ill., Aug. 15, 1898.

TAYLOR.

Ella A. Taylor was born April 22, 1860, and died July 13, 1898. From a child she had followed her Savior. She was a sympathetic and devoted Christian. To know her was to love her. The writer preached the discourse at her funeral to a very large congregation of tear-stained faces. She indeed was the embodiment of the Christian character, and our loss is her gain. S. A. STRAWN.

Words of Cheer for Church Extension.

Church Extension is doing more for our people than any other work. Let every member put a shoulder to the wheel.

T. J. REZNOR.
Elliott, Ia.

Our duty is to evangelize the world, but there can be no church abroad until there is first a church at home. As the church at home is, so will be the other. Let us push the church at home, and the church abroad will most surely come. A. J. MARSHALL.
Onawa, Ia.

I look upon the days for our collections as the most pleasant of the year. They are days when we can practically exemplify our Christianity. HORACE SIBERELL.
Pickeriag, Mo.

I consider the work of Church Extension one of the most important in our brotherhood.

WM. E. ADAMS.
Fort Wayne, Ind.

Hope for a large offering in September. Church here has an annual pledge for all mission work. W. S. LOWE.
Manhattan, Kan.

I most certainly believe it is as important to see a church firmly established and made self-supporting as to organize it. To do this a church home is assuredly necessary; therefore, we can't get along without a Church Extension Fund. M. S. JOHNSON.
Henderson, Ia.

We will do what we can to help reach one quarter of a million dollars by the close of 1900. MISS MARY HILL.
Mt. Healthy, Ohio.

A work that shelters so many houseless congregations, that cultivates a spirit of independence in those it aids, and that is founded upon such business-like principles, deserves heartiest support. MARK COLLIS.
Lexington, Ky.

I have secured loans for three churches. Neither could have been built without Church Extension help. H. ELLIOTT WARD.
Pasadena, Cal.

"Put yourself in his [their] place" and then ask, "What your contribution should be to Church Extension." FRANK A. MORGAN.
La Porta, Ind.

The importance of the work your Board is doing cannot be overdrawn. I know from experience and observation that churches are being built that never would be built if aid had not been received from our Board. A loan of $300, or even $100, starts the ball rolling, and soon the house is built. J. W. JENKINS.
Hood River, Ore.

We believe in Church Extension, and will work for it. W. T. HILTON.
Beloit, Kan.

Church Extension is one of the most important of all the missionary enterprises. What even a little money can do in the hands of the Extension Board is appreciated on this field. Extension extends. J. F. GHORMLEY.
Portland, Ore.

No church can make progress as it should without a building, and we should remember we have hundreds of churches stranded on this very rock. Let's help them off.

H. A. DENTON.
Centralia, Mo.

Church Extension is the only hope of making permanent the results of evangelization.

GEORGE DARSIE.
Frankfort, Ky.

It will require a gift from each member if we house the churches that are being planted now. Such a wonderful growth requires large gifts from all. Of so great a people great things are required. L. H. FULLER.
Burlington, Ia.

First send the gospel preacher to disciple the people, then aid them to build a house where they can meet on the first day of the week to break bread. Houseless disciples often mean scattered disciples.

C. W. TURRELL.
Lampasas, Tex.

Every preacher should see that the fondest hopes of the Extension Board are fully realized.

ROBT. L. WILSON.
Richmond, Mo.

Kankakee is a mission point, being aided $100 by the district each year. Small, poor membership—no house—struggling to finish paying $800 for a lot. We will raise our apportionment and we fondly hope the Extension Board will help us build. W. D. DEWEESE.
Kankakee, Ill.

Will do all we can for Church Extension; church here needs education along this line.

J. B. HOLMES.
Panora, Ia.

Will push collection as it deserves.

J. B. CLEMENS.
Arcola, Ill.

I think the Church Extension Fund is essential to the steady advancement and future success of our movement. Hope you will attain to your ideal. W. R. MCCREA.
Liscomb, Ia.

Our people are recognizing more and more the importance of this branch of missionary activity and are learning better to appreciate the work of the Church Extension Board, hence will certainly give with increasing liberality. GUY WINGATE.
Anthon, Ia.

Our congregation is poor and we are building a house ourselves, but we will not forget the September offering for some one in worse circumstances than we are.

GRANT E. PIKE.
Barnesville, O.

The Church Extension Fund is scarcely second in importance of all our missionary funds. I long to see a great increase in this year's offerings. Hope to increase ours here in Owosso, Mich. L. W. SPAYD.
Owosso, Mich.

We are building and very much in need of aid ourselves, but feel that we must maintain our position as contributors to Church Extension. J. V. CRAWFORD.
Enterprise, Ore.

I believe in Church Extension as a part of the Great Commission and shall aid it when-even I can. L. P. BUSH.
Bethany, Neb.

No work that we have undertaken gives greater returns for the money invested than Church Extension. L. M. DAUGHTY.
Lovington, Ill.

The perpetual motion of money for Christ is like a perpetual life of righteousness—an eternal exhortation to right living. Crops are a total failure this year, but will do what we can, be it ever so humble. JOSEPH SHIELDS.
Nipomo, Cal.

This is bearing one another's burdens, and yet each one bears his own burden at last. A very good way. A. MILNER.
Cisne, Ill.

This fund is certainly one of the greatest promoters of Christianity we have.

JOHN P. SALA.
Randolph, O.

We cannot give a great amount, but will "help a little" willingly.

F. M. CUNNINGHAM.
Marlboro, O.

The most permanently hopeful of our missionary enterprises is the Church Extension Fund. J. C. MASON.
Houston, Tex.

The Church Extension work is the backbone of all missionary work in America.

A. M HOOTMAN.
Union City, Ind.

Think we can raise our apportionment all right. Have done much better in other lines of missionary work than usual this year. Want to keep up the record on Church Extension.

E. L. MOFFETT.
Centerville, Ia.

We are in debt about $600; but will try to do something for Church Extension.

J. M. JAYNE.
Memphis, Mo.

Best wishes for your success.

R. L. BRESHERS.
Tallula, Ill.

The Church Extension Fund has greatly aided this church and, if I remain here as pastor, the church will raise its proportion for each year. It is one of the best business works in the Church of Christ. Our method of aiding churches is the best, viz., to encourage self-help. May the good work soon extend to the securing of good locations in new towns and fields. P. J. DICKERSON.
Canon City, Col.

Church Extension is the most business-like business that we have. It preaches Christ and multiplies itself at the same time.

Marion, Ind. E. L. FRAZIER.

My ministry is under deep obligations to this board. I pray sincerely for guidance to secure generous offerings for it. No other is more deserving. C. H. STEARNS.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxv. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, September 8, 1898. No. 36

CURRENT EVENTS.

The incident of the trial, conviction and incarceration of Capt. Albert Dreyfus, of the French army, for alleged treason in communicating to a foreign government information concerning French fortifications, has been reopened by the confession of Lieut. Col. Henry, one of the chief witnesses against Capt. Dreyfus, that he himself was the author of the forged letter which he offered in testimony for the conviction of Dreyfus. The confession of Lieut.Col. Henry was followed by his suicide on August 31. As soon as this tragedy was made known a number of the French officers connected with the affair tendered their resignations. These developments have thrown Paris into an intense excitement, and the conviction is gaining ground that Captain Dreyfus is the victim of a conspiracy. The French Cabinet has held some stormy meetings on the question, but no definite decision has been reached as yet, except that Maj. Esterhazy, the alleged author of the original memorandum on which Dreyfus was convicted, shall be retired from the army. It is probable that public sentiment will demand a new trial. The incident may even result in the defeat of the present French Government when the Chambers meet. This case is another illustration of the truth that nothing is settled permanently until it is settled right.

The proposition by the Czar of Russia for an international peace conference, upon which we comment editorially elsewhere, seems to have thrown all Europe into a dazed condition. It is admitted on all hands that the declaration of the Czar reads as if it might be sincere, and yet it is claimed that the whole history and even the present plans of the Russian government are in direct opposition to this peaceful program. Many European journals call the scheme Utopian and premature. The chief criticism of it, so far, seems to come from France, as the French people feel that Alsace and Lorraine must be regained before there can be any thought of disarmament or permanent peace. Difficult as it may be to understand the motive of the Czar in making this proposition, it is to be sincerely hoped that the European Governments will respond favorably, for only by actual experiment through such a conference can the true inwardness of Russia be found out. It is not improbable that the Czar has come to fear the possible results of an Anglo-American alliance, and seeing nothing to be gained by war, prefers to submiti ts claims before a peace conference. But whatever the motive may be, such a conference will be in the interests of civilization and peace, and is to be encouraged by all who are seeking to promote the welfare of the race.

One of the results of the war, not usually mentioned, is the better understanding that is likely to exist hereafter between Spain and the United States. It is evident that the people of Spain, including many in high office, were entirely ignorant of the American character and of the resources of the United States. Contact with our American soldiers in the recent war has served to dispel this ignorance and to create a respect for the people of the United States on the part of Spain that she has never had before. It will be remembered that before the Spanish soldiers began their return to Spain one of their number, writing in behalf of 11,000 of his fellow-soldiers, expressed the gratitude of the Spanish prisoners of war for the kind treatment they had received from the officers of the United States. Gen. Toral, before sailing the other day for home, expressed his appreciation of the American soldiers in the following statement:

> In all my experience I have never seen soldiers fight better nor handled more skillfully. They are a credit to any nation, and quite on a par with any Continental army. Each man fought as if the issue of the battle depended on his individual exertions. I see a great future for America with soldiers of the caliber of those we met in front of Santiago.

Out of this mutual respect for the courage of the soldiers of the two governments it is not improbable that there will come more peaceable and amicable relations.

It was feared, immediately after the close of hostilities, that the insurgents in Cuba, under the deep sense of wrong which they feel toward the Spanish people, would continue a sort of guerrilla warefare against their former enemies, until they would be compelled into submission by Uuited States troops. Such a course would have been the best proof of the incapacity of the Cuban insurrectionists to establish and maintain self-government. It is assuring, however, to learn that a much better state of things prevails throught the island. A dispatch from Havana, dated August 31, says that "it is now known that the insurgents have suspended hostilities in all parts of the island. There is, therefore, complete tranquility everywhere. The insurgent chiefs of all the zones have been given strict orders to respect the rights of all citizens, no matter how hostile they may have been to the insurrection during the war. They declare they are now ready to forget the past, being secure in the guarantee of freedom, and to dedicate themselves with faith and enthusiasm to the reconstruction of the couutry." This course on the part of the Cubans will give great satisfaction to the American people, whose supreme desire concerning them is that they may demonstrate to the world their capacity for self-government.

The same penchant for the sensational in journalism which led a certain class of papers before the war with Spain to denounce the President for his conservative policy, and after the war began, to report imaginary strifes and jealousies between admirals, generals and cabinet officers, now that the war is over, is finding a congenial field in exaggerated reports concening the condition of the soldiers, and in reckless criticisms against the war department and many prominent officials. Recent investigation has shown that these reports concerning the condition of the army are either wholly unfounded or are greatly overdrawn. It is simply the fondness for sensationalism that has led these journals to place our government in a false light before the civilized world. It is not surprising to find in some of the foreign journals an echo of these criticisms, for they have a right to suppose that pride of country would prevent American journals from grossly misrepresenting the condition of things which have followed the war. As intimated before, in this journal, we believe these criticisms in the main to be unjust, and whatever irregularities have existed have been chiefly due to the calling out and equipping of a large army in so brief a time. If the present war shall teach the American people to discriminate, in their patronage, between yellow journalism and the higher type of daily papers, this fact should be recognized as one of the beneficent results of the war.

The joint high commission for the settlement of a number of points of disagreement between the United States and Canada is now in session at Quebec. The commissioners have met, exchanged friendly salutations and have outlined the work before them. It is understood that there are four principle subjects that will receive the attention of the commission—the tariff; bonding regulations for the trans-shipment of goods over the great trunk railroads; pelagic sealing, and the Alaskan boundary. There will be other minor questions, such as the Newfoundland fisheries and alien labor to be considered. If the commission is successful, as it no doubt will be in perfecting the treaty, it will put at rest a number of causes which have produced irritation between the two countries. There is no reason why Canada and the United States should not be good neighbors and work to each other's mutual interest. The settlement of these disputed points by a commission would be another triumph of civilization over the ruder methods which once prevailed. The annexation of Canada is not a practical nor important question at present, but it is highly important, since Providence has placed the two countries alongside of each other, that they settle all their misunderstandings amicably and cultivate the closest relationship socially and commercially.

In an article on crime, in Pall Mall for September, by J. H. Schooling, some very interesting and important tables are given, indicating the relative positions of men and women to social ethics. First we have the following table showing the ratio of women to men in each hundred convictions. The ratio is about four and a half men to one woman. But here is the table:

Nature of Crime	No. of each sex convicted, per 100 convictions. Women.	Men.	Total.
Child-stealing and Cruelty to Children	70	30	100
Crimes against Property without Violence	19	81	100
Coining	18	82	100
Miscellaneous Crimes	16	84	100
Malicious Injuries to Property	15	85	100
Crimes of Violence against the Person	11	89	100
Robery and Extortion	10	90	100
Forgery	9	91	100
Crimes against Morals	4	96	100
Buglarly and Housebreaking	3	97	100

The influence of nationality and locality are shown, respectively, in the following table:

Country.	No. of each sex convicted, per 100 convictions. Women.	Men.	Total.
England and Wales	18	82	100
Germany	18	82	100
France	17	83	100
Hungary	16	84	100
Austria	14	86	100
Belgium	11	89	100
Russia	9	91	100
United States	9	91	100
Italy	8	92	100

The investigations of the writer lead him to conclude that the number of suspected criminals at large as regards sex are also about four and a half men to one woman. The tendency to treat women more leniently in the courts may have a bearing upon these figures, but the fact seems established beyond a doubt that male criminals are the most numerous in all lands and nations. Other diagrams and tables of the writer show that the greatest number of burglaries occur from two to four A. M., and violence is offered to the person burgled in only one case out of every 336 burglaries. Best of all, however, is the table showing a marked decrease of all crimes in these last days. Here is the table:

	Per 10,000 of the population in (1881)	(1895)
All Crimes	233	167
Larcenies	207	165

According to Dr. H. K. Carroll, in an article in the Forum, it requires $10,365,000 annually to pay the bills of the Protestant Episcopal Church, $23,863,000 to pay those of the Methodist Episcopal Church, nearly $24,000,000 for the expenses and contributions of the Northern Presbyterian Church, $11,673,000 for those of the Regular Baptists and $10,355,000 for those of the Congregational denomination, making an aggregate of $88,000,000 every year contributed by 10,768,000 members, an average of $8.16 per member.

AN INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONFERENCE.

The proposition of Emperor Nicholas, through Count Muravieff, his Foreign Minister, to the foreign diplomats at St. Petersburg, to hold an international conference looking to the preservation of peace and to partial disarmament, is an event of the first importance. Coming as it does from one of the most warlike nations of Europe, and one that was supposed to be preparing for an inevitable war, gives the proposal additional significance. His note to the foreign diplomats, published in our columns last week, looks as if the Russian Government had come to see what ought to be apparent to all European powers, that the way to permanent peace is not by constant preparation for war, but in coming to a mutual understanding with each other, and in cutting down their respective armaments to something like a peace footing. In this way only lies permanent peace. The Emperor goes on to argue with force that the expense attached to the constant increase in the army and navy, and in keeping up with the changes which new inventions make necessary, has become an unbearable burden upon Europe. The money and the talent of these countries are devoted to war instead of promoting national progress. The Emperor hopes that the conference which he proposes will find some way of preventing these evils, and "will be, by the help of God, the happy presage for the century that is about to open. It would converge into one powerful focus the efforts of all states sincerely seeking to make the great conception of universal peace triumph over the elements of trouble and discord, and it would, at the same time, cement their agreement by a corporate consecration of the principles of equity and right wherein rests the security of states and the welfare of peoples."

These are some of the most significant utterances that have ever come from any authorative source among European Governments. It can hardly be that the European powers will fail to respond favorably to this proposition for an international conference. The conception of a conference in which all the great powers of the world, or even of Europe, should be represented, to consider the question as to how they can live together peacefully and reduce the burdens of their respective peoples, and make life more comfortable for the masses of the people, is one that appeals strongly to Christian sentiment, and is in harmony with the best thought and feeling of our time. The world is not so large as it used to be. Rapid communication has brought the ends of the earth together. It is the more necessary, therefore, that nations learn the art of living together in peace and mutually promoting each other's welfare.

It was Victor Hugo, we believe, who spoke of the possibility in the future of "the United States of Europe." Why not United States of the world? Would it not be a sublime consumation of the progress of the nineteenth century, if at its close there could be a federation of all the civilized nations of the world, looking to peace and progress? What loftier aim could the statesmen of the world have in view than such a combination of the forces of civilization for the enlightenment and Christianization of the race and for the betterment of the condition of mankind? That this will come about in the future we cannot doubt. Such a conference as that proposed by Emperor Nicholas will hasten the larger federation of which we speak.

We hail with pleasure, therefore, this proposition as a step toward international co-operation for the promotion of peace and the arts of peace. We regard it as a significant sign of the times—a harbinger, indeed, of that brighter future.

"When the war-drum throbs no longer and the battle-flags are furled,
In the parliament of man, the federation of the world."

MORALITY AND LONGEVITY.

Nobody will dispute the proposition that morality, as a rule, is a condition of longevity. Every one knows that debauchery, libertinism and dissipation are disease-breeders and life-shortners. Select any five young men from a town community, who loaf in barrooms and play cards for drinks, and in twenty years four of them will be dead and forgotten, and the fifth will be in his grave if he has not the good sense to quit his evil ways and go to work. I visited two sick men about this time last year. Each of them was about thirty-five years of age and men of families. They were in the same condition from the same cause, muscular paralysis brought on by youthful debaucheries. The loathsome disease contracted by these men in their early life of sin had poisoned the blood of their children, who were broken out all over their bodies with running sores. Neither of those men will live to see forty, and if they should, all concerned will wish they had died at thirty-five.

I have just examined a list of vital statistics with reference to the longevity of different classes of men. It carries a great lesson with it as bearing on the question before us. It is significant that preachers stand at one end of the scale and liquor-dealers at the other. The deathrate among ministers was but little more than half the general deathrate, while that among saloonkeepers and bartenders was nearly double the general deathrate. Engineers share with ministers the distinction of the smallest deathrate due to intemperance. In both of these occupations intemperance is reported to have caused but two deaths a year among 62,215 men. Nearly 2,000 liquor men, 500 preachers and 603 teachers is the general proportion.

These suggestive facts show how much temperance has to do with long life. Farmers stand second to ministers in average length of life, and school-teachers third. Preachers live longest because, as a rule, they live best. Farmers are second in longevity because they are second in morality. Both moral and physical conditions are more favorable in the country than in towns and cities. Rural populations never rise so high in their virtues, nor sink so low in their vices as those in the centers. A city is a strange combination of the highest and the lowest in human life. Extremes of wealth and poverty, education and ignorance, virtue and vice, religion and irreligion meet here and live in sight of each other. The country does not go as high as the highest, nor as low as the lowest in the city; but it strikes a better average of moral health and soundness, because it lives in the open air and is free from the debasing influences and temptations of city life. The bone and sinew of a nation's morals are to be found in the country. If the moral soundness of the country did not replace the moral rottenness of the town, no nation could survive more than two or three generations. To the average young man town or city life is a death-trap and the open gateway to destruction. The minister, the farmer and the school-teacher live longer than other men because the vices that kill do not come their way, as they go the way of other classes of men.

And not only is it true that the man who lives best lives longest, but he lives happiest and is the most useful while he lives. It is a great crime for a man to die before his time as the fruit of wrong-doing. It is God's will that man shall live long on the earth, and be happy while he is here, and the only way to fulfill these ends of being is in the recognition of God's claims upon us, and conformity to the laws he has made for our guidance. An upright man has a good conscience, he enjoys the approval of God and the best that is in himself, he sets a good example before his neighbor and vindicates the wisdom of God in making him. Is it not the great fact of the universe that right-doing pays the largest dividends? Will it pay to do wrong? Will anything pay, even in this life, but righteousness? Is not an evil practice or a vicious habit insanity, when you consider the consequences to which it leads? Is not sin both a life and a happiness-destroyer? "What man is he that desireth life and loveth many days that he may see good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile, depart from evil and do good, seek peace and pursue it."

Hour of Prayer.

WEIGHED IN THE BALANCES.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Sept. 14, 1898.)

Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting.—Dan. 5:27.

God is constantly weighing men, institutions, measures, movements and nations, in the balances. It is a process from which nothing and no one escapes. Belshazzar was a king occupying a position of responsibility and power. Like many another king before and since his day, he was unmindful of the true interests of the people, and had given himself to feasting and drinking. It was during one of these feasts that there came forth the fingers of a man's hand and wrote on the wall of the king's palace some strange words. The king was troubled, for he no doubt had a guilty conscience. Daniel was remembered as having interpreted a dream for his father, Nebuchadnezzar, and was sent for to interpret the strange words. The words were, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin," and this was the interpretation which Daniel gave: "God hath numbered thy kingdon and brought it to an end. Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting. Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians." "This was probably a severe blow to the king's ambition, but it was God's judgment and it was inevitable. He was given a great opportunity, but he failed to improve it. He was found wanting. At a time in his nation's history when he should have been giving his clearest thought and his best efforts to promote the unity and well-being of the people over whom he ruled, he was given to banqueting, to sensual indulgences and to idolatrous practices. God weighed him in His balances and he was found wanting. It has been His verdict upon many a king and potentate.

God not only weighs kings, but He weighs every man in His balances. He gives to each of us life and endowment with a certain measure of ability and opportunity for usefulness. If we neglect to develop our God-given powers, and to use the opportunities that are offered to us, we are weighed in the balances and found wanting.

If God gives us riches, and we selfishly use them for the gratification of our pride, our ambition and our appetites, instead of regarding them as a trust from God, to be employed for the welfare of mankind, we are weighed in the balances and found wanting.

If in His providence God has placed us in a position of responsibility and influence, where our example will tell powerfully for truth and righteousness, and we hide our Christian light and refuse to let it shine, we have betrayed our trust; we have been weighed in the balances and found wanting.

If it has been given to us to preach the gospel, and we have been honored with a pulpit and a congregation, but have sought our own selfish ends and have been more anxious about our salaries than about the souls of those for whom we watch, or if we have neglected to cultivate the gift that is in us, so as to render the best service to him who hath called us into the fellowship of the gospel; in a word, if we have failed to recognize the dignity and the responsibility of the high calling, and to meet its demands upon us, we have been weighed in the balances and found wanting.

If we have been reared in a Christian home, with Christian influences about us from our youth, but have neglected the claims of Christ and the call of duty, and trusting to our own strength have made moral shipwreck of ourselves, we have been weighed in the balances and found wanting.

If a nation, planted by the hand of God, and favored above many other nations with the blessings of civil and religious liberty and the material advantages, grows rich and powerful and capable of becoming a great civilizing and Christianizing agency in the world, forgets God, becomes absorbed in money-getting, heeds not the cries of the oppressed, and the poor within its own borders, and puts forth no effort to purify itself from corruption and unrighteousness, it, too, has been weighed in the balances and foud wanting.

If the American Republic, having received special tokens of divine guidance and help in its recent conflict with Spain for the freedom of Cuba, should fail to understand the significance of this divine interposition, and not see in it a call to large and unselfish service in the uplifting of humanity, but should settle down to selfish ease and luxurious living, it, too, will be weighed in the balances and found wanting.

If our own effort to restore a simpler and purer Christianity, and to promote the unity of God's people, which has been so signally blessed of God, should lose the spirit of religious freedom in which it was born, and of high devotion to truth which has marked its history, and should degenerate into a mere sect, seeking its own glory, the sentence that will be ultimately pronounced upon it will be, "Weighed in the balances and found wanting."

These are testing times. Only those who trust in God and who make it their supreme aim to do His will can abide the test.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the God of nations, as well as of individuals, we beseech Thee that Thou wouldst bless this great Republic of the West which, in Thy providence, has become a lighthouse for the nations of the earth. We invoke Thy blessings upon its President his Cabinet and upon those who have been called to act as commissioners in arranging for a permanent peace, based on righteousness. May they be endowed with wisdom from on high, and seek to carry out Thy high counsel in the purposes of this nation. May all who are in authority in the nation and in the various states be men who shall fear God and love their fellowmen, to the end that this nation may be a blessing, not only to all its own citizens, but to the world. May it not be weighed in the balances and found wanting. Let Thy blessing rest upon us as individual Christians, that we may walk worthy of our high calling in Christ Jesus, and not bring reproach upon that worthy name by which we are called. Grant us grace to so live that when the testing time is over we may meet with Thy approval and be received into everlasting habitations through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

OR MACATAWA MUSINGS.

Grand Rapids is 30 miles distant from Macatawa, and quite a large number of its citizens have their summer homes here at the Park. It is a city of about 100,000 population and is one of the cleanest, thriftiest and most enterprising cities of its class in the whole country. On the invitation of the members of our church in that city, we spent last Lord's day with them, preaching morning and evening. The pastor, E. M. Widger, is on a short vacation, and has been taking in some of the Northern Michigan resorts. He made us a brief visit at Macatawa, and we were all very favorably impressed with him. We found his church to be enthusiastic concerning him and hopeful of making substantial progress under his wise and energetic leadership. This church has been singularly fortunate—or wise, we should say, perhaps—in its selection of preachers. It has always had good men, and the result is that the church has good standing in the community. It has also an efficient board of officers. It is not a large church, but it contains within its membership some of the best people of the city, and its Sunday-school and Endeavor Society are among the liveliest and best we have seen anywhere. We enjoyed our visit to Grand Rapids very much, and it is always a delight to be the guest of our Brother and ex-Mayor, L. C. Stow. He explained to us the plan of their city government, which has in it some features worth studying by other cities. Grand Rapids has an intelligent class of citizens, who mean to keep their city as good as the best. As one of the great centers of the furniture manufacturing industry it has a prosperous future before it.

These are clear, beautiful, restful days here at Macatawa, and the nights are perfect poems. The moon, now at its full, turns the night into a softer day, and bathes hill, lake and forest in its silvery light. With these closing days of August, however, the exit from the Park increases, and "friend after friend departs." Each steamer that plows its way through the silver sea, these moonlit nights, carries scores of our summer population. Among the last to leave us were Bro. Geo. H. Combs and family, of Kansas City, Bro. J. P. McKnight, of Peoria, and Bro. F. E. Udell and wife, of St. Louis. Bro. Combs' departure was hastened a couple of weeks by an accident which befell his younger son, Errett, whose hands were severely burned by falling into a bonfire. He was doing well when he left, but they felt it would be better to have him where he would be under the care of a skilled physician. Bro. Combs preached a sermon at the Park last Lord's day which was a source of comfort and help to many. The people here are as much pleased with Bro. Combs and his family as they are with Macatawa, which is saying a good deal. Kansas City has given us some splendid people this year:—The Richardsons, the Combses, the Buxtons, and others; we shall be surprised if it does not send us more of the same kind next year.

Among the late arrivals who are coming for a September vacation are Burris A. Jenkins, of Indianapolis, and Bro. Davidson and wife of Fayetteville, Ark. Howard Cramblet is expected in a few days. September is a delightful month here and there is plenty of room for those who remain during that month. The air is a little cooler, fishing is livelier, and later in September the ducks make their appearance on Black Lake and vie with the black bass in affording amusement to those who are fond of the gun as well as the rod. Edgewood-on-the-Lake will not be closed for the season until about or a little after the middle of September. It is our purpose to attend the Michigan State Missionary Convention, which meets in Saginaw this week. After that we shall tarry a few days, until the September hot spell is passed in St. Louis, before we return to the city. As long as Uncle Sam's mails run on schedule time it matters little where the editor is, so closely do steam and electricity connect us with the office.

Speaking of conventions reminds us that our own national gathering at Chattanooga approaches, and it is not too early for the people to be getting ready to make this one of the greatest conventions, in numbers, in enthusiasm and in work accomplished. There are many reasons why the next convention should be a large and successful one. Its location, in the South, or at the gateway to theSouth, will make it accessible to many of our brethren who have never before had the privilege of attending one of our national conventions. It will be a source of inspiration to the whole South, and will tend mightily to remove a good deal of unreasonable prejudice that has been entertained by many good brethren in those parts against our missionary conventions. As the North and South have buried their sectional differences, politically, in a war for the oppressed Cubans, why should not Disciples North and South unite, hand and heart, in pushing forward to victory the great plea which we are making for a united church and a purer Christianity? It is high time that the little differences of the past, concerning methods of co-operation in mission work, should be buried, and we should illustrate to the world the power of union and co-operation in the work of the gospel. The historic associations around Chattanooga, the desire to benefit our brethren in the South, the demand that are upon us to increase our efforts, both in the home and foreign fields, all unite in calling for one of the largest conventions in our history. Let us begin to plan at once to make it so.

We are not surpised to learn from the Subscription Department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that since it assumed its new form, and under its special offer, it is adding many new names to its list of readers. We would be more or less than human not to feel gratified at the expressions of appreciation which reach us continually from brethren in whose taste and judgment we have confidence, concerning both the mechanical beauty and contents ofthe paper. In neither respect has the paper attained to our ideal as yet, "but this one thing we do: forgetting the things that are behind and stretching forward unto the things that are before, we press on toward the goal" of higher excellence in religious journalism. One of the things that must go before and pave the way for all religious progress, is an improved religious journalism—freer, more independent, more devoted to truth, more intensely Christian, and commanding the best consecrated talent of the church to enrich its pages.

Questions and Answers.

There is an impression, among a number I come in contact with, that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is not sound in the faith regarding baptism, and I must acknowledge that I am sometimes forced to think the impression well founded, if I have correctly understood the editor and some of our leading contributors, like Haley, Tyler and others. Whether sound in the faith or not, there seems to be a marked difference from the teaching of A. Campbell, B. W. Stone, J. M. Mathes, Elijah Goodwin, J. W. McGarvey, Franklin and a host of others. In order that myself and others may understand the editor, I will ask the question, Is baptism in water in order to real remission of sins or of formal remission only? J. N. Stone.

There has been an "impression" among a certain class of brethren who make a hobby of baptism that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is not "sound in the faith," on that subject. With these brethren, however, the relation of baptism to the remission of sins is an important item of "faith," whereas according to the generally accepted view among us it is not an object of faith, but a matter of interpretation and knowledge. No doubt, if we should attempt to enter into a philosophical discussion of the reasons that underlie baptism and its relation to remission of sins, there could easily be developed a variety of opinions among us, and if these opinions should be made matters of faith and tests of fellowship, it would be quite possible to originate a number of distinct sects on this question. This, however, could never be done in harmony with the principles of our plea. All who believe in Christ, and because of that faith desire to obey him in the ordinance of baptism, are regarded as "sound in the faith," and entitled to our Christian fellowship. As to the distinction between "real" and "formal" remission of sins, it is one that we never made, as the Scriptures do not seem to make it. Mr. Campbell used the phrase once in defining his position in a debate, but we do not see that its use tends to unity of judgment. We believe that baptism was designed by Jesus Christ to be a real help to the believer in coming to the assurance of forgiveness. As it stands for the unconditional surrender of the believer to Christ and a solemn commitment to His Lordship, remission of sins is associated with it in the New Testament. Acts 2:38 and 22:16, and other kindred passages, do not readily admit of any other interpretation. It must never be lost sight of, however, that baptism derives all its significance from its being an act of faith in and of loyalty to Jesus Christ. To speak of it apart from the repentance and faith of which it is the outward expression, as is often done, tends to create a prejudice against it in some instances and in others to lead persons to attach an undue importance to the act itself. It was characteristic of Christ's teaching, as against that of the Pharisees, to lay supreme emphasis upon the inner life—the heart and its motives and purposes—and this must be characteristic of all who would seek to reproduce the Christianity of Christ. No amount of regularity in form can atone for the absence of that Spirit without which we are none of Christ's.

In answer to a recent question concerning the Lord's Supper you stated that "we are not required to conform precisely to the method given in the New Testament; if so we would have to recline around the table, use barley loaves, etc." Was Jesus speaking of those things, and if not would they enter into the argument? By the same method of reasoning some of our preachers, instead of "going down into the water" with the candidate, stay on dry footing while they are baptizing the candidate. Why did not the apostle practice this way if it was as good as any?

G. W. Calhoun.

Bro. Calhoun is not the only one who has stumbled at our answer concerning the method of observing the Lord's Supper. A few brethren have been greatly "grieved" at what we said. We are sorry to give offense to them or to grieve any one, but we would be false to the spirit of Christianity as we understand it, if we taught differently. What we said was that we are not bound to follow slavishly the details of the manner or method of observing the Lord's Supper. Jesus had no such thought in his mind. He adopted certain emblems to be used in remembrance of him. When they are used in that spirit and for that purpose, the ordinance is properly observed. Whether they be passed by deacons or handed from member to member, whether thanks be returned for both before either is passed, seems to us to be wholly a matter of taste, not of law or of conscience. We might ask our querist as to the preachers not going down into the water with the candidate, was Christ speaking of this when he instituted the ordinance of baptism in the great commission? Is it enjoined anywhere, upon any one, in baptizing, to "go down into the water" with the candidate? How does our querist know what the practice of the apostles was in reference to this matter? It is nowhere stated in what manner any apostle baptized his candidate —whether he went down into the water with him, or stood upon the edge of the pool or stream and baptized him. The thing to be attended to is the baptism—the burial and resurrection of the candidate in the likeness of Christ's burial and resurrection. The attempt to bring the spirit of Leviticus over into the Acts of the Apostles is to misunderstand the genius of Christianity. Commands must be obeyed, but in methods there is liberty.

If the production of the Holy Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, meekness, temperance, fidelity, patience, what kind of spirit is it that produces war, strife, hatred and bloodshed?

Chas. E. Delano.

Fairbury, Neb.

An *un*holy spirit, of course.

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of May 19th, 1898 (article—The Model Church), in regard to "the first church in Jerusalem" it is said: "The fact that it continued to practice circumcision, to observe the Jewish Sabbath and to keep the law of Moses would place it beyond the lines of the orthodox Christianity of our day."

1st. From what time and how long did this "first church" continue "to practice circumcison, to observe the Jewish Sabbath and to keep the law of Moses?"

2nd. Were "to practice circumcision" and "to observe the Jewish Sabbath" different from "to keep the law of Moses?" If yes, in what respect did they differ?

3rd. Does the phrase, "Jewish Sabbath" imply that there is another?

4th. One here denies that the "first church" practiced as you affirm, and to refute you argues thus: Jesus commanded the apostles to teach those whom they made disciples to observe all things he commanded; the apostles taught as the Spirit gave them utterance; the disciples continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching: therefore, since the apostles did not teach these things "the first church" did not observe or keep any of them. Briefly show his error.

5th. May not any kind of wine, blackberry, cherry, etc., be properly used at the Lord's Supper.

6th. Would water do in case wine could not be had? G. C. HUTCHINSON.

Kelso, Wash., July 2, 1898.

1. It is probable that many of the Jewish Christians continued to practice circumcision and perhaps other Jewish rites up to the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and perhaps later. We known from Acts 21:20-24 that the Jewish Christians at Jerusalem were jealous of the law and practiced some of its ceremonies, at least, at the close of Paul's third missionary tour.

2. The practice of circumcision and the observance of the Sabbath were part of the law of Moses, but not all of it.

3. No. By the phrase, "Jewish Sabbath," is meant that it was the Sabbath of the Jews. There is, of course, a Sabbatic feature in the Lord's day, but it is not designated as the Sabbath in the New Testament.

4. This line of argument would prove altogether too much. For instance, it would prove that the church at Corinth never abused the Lord's Supper nor neglected the assembling of themselves together nor committed any sin, for surely the apostles did not teach them to do these things. Unfortunately, Christians even do not always obey the truth fully, partly because they do not always understand it and partly because of the weakness of the flesh through which they are led to depart from the truth.

5. and 6. There is no need of any departure from the use of the "fruit of the vine" in the observance of the Lord's Supper. If persons were so situated that it would be impossible for them to secure the "fruit of the vine," then the question would be pertinent as to whether something else would not answer; but with proper foresight this condition of things need not exist.

A STUDY OF LIVING AND DYING NATIONS.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, PH. D.,
Superintendent of the Reform Bureau.

And I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth.—Isa. 58:14.

It is of the bearing of this promise on nations that I wish especially to speak. The prophets did not, like preachers of to-day, seek the conversion of individuals as an end, but only as a means to the saving of the state. The supreme fact of living history is that the Sabbath-keeping nations are literally riding on the high places of the earth. I have not read in a year a news item so significant as the statement of that very reliable paper, the Baltimore Sun, that two-thirds of the world's mail is in the English language. That means that one-fourteenth of the world's population sends two-thirds of the mail, and that means a corresponding pre-eminence in intelligence and wealth.

On the other hand, the Sabbathless and Sabbath-breaking nations are poor—poor physically—Italy once, and France twice in ten years have cut down their standard for soldiers; poor mentally—they have the greatest illiteracy; poor morally—they have the most vice; poor financially—their workmen, despite longer hours per day and one more work-day in the week, get the lowest wages; and they are also the worst off politically, vibrating between the extremes of despotism and anarchy, while Sabbath-keeping peoples enjoy the golden mein of liberty under law.

If I should claim that the difference in nations is all due to their treatment of the Sabbath I should proclaim that I had been run away with by a hobby. Let us broadly study the "living and dying nations"—to borrow Lord Salisbury's expressive classification of the quivering map of the world as it now spreads before us in dissolving views. What a time to teach geography and history! Surely, no true teacher can fail to teach also the great lessons in civics that throng the world-map of living history to which Dr. Dewey's guns have called all eyes! Lord Salisbury did not need to specify the "dying nations." Every well-informed person thought the names of China, Turkey, France and Spain. And when he said "living nations," in every corner of the civilized world every reader was bound to admit that the British Empire and the United States belonged to the "living nations."

These "living nations," however, have some serious symptoms, and should study the dead and dying nations in order to keep out of their graveyard.

With nations once mighty dying before our eyes, we face anew as a living problem the academic question of our college history classes, "Is it necessary that a nation should grow old and weak and die?"

As a matter of fact nations have hardly averaged as long a life as the patriarchs, and there is no Methuselah among them. We are easily deceived by old names on the maps. The "body politic," the government, which bears the name to-day, may be but a young namesake of a body politic deceased that once occupied the same territory.

THE GRAVEYARD OF NATIONS.

Where are the nations of which we read in the Bible and the classics? The world-empires of the Egyptians, Hittites, Assyrians, Persians, Macedonians, Romans, died in turn. We read "Egypt" on the map, but there are no Egyptians. The word "Rome" is on the map, but there are no Romans. The word "Greece" is on the map, but alas! the recent war showed that there are no Greeks. Of all races of antiquity the only ones that survive are the great prophetic races, the Jews and Arabs, both long ago dead politically, surviving only as subject peoples.

EXISTING NATIONS YOUNG.

Turn to the map of to-day. This continent is the "New World," our own young nation, hardly older than some of its centenarian citizens, the elder brother among American Republics. Africa in its civilized governments is a yet newer world. Even Europe is new politically. The present Government of Spain is an infant in many senses. The French Republic is an epileptic child. Germany's Emperor is known as the "infant terrible," of Europe, and his empire is hardly older or more stable. The kingdom of Italy, too, is still struggling with the diseases of childhood. Great Britain's present monarchy goes back only to Cromwell, and real constitutional government only to the coronation of Victoria. Russia claims a thousands years, but it is a thousand years of savagery, and the nation has not yet borne a long test of civilization.

Surely, we shall find some nations in Asia. First, we come upon Turkey, called "the sick man," but really dead and stinking, only kept from burial by the quarrels of the undertakers. Now that we have learned to use our navy for humanity, let Turkey take care not to have any more Armenian massacres.

Japan's Mikado claims an ancestral royal line of 6,000 years, but previous to 1879 the mikadoes were popes, and the tycoons, now abolished, were the civil emperors, so that as a civil ruler the Mikado is the first of a new series. But China surely is old. Nay, the present Mantchu Empire began in 1796 and has already died and is on the dissecting table under the knives of Europe.

A NATION MAY BE IMMORTAL.

Must every nation, must our own, grow old and die? Nay, for in the very nature of the case a nation may be immortal, like a river; its drops ever passing on to the sea, but ever renewed from its mountain springs. If we maintain the Christian morality and popular education which

Washington declared to be the high sources of national prosperity, and keep unbroken on either hand the banks of liberty and law, our nation's life may go on ceaselessly, singing like the river:

"Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever."

"Arise and shine in youth immortal,
Thy light is come, thy king appears;
Beyond the century's swinging portal
Breaks a new dawn a thousand years."

But eternal life to a nation can come only through "eternal vigilance." Many who firmly believe nature goes by law, act as if history went by luck. As surely as effect follows cause Babylonian vices will produce a Babylonian fall.

IMPURITY THE DEADLIEST PLAGUE OF NATIONS.

Babylon, Greece, Rome, the Renaissance kingdoms of Italy and France, form a national series, all showing that the highest art, if it be mental culture without moral, if it be the art whose motto is "art for art's sake," the godless æstheticism of nude art that puts beauty in the supreme place instead of duty, not only cannot take the place of religion in checking immorality, but even increases it, dragging the nation down the three steps to national ruin: first, moral; second, physical; third, political decay. France is on the second step, the only civilized land in which the birth-rate is falling below the death-rate—a blazing warning on the walls of this modern Babylon of the retribution to men and nations that follows the violation of the fourth and seventh commandments.

Why should we cast aside our Anglo-Saxon traditions to welcome the nude to our literature and homes, when every nation from which we have borrowed it is either dead or dying? Since France is dying of the worst of plagues, French pictures, French plays and French novels should be quarantined like ships from infected ports.

The problem of purity is the question of life or death to nations.

As we look through history we see that nations have died chiefly of internal causes; not of free silver or free trade, but of free love.

Therefore, moral questions should be the supreme questions in politics, those that conform to Gladstone's definition of the purpose of law—"To make it as hard as possible to do wrong and as easy as possible to do right." This series of deceased empires teach also that our culture must not ignore morals. Better a man be not educated, if his conscience is not to be developed with his wits, lest he be only the more skillful criminal. "An ignorant thief may rob a frieght car, but an educated thief will steal the whole railroad."

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH CHINA?

If France is dying through neglect of morality, why is China also dying, which has given more attention to moral teachings than any other country? China's warning is against a morality that ignores God. It is a stupendous proof of the inefficiency of agnostic ethical culture, utilitarian morality. Confucius and Buddha, the greatest of purely human moralists, are the Herbert Spencer and Felix Adler of Asia, only they had opportunity to try their theories wholly apart from Christianity and for centuries on great races with every aid of government favor. And what has been the result? When their pretty but powerless sayings were being paraded at the World's Parliament of Religions, by men of Asia, who were significantly unaccompanied by their wives, I would like to have interjected this one question: "How do you treat woman?" Like a flashlight that question exposes the failure of the agnostic ethical culture to produce those two essentials of social welfare and national prosperity, good morals and human rights. The Bible in the schools has had a great influence in producing these two great essentials in our American history. We take a great risk if we throw over this sheet anchor of our ship of state.

In the words of Wendell Phillips: "The answer to Confucianism is China; the answer to Buddhism is India; the answer to the Koran is Turkey; the answer of the Bible is the Christian civilization of Europe and America."

"Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay."
—Tennyson, in "Locksley Hall."

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH SPAIN?

But what is the matter with Spain? It is a medieval ghost, wandering about the 19th century, vainly attempting to rule its colonies by medieval methods of grasping despotism.

To those European nations that threaten to interfere with our work of deliverance we say, the Powers should have interfered long ago between Spain and her oppressed colonies and insisted on civilized modes of government. Now that we have taken up their neglected task, let them stand back till it is fully done.

Let us not approach the consideration of Spain in any spirit of revenge. The cry, "Remember the Maine," breathes the spirit of a Spanish pirate. And those who talk as if national honor were the chief thing at stake in this war are equally misrepresenting our noble motive. Not hatred or honor, but humanity is our commander-in-chief. For the first time in all history a nation has entered upon a great war to secure the independence of another and inferior people. Not the explosion of the Maine, but Senator Proctor's appeal to pity brought on the war. And let our pity not cease till every island oppressed by Spain is freed. But let not our humanity stop with the island victims of Spanish errors. Let us pity the "Peninsula," where long misrule has created the spirit of revolution. In that broadening humanity which the war has developed let us find a place for Spain's own people. But while we pity Spain let us also search out the meaning of her decline. It is not chiefly a matter of climate, for Anglo-Saxons maintain free governments in all climes. Nor is Spain's condition so much due to Catholicism as many Protestants suppose, for Germany, the home of Protestantism, has less civil liberty than Catholic South America. Spain's arrested development is no doubt largely due to the Inquisition, that killed or banished every one who believed in progress. Like the massacre and exile of Huguenots from France this was slitting the arteries and letting out the nation's best blood.

CONTINENTAL VERSUS ANGLO-SAXON INSTITUTIONS.

Why is the French Republic more in sympathy with tyrannical Spain and despotic Russia than with our Republic and Great Britain, whose government is freer than its own? The Zola trial has shown France is really a military despotism, which is also suggested by the fact that it takes ten times as many soldier police to keep Paris from revolution as it takes of civilian police to keep the larger city of London in better order. In London the Sabbath is the chief of police. We are now coming on the explanation of the great contrast between Anglo-Saxons and continentals, in which last category we include the South American Republics, strangely more in sympathy with their old oppressor than with the emancipator of Cuba. It is passing strange that so many of our people read of the constant revolutions of the childish Spanish Republics south of us and never think what they mean. These republics mostly have copied our paper constitution, but that does not make them truly American Republics in the same sense we have given the word American. See Honduras turning over its most important government functions to an American syndicate—customs, banking, railways—because it has neither brains nor character enough for self-government. And this but a sample. No nation that spends its Sabbaths in work and play has ever developed safe and stable popular government. And yet in the teeth of a whole continent of horrible examples we allow misers and prodigals to sacrifice our palladium of liberty to their selfish uses, and even the churches are doing little to prevent them. In my judgment the contrast between the despotism and anarchy of the continentals and the stable freedom of Anglo-Saxon is due chiefly to the influence of the two sets of institutions, one the continental, of which the continental Sunday if chief; the other Anglo-Saxon, of which the British-American Sabbath is the chief.

WHAT DOES "ANGLO-SAXON" MEAN?

We talk of Anglo-Saxons as if the words stood chiefly for heredity. In reality they stand more for institutions, for training, to which, it is being discovered, most of the credit belongs that was formerly given to heredity. There is something in blood, but the best born child, brought up in the slums, is likely to be a vagabond, while thousands of slum children placed in Christian homes have developed into good citizens. We call ourselves Anglo-Saxons, but most families have more than two lines of blood—my own for instance, English, French, Greek and German. A man seeking for naturalization papers was asked by the judge: "What is your nationality?" He replied: "I don't know, judge; I wish you would tell me. My father was an Englishman, my mother was a Spaniard and I was born on a French ship flying the Dutch flag. I want to make the rest of the voyage of life under the Stars and Stripes." That would make a fair analysis of what an American is—a composite British-Spanish-French-Dutchman under the Stars and Stripes, that is, under the training of Angla-Saxon institutions.

NECESSITIES OF A REPUBLIC'S LIFE.

There are three necessities of life in a republic: intelligence, conscientiousness and a spirit of equality. In order to develop these the relation of master and servant must be broken every week by general observance of the Sabbath, and the day must be protected from dissipation that there may be opportunity for the mental and moral improvement of the masses. The Sabbath as observed in Great Britain and the really American parts of America makes men, while the holiday Sunday keeps the peoples that have it in childhood—forever at play.

Here it is appropriate to quote Hallam, the great philosopher of history, who says that the shrewd despots of Europe have studiously cultivated a love of Sunday pastimes to keep the people quiet under political distress. Besides this let me put a terse Fourth-of-July saying of Bob Burdette: "The Declaration of Independence was not written in a beer dive on Sunday afternoon, not by a long shot." We excuse the German's law-defying Sunday beer garden as a "national custom." As well allow the Turk "liberty" to bring his harem and the Spaniard his bullfight. The great war of to-day is not the easy conquest of Spain, but the long war with continental institutions that is now on all over the land—the kinetoscope reproduction of a bullfight as large as life going on unmolested in the national capital; the prizefight announced by other American Spaniards at Buflalo; the Sunday papers, Sunday theaters, Sunday saloons, all of them borrowed from the continentals, none of them of Anglo-Saxon usage, that are being introduced like Spanish fortresses in our cities. "Remember American institutions," is the cry we need.

Already some of our large cities are showing the effects of continental institutions in a new generation of Americans, who are Frenchy, sporty children, caring for little but amusement. We are making much of heroes in Manila and Santiago. Why not run up in our city the banner, "America for American institutions?"

GLADSTONE AND BISMARCK—COMPARISON AND CONTRAST.

FRANK R. STUTZMAN.

"England ne'er lost a king of so much worth," is the eulogy Shakespeare, pronounced upon Henry the Fifth. Truer this tribute if applied to Britain's uncrowned monarch, Gladstone.

Germany's greatest son—at least of the nineteenth century—has recently fallen. Gladstone and Bismarck were very unlike, even extreme opposites in many characteristics, yet careful reflection reveals several points of striking similarity in their careers.

Each attained an advanced age, preserving his faculties almost unimpaired to the end. Gladstone lived to be 88 years of age, Bismarck, 83. The former was 85 when he voluntarily retired from public life. Bismarck was 75, and was capable of several more years of active service when he was involuntarily retired by the youthful emperor.

Both were intellectual giants and marvels of industry. Gladstone's labors as a writer, as well as a statesman, are the wonder and admiration of the world. Bismarck, too, knew no idle time. To one who was conversing with him on literary themes, he stated that he had never found time to read fiction of any kind, not even the noblest productions of the world's greatest novelists. Persistent vigilance and untiring industry were the price paid by Bismarck as well as Gladstone, for achievements in statecraft.

Both made statesmanship the business or main pursuit of their lives, and in this achieved the great victories by which they will be chiefly remembered by posterity.

Concentration of purpose and energy to the accomplishment of a great idea, or ideal, is a prominent charateristic in the career of each. Each was eminently though not entirely successful in reaching the goal he set before him.

Neither Gladstone nor Bismarck was obliged to struggle with poverty, that school in which so many of the world's brightest lights have developed their great qualities. Gladstone's father was quite wealthy. Bismarck inherited a goodly estate.

Let us now note some points of contrast presented in their busy careers.

The youth and early manhood of each stand out in striking contrast. Gladstone early evinced a rare precocity and his purity of life was no less marked. Bismarck, on the other hand, was a wild, reckless, dissipated youth, who up to the time of his marriage, at the age of 32, was in no wise distinguished "except in an avidity for country sports and skill in horsemanship."—[Lord, in "Beacon Lights of History."]

Gladstone entered Parliament when but 23. The example of Gladstone, as well as other great men, brands as infamous the flippant assertion that "every young man must sow his wild oats."

With respect to their records as statesmen, that of Gladstone is without a flaw, viewed from a moral standpoint. Preeminent in ability, he was greater yet as a Christian state man. Like Sumner, he could affirm: "The slave of principle, I call no party master." In regard to Bismarck, while we must give him credit for a lofty patriotism, and even granting with his staunch admirer, Dr. Lord, that he was "conscientious in the discharge of his duties, as he understood them, in the fear of God," yet, respecting the methods employed by him in the consummation of his patriotic purposes, the same writer admits: "He considered only the end in view, caring nothing for the means; he had no scruples."—["Life of Prince Bismarck."] Bismarck was an arch-trickester; a cunning intriguer. Is it to harsh a judgment to pronounce upon him, that in his methods he showed himself the scheming politician rather than the highest type of statesman?

In one other capital point there is presented a marked contrast between these two men. While neither was by birth or early association what we call a "man of the people," yet the whole trend of Gladstone's public career was in the direction of the promotion of the welfare and lifting the burdens of the masses. Bismarck, on the other hand, devoted his life to the upholding of centralized authority and to the strehgthening of the monarchical idea.

Gladstone modified his views considerably in the course of his life, becoming the champion of reforms, investing the people with a constantly enlarging measure of liberty. When Gladstone retired to private life it was said of him that he had found England an oligarchy and left it a republic in all but name. Bismarck, on the contrary, found Germany a bundle of independent states and left it a powerful centralized monarchy, verging on the absolute. Gladstone's work was in harmony with the spirit of the nineteenth century. Bismarck was Carlyle's "strong man," representing the absolutism of a departed age.

Posterity will hold Gladstone in affectionate remembrance as the "Grand Old Man," while the career of Bismarck, the "Iron Old Man," imparts valuable lessons upon the power of an indomitable will, in conjunction with indefatigable energy to surmount colossal difficulties.

THE NAME "CHRISTIAN" AGAIN.

BRUCE WOLVERTON.

I desire to thank J. J. Haley for his editorial of Aug. 11th on "The Abuse of the Name Christian." It is exhilarating, now and then, in the maze of controversy about the "Name," and the "Anointing," and the "Baptism of the Holy Spirit," to read an article that evinces the gleam of sunlight. Clear thought, distinguishing things that differ, more clean-cut statements of truth, showing right relationships, are welcome in these days. It does make one tired to plod along with those who see men only "as trees walking." One is tempted to study trees rather then men. There is this relief: One can get out from the shadows of the trees and get a glimpse of sunlight.

I once asked a person who, for years had his name on the church record for the idea conveyed by the word Christ—no response. It seemingly had no meaning to him. Then, thought I, are we also drifting into the mere ritual of "mouthing" and teaching others to "mouth" the creed? I fear this is too true!

Lately I listened to a series of sermons from one said to be noted in this and adjoining states as an evangelist. I was at times struck with his boldness. I often noted with pleasure his insight into various systems of teaching. Not seldom did I note his knowledge of the Word. Persons were impressed; some responded to the invitation. They were expected to make, intelligently, the confession. But when they came to baptism I found it necessary to explain to them the faith they were presumed to confess. Then remembered I that in all of those discourses, not a ray of clear sunlight had been shed upon the means whereby they could know the import of the word "Christ," the keyword to the "confession."

Thus in my cogitations I followed also the wanderings of the Disciples (small at this time) as they followed the Master. The one thing that they needed to learn "by heart" was the meaning of the word Christ. Is it not worthy of note that Jesus not once intimated a word concerning his death for the sins of the world until the "disciples" had "learned" this lesson "by heart?"

Read Matt. 16:21 (Italics mine): "From that time BEGAN Jesus to show unto his disciples how that he must go unto Jerusalem and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and the third day be raised up." And not only as an objective reality that he is the "Anointed One," but they themselves must be anointed before they were ready for their work.

Preparatory to this they must obtain a fuller realization of the truth before they were ready for the anointing. Proof (Jno. 16:12): "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now."

This was before his resurrection. Afterwards he said, "These are my words which I spake unto you [this is what I meant as I spake by parables:] Then opened he their minds, that they might understand the Scriptures" (Luke 24:45).

Following closely upon these words came, first, (Jno. 16:13): "Howbeit, when he the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth;" next (Luke 24:49): "And, behold, I send the promise of the Father upon you."

Again, let us distinguish things that differ. As an illustration, take Peter. We have Peter the disciple, Peter the Christian and Peter the apostle. Peter the disciple had or desired to have his own will, and mind, too. Peter the apostle spake only as the Holy Spirit gave him utterance. Peter the Christian blended beautifully his will with the will of the Master and both spake and acted through his own will and mind as the Holy Spirit had directed in the revealed will.

Peter the disciple was found withstanding the Lord's death, though he had confessed him as the Christ. Peter the disciple took the sword in the garden after his sound sleep in the presence of agony; followed afar off, denied thrice the Master, wept bitterly. After the resurrection Peter the disciple, while tarrying at Jerusalem, presumed with others to enter politics and fill out the Apostolic College, a transaction in the sanctioning of which the Holy Spirit is as silent as the grave.

Peter the saint, the anointed, in the language of Christ, "the [when the thou art] converted," is ready to speak the Word with all boldness. In prison he is thankful to be counted worthy to suffer in the name of the Lord. He heeds the lesson taught him at Cæsarea, that God is no respecter of persons. He stumbles at Antioch, but arises and goes on. He strives to not grieve the Holy Spirit whereby he is sealed unto the day of redemption. He writes kindly of Bro. Paul who once rebuked him, and in the same sentence evinces the fact of his character as a Christian, where he tells us of many things in Paul's writings hard (even by Peter the disciple or Christian) to be understood, and which the ignorant (undiscipled) and unsteadfast (unchristed) wrest * * * to their own destruction (2 Peter 3:16).

But Peter the apostle is another person, inasmuch as the baptism of the Holy Spirit is different from the anointing which he received of the Father. Peter the apostle preached what Peter the disciple had rejected and Peter the Christian had to study out even by revelation and memory. Otherwise, what is the import of Acts 10:16: "Then remembered I the word of the Lord," etc.?

The baptism of the Holy Spirit opened the door of faith to the whole world, Jew and Gentile. The anointing of the Holy Spirit comes in at that open door and finds the temple cleansed for his indwelling. And this is the only "christening." Truly are such called Christians.

In conclusion, shall we write it Disciples? There are two reasons why we should: It is a good *de*nominational title. "Nomen" is "name." "De" is "drawn from," or beneath, i. e., lower than the name. But the name is "Christian." So were they called. (See Acts 11:26; Jas. 2:7.)

By all laws of definitions, as to genus and species, the lower the order the greater the extension. It gives opportunity for vast expansion in the United States Census. Let me write it U. S. Census.

Lastly, shall we write it with a big D? Then why not with a big I. Yea, why not write it with two big I's? Thus: DIscIples. It would at least be characteristic—of denominationalism!

THE LAW OF RELIGION AS REVEALED IN NATURE.

A. L. FERGUSON.

One would conclude that even the casual reader of the Bible would quickly learn that work, or Christian activity, is the great law that obtains in Christian ethics. Then, to reverse the order and note the way many so-called Christians live, one would conclude that to obey first principles and attend the service of God's house when you please, and help support the work of the church when you please, is all there is in Christian ethics. It is safe to say that there is a great deal of religious idleness in the church, and this idle element is painfully large. We now appeal to nature as a teacher of the great law that governs the spiritual life, and also for examples of indolence.

Work, work, is nature's voice to all of her children, and as a rule they yield implicit obedience to her great law. Take, for example, one of nature's noblest and bravest children, the stalwart oak, and from the day of its birth it puts forth an independent effort to live, and through the sweep of the years it overcomes all obstacles, and bravely meets and conquers a thousand storms, and finally with well-developed strength and graceful symmetry waves its green banners above the dome of a hundred years. In this monarch of the wood we have revealed the possibilities of Christian living and growth, and the same law obtains in the realm of spirit, and the Christian character that is well rounded out in the graces of strength, solidity and symmetry has yielded implicit obedience to the same law.

We now turn to that indolent element in nature for the lesson and warning it gives us. Parasites are known as nature's paupers, and they abound by the thousand in both the animal and vegetable kingdoms. They put forth very little effort in the way of independent living, but live at the expense of their neighbors. They appropriate food that is already prepared at hand. In the Southland the mistletoe and Spanish moss are seen in great abundance as they adhere to the living trees. As you ride or walk through the forests of Texas the Spanish moss looks like great vails flung over the trees, giving a sombre appearance to the children of the wood. Degeneration is the punishment that nature inflicts upon those who will not pay the price of independent living, and in this class we would point to the dodder that in time loses roots and leaves, and stands a naked stock; also the hermit crab that was once a crustacean of the sea, but now a slimy, disgusting object as it is drawn from the old shell of the whelk. Thus nature punishes by a waste of energy and a loss of organs.

The great lesson to us, intensified by revelation and experience, is to avoid becoming moral parasites, for that means degeneration and death. That ecclesiastical body that says, "Come and put the keeping of your soul and its interests into our hands, and we will care for them and insure you a safe transit from this world to the next," is a dangerous body, and its teaching militates most seriously against the essential element in the growth of Christian character. The Protesant would also make the mistake of saying, "We have discovered all essential things that relate to divine truth, and have formulated and classified them under the headings of Trinity, Atonement, Depravity, Resurrection, etc., and all we ask is that you assent to them, and you need not make research for yourselves, for they are sound and have been safely stored in the tomes of the fathers." Thus the average Christian is expected to passively assent to the statements of men relative to these and other great truths, and to conclude that there is nothing more to do or to find out about Bible truth, and the chief danger to which he is exposed is that of living at the expense of others, spiritually, and becoming a moral parasite. Then again he concludes that his pastor is employed expressly to make research and study and think for him, for he has no time for religious thought and study, and on Lord's day his sole business is to go to the house of God to be entertained and fed on the milk of the Word (for he is not able to endure strong meat) year in and year out, and his attitude is that of a consumer all his life, freely devouring all that is given him without being able to question its truthfulness, for his spiritual horizon is but a a stone's cast before him, and his development of moral power is still less. Now that we have learned the attitude of the average Christian, let us inquire relative to the results of this law as seen in the secular world.

We have the great free school system, of which we are justly proud, and supposing the parents would refuse to send their children, saying, "All things have been discovered in the way of secular truth and classified in the text-books, and it is not possible for them to add to the volume of truth, and it would do no good to send them to school;" what would be our reply? We would say, "You view things from a false premise, for the child is not to add to the volume of truth, but by close application he is to make truth already discovered his own. To do that he must through months and years be forming studious habits, and then, by walking the old beaten paths of thought, study, work, he will in time be able to analyze and digest the great principles of truth, and it is this unceasing struggle of the mind's powers with the varied lines and forms of truth that at last evolves the finished scholar."

The work of the teacher, then, is not to aid the cause of truth, but the unfolding of the child-mind, and by quickening it along the paths of knowledge it will in time learn to act independently and attain intellectual greatness that is possible in no other way. In the example now given it must be patent to even the casual observer that the law governing mental growth is patient intellectual exercise or work, and the soul with its germs of power is subject to the same law. Mental assent to classified truth as found in our religious compendiums, without any labor or research on our part, is one of the evils against which all pulpit voices should be raised, for its tendency is toward moral degeneracy, and militates most seriously against the growth of Christian character. Classified truth is right and proper in its place, and very helpful to the studious, but the casual reader derives little benefit therefrom. While we are in hearty sympathy with all Bible helps, and would not speak lightly of the research of scholarly men, yet the progressive Christian man must make research for himself; he must patiently study, work and digest Bible truth, and familiarize himself with the greatness of its history, its great men and great events, and above all to drink in of the Godlike mind and spirit of its ideal character, Jesus of Nazareth. He must learn that persistent, patient toil is the price the Christian pays to attain the higher forms of Christian excellence. Indolence and indifference to Bible study is alarmingly common to-day, and robs the soul of priceless treasures, and the pulpits of America should warn the masses against these dangerous conditions that are so fatal to the spiritual life.

Nature gives us everything, and yet we do not eat corn and wheat as it comes from her hands, but it must be ground and cooked by us for food to nourish the body, and thus it is with Bible truth in its relation to the soul. Everything depends on the Lord in providing food for the soul, and yet everything depends on us in the right use of the food provided. Spiritual nourishment joined with unceasing activity is essential to the growth of character, and he who would attain the beauty and power of the Christly graces must yield implicit obedience to God's law and "work out his own salvation with fear and trembling."

Saybrook, Ill.

ONE IN CHRIST.

J. M. LOWE.

One day, after a very fraternal discussion at the Ministerial Association, the Presbyterian minister led the closing prayer. In this prayer, among other things, he said this: "Lord, we thank thee that though we may differ in minor points, we are one in Christ." Somehow the truth of the statement forced itself upon me. Is it not true? Do we not differ upon minor points, and are we not one in Christ? We all believe in the same God, in his Son Jesus Christ, in the Bible, the record of God's revelation in Christ, in the Holy Spirit, the Comforter. We agree as to the necessity and perpetuity of the church, that its ordinances are baptism and the Lord's Supper. We all pray to the same God in the name of the same Christ, read the same Bible, and uphold essentially the same standard of spiritual life. We all claim the indwelling of the same Spirit and indulge the some hope of eternal life. Verily, if we agree upon all these great themes, the points wherein we differ must be small.

We differ upon the observance of the Lord's Supper, upon the form and design of baptism, upon the operation of the Holy Spirit, and we hold different views as to the nature, origin and power of sin. We differ also about church government. I believe this comprehends the points of difference among Protestants. None of these can be said to be primary. No difference need be divisive unless it affects the practice of the church, such as baptism, the Lord's Supper and government. Belief as to the Holy Spirit, the power of sin, state of the dead, theories of atonement—none of these should be divisive. It would be a calamity if we all agreed upon them. I am aware of the unique position of the Disciples upon Christian union and in the spirit of such a position have thus written.

But should these differences, that affect practice, prevent a hearty and extensive co-operation of the different bodies of Protestant Christendom? The editorial that appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST several weeks ago, entitled—"Not Enemies but Allies," should be read again and again, for most certainly does it set forth the true relation Christian bodies sustain to each other. By a certain reticence upon the part of the Disciples they have postponed that glorious consummation toward which the ages are advancing. If we have the position that the Christian world must one day occupy, instead of declaring war upon all Christendom we should rather by co-operation and association so infuse Christian thought with the spirit of union that ere long, when a union basis is sought, nothing better will be found—for it does not exist—than the basis which the Disciples have for years upheld.

The objection arises at once: But many of our neighbors have never been baptized, and hence have not put on Christ; how, then, can we be one in Christ? He who would make the burial of the body in water the condition of being in Christ knows neither baptism nor the Spirit of Christ. The significant part of baptism is not the water, but the heart full of faith in Jesus Christ which expresses itself in baptism. If the man is not vitally joined to Christ before baptism, I am sure he is not afterward. That the burial of the body in water brings a man into spiritual relation with Christ is the acme of absurdity. I very frankly say that the great question is, How much of the Spirit of Christ finds its way into my life? rather than how much water was there when I was said to be baptized? What advantage, then, hath baptism, and profit is there in immersion? Much in many ways; chiefly because immersion is New Testament baptism, and beautifully symbolizes the burial of the old man and the resurrection of the new. Nor can baptism ever fall from the place it occupies as the threshold of the kingdom of heaven. Yet it must be said with emphasis that baptism is more than a burial in water. It is faith in obedience, which is a better expression than faith and obedience. There is no place where faith leaves off and obedience begins.

Seeing, then, that the vital part of baptism is a heart-condition upon which all agree—as to the baptism of adults at least—the statement that we disagree upon minor points is reinforced.

If we would talk more upon points of agreement we would not only get acquainted with each other's ways of thinking, but we would also have a common view-point from which to survey and adjust our differences. If one stands upon the mountain top of hyper-Calvinism, another roves around upon the plain of ultra-Arminianism, another is paddling his own canoe up the river of works and another is being blown across the sea by the winds of free grace, how can they get the same view of anything?

Winterset, Ia.

In an article in the Interior, recently, Dr. Geo. B. Russell, on "Nature in Grace," deals with a vital subject in a most reasonable way. His discussion of the theme lies along the domestic line, and what he says commends itself to sound judgment. Dr. Russell's article concludes as follows:

How the natural life thus holds real relation to the spiritual life, begotten by divine operation through the power of God in the use of human means, is not for us to analyze or explain. But the fact is here, nevertheless, to be made due account of in Christian nurture. A plant in well-adapted soil, properly nurtured, will grow to the completion of its life in due season. And a child brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord will just as surely develope a Christian character. If there is ever a falling short of this in some sad failures, the cause must be sought for in some defective or adverse elements of the nurturing conditions applied on the human side. God on his part, in his promises and work, never fails. His conditions are surely adequate, and his word is always made good—though every man be made a liar.

Where children of believing parents are not properly nurtured, they may fail of the grace of God. Large allowance is to be made, of course, for imperfect application and use by man of the gracious means intended of God for the soul's salvation. All children of the Christian families in the covenant, it is sad to reflect, do not manifest practically the good fruits and saving efficacy of this element of nurturing grace. A carnal heart of unbelief may make the birthright blessing of none effect. Esau bartered his away for a mess of pottage; and the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season, may nullify the good effects of Christian nuture and baptismal grace. This sad fact is one of the mysteries of iniquity. But it does not alter the other and larger factor in God's gracious means.

Still it may be held for truth, therefore, that gracious nurture in Christian families is a divine election appointed for the right training of the child for a true Christian faith and religious life. Parents are confronted here with the terrible responsibility of the duty of life in example and precept. In this they are ministering to the saving or losing souls committed to their care and charge. Daily they are doing the one or the other. All their children, in the faith and use of God's means in the plan of the kingdom, may be saved. Rightly trained and religiously educated in the piety of the everlasting covenant of grace brings them to know God and to love him and to serve him. That is true religion. Nurtured into this, they are led by the Spirit in the way to life everlasting. Such preaching of the gospel saves souls.

Material family inheritance to be left for children requires and presupposes that they be trained and prepared for what is to fall to them. If not, it will likely be no blessing. But if they are taught from early years that they must be fitted for their future position, it will grow into them. As a rule their lives will be shaped accordingly. So in the state: we educate children with a view of making them good citizens and patriots, worthy of their fathers and their country. More attention to such training would save our nation from some of its shame.

What is thus undeniably true for the family and the state is no less a condition for the well-being of the church, as the kingdom of Christ in the order of grace. For spiritual and heavenly things the analagous general law holds good, as that does which is found to be true in the domestic and political; only it is more sure in its operation, as it has more powerful aid in its behalf. True Christian nurture in God's approved way will make believers of the growing children, and thus secure the salvation of their souls. Now, if the powers of the world to come, touch us so really in the kingdom of heaven at hand here for purposes of communicating divine grace in the saving nurture of the Christian household, it is only the revelation of God's love. With the divine promise, and the sacramental seal to the baptismal covenant, there is need for a revived sence of the duty of training the children in Christian nuture for the spiritual life.

Our Budget.

—Church Extension this month.

—General Convention next month.

—September ends the missionary year.

—All pledges and apportionments should be paid in full before the convention.

—Any church that did not make an offering for Church Extension, on last Sunday should do so next.

—If last Sunday was too hot, too stormy or too anything else for an offering for Church Extension try another Sunday before the month ends.

—Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

"Went beyond apportionment. Not all in; will do our best." L. T. FAULDERS.
Harristown, Ill.

—We publish the program of the Missouri State Convention in this paper. Please preserve it for future use.

—J. H. Fuller, of Burlington, Iowa, says: "Raised more than our apportionment yesterday. $250,000 by 1900 is sure.

—We hope that all our readers will read the Florida Letter this week. Bro. Blenus we know to be an impartial witness of what he relates and, in the midst of so many rumors about mismanagement in the military camps, what he says becomes of special interest.

—"The Conversion of Europe," by Wm. H. Matlock, in this paper, reflects the spirit of France and other European nations toward America before and after the Spanish war. The title itself is significant. The article is interesting.

—Rev. Howard H. Russell, Supt. Anti-Saloon League, Deleware, Ohio, has issued a circular outlining a plan for the enrollment of all who have taken or will take the pledge of total abstinance, and will work for the suppression of the liquor traffic. The plan has some good and commendable features—the closer unity of the hosts of the cause of temperance and the increase of those pledged against the saloon and the drink habit—but beyond this nothing definite is stated. No plan of action against the saloon proposed. However, to successfully enlist the friends of temperance in one army on the plan proposed means much in many ways and seems to us at present to be worthy of encouragement. Send to Dr. Russell for his circular and examine it for yourself.

—From a correspondent in Nebraska we learn that only $9,000 are now needed to save the buildings of Cotner University. We hope that being now so near landing, the remaining need will be supplied. Cotner University could be of great service to our brotherhood in the great Northwest if placed on a substantial financial basis.

—The Annual Catalogue of Christian University, Canton, Mo., with announcements for 1898-'9, outlines opportunities for an education worthy of the attention of any young man desiring to fit himself for greater usefulness in life. The fall term opens Sept. 6th.

—We publish in this paper a most deeply interesting article from Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D., superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., on "A Study of Living and Dying Nations." Our readers will, of course, have to make allowances for his use of the term "Sabbath," etc, but they will understand this from his view-point, and not allow that to prevent them from a careful reading of the entire article, as it contains so much that is worthy of prayerful consideration.

—D. L. Moody desires to have the work of the Army and Navy Christian Commission continued and still asks for offerings for this work. Send all contributions to him at East Northfield, Mass., and the same will be promptly acknowledged. Dr. Moody says that he "never felt so sorry for a lot of men as for these here in the hospitals," and relates a few of the many instances of comfort brought to sick and dying men through this agency. Surely this is a Christian work, and our patriotism and Christianity should be combined to support it. We hope that it will, indeed, become one of the permanent associated benefactors of the army and navy.

—"The Voice Extra," Vol. I., No. 4, a folder of sixteen pages, is devoted wholly to a description of the beer saloons in the army and their effects, which have become a blot upon our nation That these saloons have been an auxiliary to the scourge of fevers which invaded every camp is almost certain, to say nothing of the sickening stories of drunken fights which have found such frequency in the newspapers. Why these saloons have not been abolished by the administration after what has transpired in the camps, and the petitions which the Christian people of the land have made, and especially after General Miles' and General Shafter's pronounced opinions and orders against strong drink in the army, is a mystery; a mystery which has called forth a strong editorial in the Voice for Aug. 25, severely arraigning the War Department for what it claims to be a criminal neglect of duty. The army canteen as seen at Chickamauga and other camps, it claims, is run in defiance of Congress and disregard for army regulations and for local option laws. That the sale of alcoholic liquors in states or territories prohibiting the same by law is in violation of a Congressional act, June 30th, 1890, is clearly made out by the Voice, and the United States army, through certain of its officers, are charged with having violated the laws of Congress and army regulations by which they are governed. There is Christian, temperance and humane sentiment enough in this nation to correct these abuses if it could only be exerted, and if such negligence and violations of law and shameful results do not arouse it we fear that we have too highly exalted the true degree of our civilization.

—The Church Versus the Minnesota Issue is a new and vigorously edited temperance journal, published monthly, from Minneapolis, Minn., by the Anti-Saloon League. We are pleased at the way this journal hurls itself against the liquor traffic, and if it shall succeed in convincing the world that the Anti-Saloon League is not a compromise institution between absolute prohibition and political party privileges for the comfort of those who have political corns on their toes it will have demonstrated its full right to a place among the living forceful journals of the day.

—The Minnesota State Convention at Mankato, recently, passed a resolution endorsing and adopting Drake University at Des Moines, Ia., as its organ of education and commended the same to the patronage of all families in Minnesota having sons and daughters to educate. They also ask for a representation on the board of trustees of Drake University. A similar step was taken by South Dakota at its state meeting last June. This ought to add materially, morally and in other ways to the prosperity of Drake University. We understand also that $40,000 of the $50,000 needed for Drake University has been raised and Chancellor Craig says, "The rest will come." The outlook of this University for a large number of new students is said to be bright. The fall term begins Sept. 13th.

—It is time now to begin to talk up the General Convention at Chattanooga, October 13-21. Are all your pledges to the various missionary societies and boards, to report at that convention, paid? If not, this is the last month. Their books will be closed September 30. The churches of Chattanooga are hard at work, preparing to entertain the convention. One fare for the round trip has been secured over nearly all the railroads for those who will attend. The brethren everywhere are urged to be there for many cogent reasons. One or more delegates from each church, Sunday-school, Endeavor Society and C. W. B. M. will he expected. Tell your church about the time, place, and of its importance.

Health, Voice, Appetite and Strength Failed—Completely Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Last year my health failed entirely. My limbs were so weak that I could scarcely walk. I had no appetite and suffered with constipation. My voice failed me in the pulpit. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and very soon I saw a great improvement. In the winter I was attacked with the grip which left me weak and prostrated. I went back to my old friend, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which seems to be the thing for me." REV. C. S. BEAULIEU, pastor Christian church, Lowellville, Ohio. Remember,

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

—As many of our soldiers who volunteered to drive Spain out of Cuba were college and university students, the fortunate closing of the war and discharge of troops will enable many of them to resume their studies this fall. The need for this has been strongly urged by R. H. Jesse, president of the University of Missouri, and we trust will be heeded by all returning student-soldiers. The return of commandants of cadets is especially important that the military education of the colleges and universities enjoying these privileges be not impaired. President Jesse states that the new club house at Columbia, capable of seating four hundred men at one time, is completed and that in architectural beauty, light, heat, ventilation and comfort it is an honor to the state of Missouri.

—The July-August number of the American Home Missionary is devoted to the interests of negro education and evangelization. Particular space is given to the Louisville BibleSchool, the Southern Christian Institute, the work of Robt. Brooks in Alabama and to an address by Booker T. Washington. The history of this branch of our missionary work is given, together with the address of C. C. Smith, delivered at the Richmond convention. This excellent magazine of literature on this vital subject is valuable and worthy of the immediate and careful consideration of every Disciple of Christ. We hope that large numbers of this magazine will be procured for distribution by and in the churches and carefully read.

—The League for Social Service, incorporated in 1898, with headquarters at 287 Fourth Ave., New York City, has come into existence for educational purposes. It is strongly organized, with Josiah Strong for president, and proposes to push its work energetically. A bureau of information, lecture bureau, literary bureau and other departments have been established, and work will be directed toward the public conscience and toward legislative bodies. The leaflets on living, urgent topics and issues of the day are and will continue to be published for distribution at low rates. For sample leaflets, further information, etc., send to the "League for Social Service," United States Charities Building, Fourth Ave., 22nd St., New York City.

—The Disciples' Divinity House Circular gives a clear, brief statement of its plan, organization and work, which will be a matter of convenience for those desiring to become better informed about this particular school for Bible study and its relation to the University of Chicago.

—We are glad to note from the Missionary Voice that the Annuity Fund of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society is making considerable growth during the current missionary year. J. Coop, of England, has just turned over $9,690 to the Foreign Society on the Annuity plan. His brother, Frank Coop, had previously turned over $5,000 to this society on the same plan. The society has also received, recently, $15,000 from one friend, which is the largest personal gift ever received by the society. This money is to be used in providing homes for the missionaries and other needed buildings. The society pays interest on this money during the lifetime of the contributor, when it becomes the money of the society. The receipts of the Foreign Society already aggregate $117,324.03 for the present year. The most encouraging feature of this growth is that about one thousand churches have contributed to the work this year that did not the year before, and almost as many new Sunday-schools have been enlisted. It is only a question of time when all the churches and schools worthy of the name will be enlisted in world-wide evangelization.

—Last Sunday was Church Extension Day. If for any reason you failed to make an offering for Church Extension on that day, see to it that another Sunday in this month be set apart for that purpose. There is only one collection for Church Extension asked of each church per year, and this one should not be carelessly omitted. Send all collections for Church Extension to G. W. Muckley, 600 Waterworks Building, Kansas City, Mo., as soon as taken.

—The Missionary Intelligencer writes hopefully of the missionary outlook in foreign fields. The closing year, it says, has been a successful one in amount of funds raised at home and in the increased conversions abroad. With predjudices toward missionaries in foreign lands decreasing and the missionary spirit of the churches of Christ in home lands increasing we may well prophesy greater things for Christ in the future.

—The Western Passenger Association says to the Iowa secretary that, for the national conventions, a rate of one and one-third fare on the certificate plan will be granted to the eastern gates of their territory from Oct. 10th to 15th. But you must be at the borders of the Central and Southern Association Oct. 10th to 13th to get the one-fare rates.

—The Baptist News says:

"We are perfectly willing to speak of our religious neighbors always in such away as not to offend if practical. But we know a good many people for whom the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stands, that will take offence at being called "Disciples" almost as readily as they will at being called "Campbellites." Will the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST tell us what to do in a case like that?"

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST never advocated the propriety of calling any collective religious body by the term "Disciples." Such a term alone is too indefinite to hurt anybody's feelings. But if the Baptist News means "Disciples of Christ" the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is not aware of standing for any that object. There are some, we are aware, that object to writing the word Disciple with a big D. They prefer it thus: "disciples of Christ." But, however written, there is a vast difference between that phrase and the term "Campbellite." It is the relationship implied that makes "Campbellite" objectionable to us as a religious name, and this objection cannot obtain in the phrase "disciple of Christ," however written. We could not consistently plead for a restoration of Christ's authority in the church and at the same time permit ourselves to be called "Campbellites." If the Baptist News knows of any who do not like to be called Disciples of Christ let him try calling them "Christians," or some other Bible name.

At Keswick, where we stopped over Sunday, we had one pleasure that was not on the bills. One expects, as a matter of course, to enthuse over the beauties of Derwent Water, to admire the majestic symmetry of Skiddaw, and quote Southey at the Falls of Lodore. These are the advertised attractions of the place, and we found them all highly satisfactory. But the guidebooks do not tell you that in a quiet street of Keswick there is a sedate little boarding house, kept by a sedate lady for the benefit and patronage of other sedate persons, mostly past middle life. And they do not say what infinite amusement can be derived from these somber surroundings by two cheerful cyclists who endeavor to liven up the situation. It was a good study to watch the effect of the American joke upon these staid and sober Britons. First came a look of wild surprise, followed by one of indignation, as it became more clearly evident that a jest had been perpetrated. This in turn is succeeded by a shocked expression, which signifies that not only has a personal indignity been received, but the common social proprieties have been outraged. The third or fourth repetition of the offense brings a look of patient and chastened submission to the inevitable. Then, when all hope seemed gone, there comes the first token of sympathetic response. An unmistakable twinkle becomes visible in the corner of a hitherto sober eye, and after that it is only a matter of time until the sedate spinsters and the two elderly couples have forgotten to be sedate.

The Falls of Lodore have been extolled, perhaps unduly, by Southey, and have been the victim of gross and unmerited slander on the part of others who declare that there are more rocks than water. The fact is, the Falls of Lodore are an exceedingly variable quantity. After protracted dry weather they are a mere sputtering rill, but a single heavy rain transforms them into a foaming torrent, the water of which can be traced far out across the peaceful bosom of Derwent. Passing Lodore, we made a wide sweep to the west and south, crossing at Honister House one of the most picturesque passes in the district. In the western part of the Lake District there are practically no roads of any sort, and the mountain paths are of the roughest kind. To avoid this we made a wide detour west of the mountains and entered the lake country again at its southwest corner by Wast Water, a lake of utter solitude, hidden among high mountains which rise precipitously from its edge. We are now in the heart of the most rugged part of this region and amid scenery far wilder than that which we sssociate with the name of Wordsworth. Again we are confronted by a tract of mountains with no road. This time we decline the easier method of going around and, with wheels on our shoulders, start on the steep and stony trail up Sty Head Pass. It is nine miles over the fells to Langdale Pikes, where the road begins, and it took five hours of hard work to cover the distance. A party of pedestrians whom we met half way looked at us with the utmost astonishment, as if bringing a wheel into such a place savored of the black art. They were entirely satisfied and all token of their surprise vanished when they observed, by the style of our wheels and the accent of our speech, that we were Americans. The capacity for doing strange and unheard-of things seems to be one of the elements of Americanism, as viewed by most Englishmen. Just to show them that crossing the mountains with a bicycle was a mere bagatelle, I mounted and rode down the pony-track on the mountain side, until a friendly crag shut us from their view. It was rather harder on us than it was on the wheel, I think. At least, the Sterling bore it, as it has all the abuse to which it has been subjected on this trip, with remarkable good humor.

Brantwood, the home of John Ruskin, stands, as the home of Ruskin should, in a spot of peaceful and quiet beauty, on the shore of Lake Coniston. We did not see "the professor," as he is called in the neighborhood, but we had a talk with his nearest neighbor, who told us that Mr. Ruskin walks out every day and seems to be strong of body in spite of his eighty years. His mind, however, is so far lost that he recognizes no one except those who constantly attend upon him. There was a pathetic significance in the words when our informant told us of the things Mr. Ruskin used to do and say "when he was all right." Tennyson lived for a short time near Brantwood, but the place has no vital associations with the poet's life or work. Close by is the queer little town of Hawkshead, where Wordsworth went to school in his boyhood, and his name, carved in the desk by his own hand, is still exhibited.

Our last day in Lake-land may be considered typical of that district, as regards weather. First, it rained violently. Then it stopped long enough to lure us forth, and when we were well on the way toward Kirkstone Pass the rain came again, beating in our faces, both drenching and blinding us. We knew we were passing through magnificent scenery, for the guidebook said so, but we could no more see it than we could have seen through a snow bank or, for that matter, a savings bank, for we were in the cloud as well as in the rain. I have traveled some thousands of miles on passes, thanks to my connection with a newspaper, but I would rather pay full fare than travel again on a pass such as the Kirkstone Pass in wet weather. But, after a dozen miles of this, it cleared again and, as we rode out of the land of lakes, Ullswater was a blaze of glory and Helvellyn stood out clear against a bright western sky. We hurried at dusk across the border into Scotland, as many an eloping English couple has done in times past, and stopped at Gretna Green. This famous village never had more than a dozen houses in its palmiest days, and the only thriving industry which it ever possessed was that of marrying runaway lovers without a license. It is grievous to relate that this ancient industry has fallen into complete desuetude, owing to the operation of a cruel modern English law and the keen competition of Milwaukee in the same line of business. We have here another illustration of the invincibility of Western enterprise in the face of modern competition.

They say it always rains on the border of Scotland. Inasmuch as we slipped in under cover of darkness, we escaped for the time, but it caught us next morning. The middle of the morning found it still pouring, with no prospect of cessation. No one needs to be told now, since Ian Maclaren and J. M. Barrie have told us all, that one of the chief characteristics of the Scotch mind is a hatred of exaggeration, resulting in an habitual understatement of facts. Thus a Scotch mist is proverbially wetter than an English rain. On this same morning, with the weather as stated, we facetiously ask an old Scot if he does not think it may rain presently. He replies seriously, "Oh, ay, man. I canna say but that it maun be a bit weet afore the nicht." And so it was.

Looked at on the literary side, the Lowlands are the land of Burns and the Highlands are the land of Scott. A line from Glasgow to Edinburgh will serve as a rough boundary between the two. Coming through Dumfries, with its many memorials of Burns, to Ayr, the place of his birth and the scene of most of his poems, one cannot help contrasting the relation of Burns to these places with the relation of Shakespeare to Stratford-on-Avon. One feels awed to find himself in the place where Shakespeare was born. Somehow it does not seem that he ought ever to have had a birthplace. He, with his universal and impersonal genius, is the Melchisedek of literature—without beginning or end of days, and without obvious connection with any place or time. One is not likely to gain any new interest in Shakespeare's works or insight into them by visiting Stratford. With Burns it is different. You cannot know the genial lowlander until you have seen something of the places where he lived and where he found the inspiration and the materials for his poetry. The peasants of Ayrshire have a claim upon Burns such as the citizens of no town can ever have on Shakespeare. As a literary pilgrimage, therefore, we would say that a visit to Ayr is far more satisfying than a trip to Stratford.

There are various ways of looking at Scott's relation to that portion of the Highlands which he has immortalized. Sailing down Loch Katrine and fully under the spell of its wild and peculiar beauty, we fell into conversation with an officer on the little steamer, "Rob Roy." Scott was the theme and I was pleased with his apparently intelligent appreciation of the wizard of the North. At last, as we rounded a curve and the full beauty of Ellen's Isle broke upon us, while thoughts of the "Lady of the Lake" were seething in my brain, he came to the climax of his appreciation thus: "Yes, sir, Scott just made this country. Why, there are thousands of tourists who sail down the lake on this boat every year whom we could never have touched if it had not been for Scott's 'Lady of the Lake' and 'Rob Roy.'" In view of the fact that they charge three shillings and six pence (equal to eighty-four cents) for transporting a man and a bicycle six miles on Loch Katrine, it will be observed that this faithful employe's gratitude to Scott was not misplaced.

Loch Lomond is surely the king of all Highland lakes and the crown and climax of his majesty is the great Ben Lomond, which rises on the eastern shore. A magnificent road runs by the western edge on the opposite side of the lake. Nowhere, perhaps, will the cyclist find the ideal conditions for wheeling more perfectly realized. But if Loch Lomond is the king, Loch Katrine is the queen of the lochs, and the brightest jewel in her diadem is fair Ellen's Isle. Passing these renowned lakes and on through the Trossachs to Callander, we turn north into the less frequented but not less beautiful parts of the Highlands, and here we stop to spend Sunday at this microscopic village in the very heart of the Highlands, with great Ben Moore rising behind and bens of all sizes piled about in luxuriant profusion.

Honolulu Letter.

This is now the Far West. In fact, the Far West has finally "located" in these islands, never to change again. Moreover, henceforth these islands are to be reckoned as a part of "the home field;" for, before the message I am sending you can reach your readers, the Stars and Stripes will float over Hawaii for good and all. Does "the case being altered alter the case?" If one may judge from the many inquiries that come from the would-be settlers, the case is unquestionably in a state of being very much altered.

As to those Disciples of Christ who labor for the restoration of the faith once delivered to the saints, and who pray and work for unity among believers on the basis of unity with Christ, let us record a note at this epoch-making season. We may want it for reference in days to come.

For several years W. C. Weedon and wife, W. L. Hopper and wife and a few other Disciples prayed and pleaded and hoped that a church might be organized and sustained here. Their prayers were heard. August 5, 1894, T. D. Garvin began work in Harmony Hall, in this city. A church was formed with twelve charter members. During the past four years 140 additions have been made to the little band. Several have been baptized who could not take membership here. In November, 1895, the church then numbering thirty-nine, completed and occupied its beautiful chapel, which was paid for before the opening day. (There is still a debt on the lot.) In February, 1896, Bros. Romig and Harrell began a meeting that lasted six weeks. In September of the same year Bro. Garvin and wife returned to California on a year's vacation, during which time Bro. J. M. Monroe continued the work. In September, 1897, Bro. Garvin returned and rasumed the work, which is still carried forward. Mr. Desky, a prominent business man of the city, has given a lot which has been improved by Bro. Weedon. It is designed to erect a mission chapel thereon in the near future. Sister Alice F. Beard, of California, who has a coffee plan ation on Hawaii, in addition to liberal help given to the church in Honolulu, has built a chapel on her lot in Kona, Hawaii, where she is carrying on a Japanese mission with the assistance of Bro. T. Fukao, recently from Tokyo. The brethren here are anxious to enter upon a more vigorous work among the Japanese and to begin a mission among the Chinese. The attitude of the workers here towards other Hawaiian churches, and towards the brethren and churches and boards of the brotherhood in in the states, is ideal. They deserve and have and like to have the respect of those who know them. Wherein the assistance from the more favored brethren and churches comes short of their support they cheerfully make their living by such ways as Providence opens up for them. Though they are not under the appointment of any board they gladly receive through the boards, and from the boards and local societies any help that may come to them. If this state of things could continue, and if workers thus minded could be added to the number, and they could continue to have the good-will of the brotherhood, a phase of disunion that obtains in some places would be avoided. The workers for this field can be and will be increased spontaneously. Those who are willing to labor in self-denial, as did the pioneers of every previous "Far West" outpost, will come to this the last and fairest of them all. I suggest, therefore, if they can have the good-will of the brotherhood, as I have intimated, let offerings in aid of this work be sent (through any forwarding agency the reader may like to employ) to Bro. T. D. Garvin, Honolulu, H. I. He will keep faithful records of funds contributed, and make due reports of the work. His long and faithful service in the ministry entitles him to your confidence. Besides, he and his colaborers know what should be done much better than those who have no experience in the field.

Now is the time to help the work.

Yours faithfully, A SOJOURNER.

The Conversion of Europe.

Until now the inhabitants did not know what time had wrought. In the midst of peace a mighty empire had attained permanence and power, nor had it been founded by an emperor or sustained by an imperial force, booted and spurred. The impossible had been achieved. Liberty, equality and fraternity had been justified; while discouraging the spirit of militarism the science of war had not been forgotten; moral courage and patriotism had increased from decade to decade. The power and wish of the people had become absolute and invincible, willing and executing in its own name and under its own great seal, being alike its keeper. "We the people!"

In the eyes of Continental Europe such a government was, if not a fiasco, at least not to be feared. Above all, the political sages did not consider the opinion of the United States as having a feather's weight in the affairs of the Old World or of the great Orient. There was not a prophet among them who would have had the temerity to predict that that far-off republic, loving and serving only the dollar, would soon be in position to make its voice heard across the vast oceans which wash its coast lines and separate it toward the East from the civilized (?), toward the West from the heathen world. Europe was ignorant of America while professing knowledge. In all Europe, to be an American was, and still is, for the most part, synonymous with being either a farmer or at most a merchant. Chicagoan and pork-packer are current synomymns. Of the idealism of American life and American institutions, Europe was profoundly unconscious; the ignorance of the massses on this subject having no other source than a partisan press to draw from, could be likened only to a London fog. It is not yet three months ago that the writer heard a professor use America as an illustration of a land where patriotism did not exist in the European sense of the term. In America only a venal patriotism existed. That was in the lecture-room of a Swiss University. I quote a word from a morning paper:

"Before the war, so unfortunate for Spain, one imagined voluntarily in France [he might have said Europe] that America would be incapable of arming ships, equipping troops and organizing armies. We were accustomed to think that the Yankees were simply merchants, strangers to all conceptions of war, disdainful of glory and nearly entirely lacking in that extreme patriotism of which the old nations of Europe thought they had a monopoly."

Such being the current of opinion in France the press, in particular the conservative and royalistic papers, did not hesitate to encourage priest-bound Spain. When Martinez Campas was replaced by Gen. Weyler—the humantarian by the brute—the French press praised the Canovas ministry and eulogized Weyler. When the United States began to talk earnestly of war, the French press held out the hope of success to the Spaniards. They recalled the inequality of the fleets in emphasizing that it would necessarily be a war on the seas. All Europe was loud in the praise of Spanish discipline, Spanish fleets and Spanish strategy. They admitted the ultimate defeat of Spain while predicting the annihilation of American ships at the outbreak, not believing in the American navy. They even spoke of America as like China—big, but not great. But it was wish rather than conviction. "Declare war sooner than withdraw from an island which you discovered and civilized!" Such were the exclamations which encouraged Spain. To make themselves the more responsible for Spain's attitude they held out the hope of possible interference on the part of the "European Concert." Spain believed them in spite of the fiasco of last spring in Greece. To all this long-drawn eulogies on the chivalry of the Castilian race, and the patriotic duty of Spain to protect the inviolability of her territory against the insulting audacity of a race of merchants who, not loving their own country, could easily see how another could sell or barter a part of its possessions. Such a proposal was worthy of America. Spain was praised for having refused in former years the sordid proposals of a sordid race.

Spain decided haughtily in favor of war. We Americans, residing on the Continent, reading daily the unfavorable statistics as to the fleets of the belligerants, and sharing not the ignorance of our instructors, trembled for American sailors and cities, while believing in final victory. Imagine our rejoicing when the papers began to annouce the annihilation of a a whole Spanish flee before Cavite. At first they said it was a mere rumor, then it was doubtful, then probable, then it became possible and exaggerated, then—O welcome dispatch from Madrid!—it became certain.

The press reeled before the Spanish advices. An unheard-of General Dewey had committed an unheard-of act of daring and had gained an unheard of victory! Some editors were carried away for the instant with a feeling of impartiality; they even praised the American editor. But they soon saw through it all and declared the matter as a very one-sided affair. The real Spanish fleet was in the Antilles, or would be soon. Dewey became a mere butcher. His brutality would meet with summary vengeance when the Atlantic fleets should meet in Cuban waters. The pirates and would-be conquerors would receive a lesson as salutary as needed. They forgot soon the battle in disussing the Philippine question, and the audacity of beginning the war in the Pacific which Europeans had so carefully planned for Cuban waters.

The brilliant passage of Cervera across the Atlantic, the rapidity of his vessels, the safe arrival of his fleet, destined to become the second armada—all this was a proof of Spanish genius and American negligence. So they said.

One beautiful morning the wit of the Yankees informed Europe that Cervera was in a bottle, having succeeded in putting one ship after another through the neck. Americans were laughing at Spanish strategy. All the papers here began to say the Spaniards were in a bottle; the wiser heads began to see in this a possible fatality. The strategy of Cervera "fell," as they say on 'change, as Spanish papers had done. The military sense of Europe revived and discovered that it was the duty of a powerful fleet to search the enemy and give battle; not search the harbor, but the open sea. They advised him to flee by night. To his honor, be it said, he fled by day.

It was consternation which swept over the continent when the telegraph bureaus announced the annihilation of this second armada. A cry of, "Peace! peace!" went up from every newspaper office. Those who had counseled war now advised peace. Since that morning the press has ceased to talk of America in a disparaging way. Editors who went about a few days ago with editorials in their heads on the proclamation of a European Monroe Doctrine with Germany behind it, and the Continent behind Germany, are now writing on the new maritime power in the other hemisphere, the American peril, etc. The fall of Santiago, the successful expedition to Porto Rico, the constant arrival of troops at Manila, The annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, the certainty that America will have, at the very least, coaling stations off the coast of the Orient and be absolute dictator in the Antilles, has completed the awakening and conversion of arrogant Europe. Continental conceit has been dealt a severe blow. The papers, even the Figaro, of Paris, pronounces the humiliation of Spain as in part a humiliation of the Continent. Some editors have been studying geography anew and have discovered that the possessions of the united Anglo-Saxon race form a festoon of fortifications about the Continent and the Orient, that in the course of time the European and all the Asiatic races have been penned in by the greatest of maritime races, that disunited Europe, lacking in outlets to the sea, and in fleets is urrounded by the united English-speaking peoples, who have gradually taken posession of a large part of the earth's surface and all the seas. "On the North," they say, "we are bounded by the Frigid Zone, on the South, the East and the West by the no less frigid Anglo-Saxons."

The conversion of Europe has been complete. There is no danger of backsliding. The Continental powers are staring bewildered at the American navy, glorified and transfigured in victorious strife, heroic in attack, equally chivalrous toward a vanquised foe. They know to-day what they denied three months ago, that there are ships and good admirals, armies and brave generals, patriotic sailors and soldiers in the Western Hemisphere, and that the terms liberty, humanity and fraternity are more than idle words in the Republic of the United States. WM. H. MATLOCK.

The Future of the C. E.

It is evident that the attractiveness of the novelty connected with the movement has passed away, but great good has been accomplished and will continue to result from the effort put forth by the young in this valued department of religious service. Those who espoused the cause because they rush to any good work for the reason that it is new and thirst for changes have of course dropped out, but those who saw in it a door of entrance to great usefulness in contributing to the spiritual life of the church, are brought into closer sympathy by experience in service, and many others are attracted by the opportunity of giving direct help to the church by word and work.

Doubtless two reasons why some denominations have withdrawn and organized on lines of their own are that they may emphasize their peculiar doctrine more and that they may have more efficient denominational leadership. We as a people can accomplish all this by remaining in the society, and thus still hold ITS desirable features. The Bethany Reading Circle will give you ample training in "Our Plea." The leadership is now in the hands of one who, with his limitations, has shown what a great work he could accomplish were he placed in a situation where he could give himself wholly to this service. Bro. J. Z. Tyler is thoroughly familiar with the needs of our young people and should be persuaded to give his whole time to this cause, in which he has shown so much interest, even to the degree of jeopardizing his health from the necessity of carrying a pastorate at the same time. All interdenominational conventions will be of the nature of a rally, which is important, but whatever systematic work is planned and prosecuted must be done by each religious body for itself. Hence the importance of our national leader. Let us promote our leader to full time. The method of support will easily suggest itself.

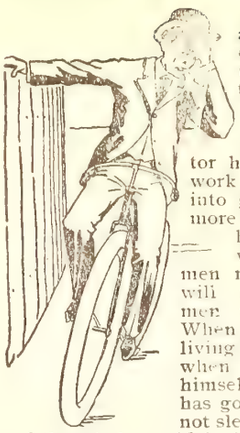
Western Montana.

In the western part of this state is the beautiful Bitter Root Valley, some ten or twelve miles in width and nearly a hundred miles in length. It is becoming far-famed for the mildness of its climate, the productiveness of its soil and the attractiveness of its mountains, which rise majestically on either side, casting a spell, as it were, over those who linger too long within the fertile vale.

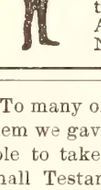


It is here that the great copper king and patron of the turf, Marcus Daily, has his summer residence and ranch of several thousand acres, besides owning a controlling interest in the business of Hamilton.

As I look out of my window I see passing a band of that fast-vanishing race, who but a few years ago roamed at will over the mountains and through the valley, calling it their own. But they have been removed to the reservation on the North, and are only permitted to pass through here on their hunting expeditions. Great as have been the changes in the past twenty-five years, we should look upon the next quarter of a century as calamitous if the changes are not greater. A mercenary spirit largely rules the West. A large per cent. of the people have come here seeking almost anything but the kingdom of God and his righteousness. But, thanks be unto God, this is not true of all. The leaven is working; the salt is purifying and preserving, and the light is shining. Notwithstanding the rampant godlessness which cares not for the meek and lowly spirit of the Master, and the "drink vulture" which hovers over the lovely garden-spot, seeking whom it may devour, yet I firmly believe these people are to be won to the higher life. And no unimportant factor in their salvation are the Disciples of Christ. They have had an organization since 1880, with four at the present time and a good prospect for organizing others. Last Sunday evening we closed our first "camp meeting convention," which was held at Florence. Although it came at a very busy season of the year, there was a goodly number in attendance, and an excellent interest was manifested throughout. The papers were of a high order, dealing with practical questions of church work. Bro. W. M. Jordan, our state secretary, was with us, delivering a number of most excellent addreses and encouraging us to go forward in greater things for the Master. Bro. W. D. Lear, our first located preacher in the valley, was with us on Lord's day, and spoke in the afternoon to the delight of all. To Bro. J. C. B. Stivers, pastor at Missoula, no small credit is due for the success of this meeting. He believes that Eastern ideas will work in the West, and he is busily engaged demonstrating the fact.

The churches of the valley report about fifty accessions in the last nine months; about half of these by primary obedience. The net gain is much smaller, as the population is still quite migratory. One hundred and twenty dollars were given by the children and Bible-schools for Foreign Missions. Florence Sunday-school raised twenty-eight dollars. There are but two ministers at present giving their whole time to the work — J. C. B. Stivers and Frederick Grim. We hope to receive sufficient appropriation so that we may increase our corps of workers during the coming year. There was one lady who made the good confession and was buried with her Lord in baptism, having come a distance of over twenty miles. A permanent organization was effected with Bro. Stivers as president; F. F. Grim, vice-president; Mary E. Doan, treasurer; and H. L. Carter, secretary. J. H. Cowan, L. D. Reynolds, Chas. Boone and Mrs. G. E. Sullenger were elected as additional members of the executive committee. Our state convention meets with Bro. McHargue at Bozeman, September 8 11. F. F. G.

Florida Letter.



Yesterday in company with my wife I visited, for the second time this week, the Second Divisional Military Hospital in the vicinity of this city. More than five hundred men are in this hospital confined by malarial or camp fever; some are at the point of death, but the majority convalescing. While we were visiting the various ward tents, sixty more sick ones were brought in on ambulances, and were awaiting places. It is about decided in the minds of those in charge of the hospitals here that the troops are suffering from a low and slow type of malarial camp fever. The city of Jacksonville is in a very healthy condition. Never perhaps in its history has there been so little sickness among the citizens. The change of living, of diet, of general customs and habits, with probably in many cases more or less intemperance and climatic changes, have largely been the causes of the illness among the "soldier boys." Owing to the specially peculiar and often too tardy methods pertaining to military matters, it has taken much time to bring order out of chaos in arranging for the comfort and attention necessarily due the sick in such large numbers. It is a scene not soon or easily forgotten, to see the long lines of cots, each cot containing a patient. As we passed slowly from one ward to another we did what we could in the way of words of cheer and sympathy. Occasionally could be see some watchful, anxious mother who had come a long journey to sit beside a dear boy and fan him through the long and tedious hours, leaving him at night only to return and take up the motherly vigil in the returning day. As we looked into the faces of these loving mothers, our hearts were at once uplifted to God, to spare to them their precious sons.

When you have a sick horse you do not hitch him up to a sulky and take him to the race track for a little healthful spin. You doctor him. You cannot work or recreate a man into good health any more than you can a horse. Bicycling will make healthy men more healthy; it will make unhealthy men more unhealthy. When a man has been living in too big a hurry, when he has worked himself out, when he has got so that he does not sleep or eat, or rest, and the whole world looks gloomy to him, it is time for him to take medicine. Then, when he is braced up a bit, it is time enough for him to take to the bicycle.

When a man's nerves have an edge on them, so that the least little disappointment rasps on his temper like a file, when his stomach and liver and nerves are deranged, and he is continually gloomy and melancholy, he should take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It makes a man as hungry as a fisherman and sees to it that all the vital elements of the food are absorbed into the blood. It braces up the liver and puts it to work in the right way. It drives all bilious impurities from the system. It fills flesh, nerves, brain cells, sinews and bones with the life-giving elements of rich, red, pure blood. It makes a man healthy and then a bicycle will make him strong. Medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing "just as good."

"Through your killful treatment I am once more a well man," writes J. N. Arnold, Esq., of Gaudy, Logan Co., Neb. "I suffered for years with constipation and torpidity of the liver, irritation of the prostate and inflammation of the bladder. I took six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets' and am permanently cured. You have been the means of saving my life."

A man or woman who neglects constipation suffers from slow poisoning Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. All medicine dealers sell them. No other pills are "just as good."

To many of those whose fever had about left them we gave such reading-matter as we were able to take with us. I carried a number of small Testaments, kindly given to me by a friend for the purpose, in my pocket. They gladly received these and said: "We will always keep them." Some of the tracts supplied for the sick, and coming to me for distribution from some sources, I have not been consciously able to use. How much I have the need of some healthy and scriptural, consistent religious literature for this work. My congregation has kindly loaned my pastorate calls to the "boys in blue," while they are with us. And instead of losing anything by this arrangement, our services are all the better attended. To-day I had the pleasure of dining with a number of the officers of the Ninth Illinois through the courtesy of Bros. Chaplain Boles and Lieutenant Day—and a few evenings since I enjoyed the same courtesy with the officers of the First Texas, preaching for the men of this regiment the same evening. We take this opportunity of thanking the many who have written to us so kindly in view of the limited efforts we have made to encourage and otherwise to aid socially and spiritually the boys who have been in camp "Cuba Libre." We have wished many times that it had been in our power to ameliorate the conditions, and more materially assist those far from the comforts and surroundings of home. If we were in the business we think we could easily find room for much complaint and justifiable criticism of much that has transpired through inadequate preparation and incompetency in performance in some of the military camps of the present campaign. There have been some extremely bitter experiences, and dear lessons taught. Political pulls and partisanship should cut no figure where the lives of thousands of the truest and bravest are at stake. This war has taught the average American citizen many a lesson other than those suggested by the victories of Dewew, Sampson and Schley.

Ontario Christian Colony Notes.

A. M. Sweany, of Cottage Grove, Oregon, with his two grown sons, one of them married, arrived last May. Brother S. is about seventy years of age, and because he killed a bear from his front door and did not run, Bro. Moore, of Rushylvainia, Indiana, said: "He is the hero of Burriss township." Brother Geo. W. Loman calls him "the noblest Roman of them all."

One time, shortly after Brother Sweany arrived, he became discouraged and thought about going back. When the money arrived he had changed his notion, and asked for two more quarter sections of land. He has sent for his family and in a short time all his earthly interests will be in the colony. He and his sons will own five quarter sections of this choice land. Brother S. delivered the first sermon in the colony, and is therefore the pioneer preacher.

This township was surveyed and donated to the Christian Colony by the Ontario Government, and they have spent $2,000 constructing us a road into the town site of Christiana. Forty acres have been plotted for this town. Brother Geo. W. Fullerton, of Pictu, Nova Scotia, Canada, after visiting the colony, locating a claim and a building site in the town, wrote: "You have started a great work for the Lord, and I hope we will keep that in mind as we work together to build up a community whose influence for righteousness will be felt over the known world, and that we will not go forward in our own strength alone, but look to Him who is able to make the work an abiding success and blessing. I have every faith in the colony, for everything is there to make it a great country."

Brother Geo. W. Loman, who came from the Indian Nation, a prime man, writes: "I have an interesting little Sunday-school on my hands at the schoolhouse here." Here is a new call to the brotherhood. Here is another mission field, the first Sunday-school organized and managed by a Disciple in a radius of five hundred miles on the Ontario side of Rainy River. He asks, "Can't some philanthropic brother or sister send enough literature to supply a school of about thirty members for the next quarter? After that we will be self-sustaining." Address this mission at Big Fork, Ont.

This is the opening up of a work long desired. We have had preaching at Port Arthur, Rat Portage, Fort Frances, Emo and Christiana, and probably other points. The latter part of next month we will hold our first annual meeting. It will be necessary to hold this meeting under the shade of the trees and to mingle our voices with the birds, for we have no house of worship yet except the blue sky.

Brother J. P. Martindale, of Greeley, Iowa, wrote: "I have thought to write to you since coming home, but have been very busy. I was well satisfied with the colony and its prospects. The outlook is encouraging."

Brother Green Norris, who came from Sterling, Ill., wrote me from the colony last week: "I am well pleased with the country. The longer I stay the better I like it. The boys are all in good spirits." Bro. Norris is the son-in-law of Brother John O'Hare, of Sterling, Ill.

Sister McGill, near London, Ont., wrote me about a brother. She said: "We have a brother here who has lost all; has a large family; no better man living; have sent him to you." He came to the colony and introduced himself to me. I at once assigned him one hundred and sixty acres of land. Three months afterwards I asked him how he liked the country and how he was getting along, and he replied: "I have been at work every day and am satisfied. I have a fine tract of land." Such men, separated from their families and thus working, deserve success. These men will succeed.

One brother came and when he landed he did not have enough money to purchase his supper and night's lodging. I paid his bill at the hotel, and before the sun went down the next day he owned 160 acres of land joining his brother's and had a good job of work at $1.00 per day and board.

Brother M. Franklin Smotz, of Augusta, Ohio, writes: "Have spent ten years in colonization mission work in the jungles of India. My experience in pioneering has not been small. I have been reading your letters in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the Christian Standard from Ontario, and from all that I can gather it is one of the best prospects for a poor man of which I know at this time in North America."

Brother J. L. Sharitt, of Knoxville, Iowa, after spending two weeks in the colony, selecting a beautiful claim and clearing a location for a house, returned home thoroughly satisfied that the country was all I had represented it to be. He writes: "Thirteen men have started from here with teams to drive through, and probably twenty-five will come through at the time of the excursion."

I believe in combining the two great enterprises, colonization and evangelization. I am glad to be known as the Christian Colony agent. It is a good work for humanity. Not every man that undertakes to accomplish an object succeeds. Not every man that comes to the colony is going to be satisfied. Many of these very men have been failures, and much of this refuse material will slip into our colony. These men were failures when they came; when they go away they will be failures, and will always fail in everything they undertake. But these failures will not deter the honest homeseeker. Every great enterprise started for the betterment, for the uplifting of humanity was opposed. Christ did not escape the opposer in his divine work. Shall frail mortals escape? Opposition does not affect the validity of its existence. We shall continue to move forward. That the governments have confidence in the work I prove by what I am able to offer good, honest homeseekers.

I am giving up my beautiful home on the banks of Lake Ontario, forty-five miles east of Toronto, and have arranged to make my headquarters at Port Arthur, Ont. Port Arthur is located at the head of navigation over the great lakes, the gateway to the ocean. We are also on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and at the point where the new Ontario and Rainy River Railway begins. This road is now under construction. The governments have given a subsidy of $9,500 per mile, and the road is to be completed in two years. Address all communications to Port Arthur, Ont.

Sulphume, brings home to our private bathrooms the same medicinal virtues for rheumatism, kidney troubles, skin and blood disorders, as are found at hot sulphur springs. Why costly excursions to such places, not to mention the risky surroundings, moral as well as physical, for which these "resorts" are now distinguished? Better use Sulphume and have hot springs at home. Letters of commendation are inundating the Sulphume Co., Chicago.

A Profitable Visit.

E. C. Browning, the corresponding secretary of our state, was with us from Aug. 12 to Aug. 21. His labors resulted in great good to the Colony church by uniting and strengthening the brethren. Six were added by confession and baptism and seven were added otherwise; the Sunday-school took on new life and the church was enabled to employ A. R. Wallace to preach one half-time the coming year.

Bro. Browning went from here to spend a few days at Ione, Freeman and Booth, where an effort will be made to unite and build up the cause of the Master. He is doing a great work in the weak and destitute fields.

Will the brethren who contribute to his support accept of our thanks for the blessings they have conferred on us? God will continue to bless the labors of his faithful followers.

HE LOST THE SENSE OF FEELING.

SPILLVILLE, IOWA, Jan. 7th, 1896.

For three years I had suffered with severe pains in my leg, until finally I lost all sense of feeling in it. It was so numb that I felt no pain whatever when the doctors performed an operation on it and pierced the flesh with their needles. The treatment which I received from the physicians, some of whom were highly spoken of in their profession, was of no benefit to me. Finally my attention was called to Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer and Oleum Liniment. I commenced using these remedies, and after using five bottles of each I had perfect control of my limb, but not only that—I regained my former health. I had also suffered much with indigestion. I recommend these preparations to all sufferers.

JOHN SOBOLIK.

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer and Oleum Liniment have puzzled many by their peculiar efficacy in the treatment of ailments which have even baffeled the skill of physicians. These remedies cannot be obtained in drug-stores, but of the proprietor direct, or of local agents. If there are none in your neighborhood, write to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 So. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

If you suffer from sores, boils, pimples, or if your nerves are weak and your system run down, you should take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills. Mailed for 25 cents by C. I. Hood & Co,, Lowell, Mass.

The King of the Caroline Islands.

These islands, forming an important Pacific groupe which extends for 2,500 miles, are familiar as the scenes of American missionary work for more than forty years.

Most of the islands are well wooded and fertile, and have the wet and dry season common to a tropical region. The inhabitants, who bear evident traces to Malay, Papuan, and Samoan blood, speak various tribal dialects. They have strongly built bodies of a dark copper color, and are gentle and amiable. Until 1889, when they were expelled by Spain, American missionaries were doing much toward the civilization of the natives.

At the close of a recent war with Spain, the King of Ou (Caroline Islands) came to pay homage to the Spanish government at Manila. As the best means of advancing and establishing a condition of things that would prevent all future outbreaks, the King was introduced to the "great civilizer," the Singer Sewing Machine, and a reproduction of his photograph, seated at the machine, with his Secretary of State standing beside him, is shone on another page. The original photograph can be seen any day at the office of The Singer Manufacturing Co., 149 Broadway, New York City.

A Circuit of the Globe.

This excellent missionary production is being pushed during the summer months through the various C. W. B. M. Auxiliary Societies of the brotherhood. Our sisters are making this the open door through which to replenish the overdrawn Treasury of the National C. W. B. M. If your Auxiliary has not yet received the information in reference to the plan, the terms and the excellent opportunity offered for raising a nice sum of money, write to the CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., 1522 Locust St., St. Louis.

Notes and News.

The annual meeting of Wayne County, Ind., held at Jacksonsburg, Aug. 27th and 28th, was large and enthusiastic. Rev. Jno. T. Brown, of Louisville, Ky., and Rev. Robt. Hall, of Indianapolis, Ind., made excellent addresses. Officers elected for next year are: president, T. A. Hall; vice-president, J. T. Brown; secretary, Roy L. Brown; treasurer, J. S. Harris.

The Eureka College Aid Association, organized in March, 1897, has become state-wide. This society is composed of women, and characteristic-like is doing a good work for the college in the way of securing students and money. This society is introducing the college to the state in person and by the use of suitable literature. The membership of the society now numbers three hundred and fifty members, about one hundred of which belong to the local society. These 350 have subscribed shares amounting to $2,500. Of this $1,173 have already been paid in, besides $127 additional, raised by entertainments given by the local society. Miss Anna Hale, the well-known Sunday-school evangelist, is the field secretary of this association, which bespeaks for her a hearty reception on behalf of Eureka College throughout the state.

From a report of the Boone County (Mo.) Co-operation Meeting, held at Red Top, Aug. 10-12, in the Centralia Courier, it is evident that it was a fine convention. About fifteen churches reported. Among the preachers present who delivered vigorous addresses and sermons, were Sec. Davis, Sec. Abbott, J. C. Hall, G. A. Hoffmann, W. S. St. Clair, J. A. Berry, J. R. Linville, C. H. Winders and, we suspect, H. A. Denton, of Centralia, and others.

These are days when patriotic sentiment has become pregnant with action. Let us not forget that the cause of Church Extension is a patriotic one, inasmuch as it contributes to an intelligent and Christian citizenship. I guarantee our apportionment.

The Twin City Churches.

The two Christian Churches in the "Twin Cities," North and South Tonawanda, N. Y., have prospered greatly in the last several years. The two churches now number over 1,000 members, being about one-eighteenth of the whole population of the two places. Truly, the Lord has greatly blessed the preaching of his truth here. "Jesus and the resurrection," Paul's theme at Athens, will always, when faithfully preached. E.

Tipton County Meeting.

The county meeting of churches in Tipton county, Ind., Aug. 28th, was a great success. It was the first county co-operation meeting. Bro. L. E. Brown, of Frankfort, Ind., did the preaching. His sermons were very strong. People were charmed with the speaker and his discourses. Many not members of the Christian Churches said they did not know there was a man of such eloquence and pulpit ability among us. We feel that these meetings will do great good. E. A. COLE.

Regrets.

It is with regret, indeed, that I note in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Bro. A. W. Conner's characterization of one of my (incomplete) statements, in a previous CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST query regarding his paper, the Boy's Friend, and the secrety society of which it is the organ; regret that the query was so incautiously framed as to furnish my brother the occasion for classing me with prevaricators; regret instead of so phrasing the query as merly to express an opinion (my actual intent) I allowed myself to make an apparently positive assertion—for I should have added "as it seems to me;" regret most of all that the cause we all love should have been compromised to an extent by reason of acrimonious repartee between brethren.

Those Reading Courses.

Permit me to say, in answer to numerous inquiries, that the three handbooks for the second year of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses will be ready for delivery before the close of September; that the price, to members, will be twenty-five cents a copy; to others thirty-five cents, or the three for one dollar. Those who have not yet taken the first year should begin with the handbooks prepared for that; the price is the same as for the handbooks for the second year. Thirty-five cents pays for an annual membership, and for one year's subscription to the Bethany C. E. Bulletin.

J. Z. TYLER.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 1, 1898.

Notes from Eastern Kentucky.

"The hit hound howls." I did not expect that my tracts would prove palatable to Mormon Elders. To weaken their force some are howling that my "quotations are not correct," etc. I never write or say anything that I can not prove or take back. Hence, if some representative Mormon will point out any mistake it will be corrected. I predict that no representative Mormon will undertake the job.

The Mormons are circulating a very subtle tract, compiled from a work called "Mr. Durant, of Salt Lake City." I will reply to it as soon as I finish the work I now have on hand. I would like a copy of every leaflet, tract or pamphlet they are using in the field. They must be met on every point of attack.

The C. W. B. M., of Danville, Ind., sent in five dollars to aid my work. It was needed and the gift was appreciated. With it came the statement, "We are glad to help you this much and only wish that we could do more, and pray that your appeal may touch the hearts of many others."

To which we say, "Amen! and amen!" for the magnitude of this work, battling Mormonism, almost checks our efforts as we fully front it. But God is on our side and we are on the side of God in this fight, and victory will rest on the banners of truth.

Foes of Mormonism should use the county papers as much as they can. Clip everything you see that will aid in exposing the fraud and put it in your county paper. I offer my tracts No. 1 and 2 for this purpose, though one of them is copyrighted. Also any item in my paragraphs. I am trying to keep alive anti-Mormonism columns in several leading weeklies. If all papers would take hold we would soon "blockade" the efforts of the 1,700 Mormon Elders now in the field proselyting.

Received the following from a good brother who is evangelizing. How many of our readers can guess what state he is in? Some of you try it. He says:

I find the situation very much the same as in the mountains of ————. Where we have congregations in the country they are poor people and think a preacher ought to support himself and preach for nothing. Every man almost in a congregation here as in ———— who can talk some publicly, has a call to preach the gospel and will work on his farm and preach to the brethren on Lord's day once or twice a month for $25 or $50 per year. At the end of the year he may receive the half of it. I know one congregation of 75 or 80 members who engage a preacher once a month for one year. At the close they had paid him $11 of the $25 promised. Such a spirit will continually produce death in our congregations.

A remedy for this state of affairs is worthy the efforts of our best minds.

Received a letter from an old brother in Ohio who stopped two nights in the "Jo Smith Inn," at Nauvoo, Ill. He says Emma Smith, Smith's widow, told him that "Brigham Young introduced polygamy after he got into the wilderness." He says Smith's widow, known in Mormondom as the "Elect Lady," had "spare features, was fairly educated, fairly good looking, black eyes, but had a ghostly phiz like all persons who believe in ghosts and hob goblins." R. B. NEAL.

Help for the Hair is what a great many men and women are looking for; help against approaching baldness; help against whitening locks; help to restore the lost gloss to the hair; help against fading tresses; help for the scalp attacked by dandruff. AYER'S HAIR VIGOR offers just such help. It restores gray or faded hair to its original color, gives it length, thickness and gloss, and removes dandruff.

"My hair was rough and broken and began to fall out. The use of but one bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR both checked the falling out and rendered my hair smooth, glossy and in splendid condition. It is the finest of dressings."—MRS. F. L. SMITH, Silver Creek, Miss.

"Some years ago my hair began to fall out and I became quite bald. By advice I tried and very soon my hair ceased to fall out and a new and vigorous growth made its appearance. My hair is now abundant and glossy."—THOS. DUNN, Rockville Wis.

California State Convention.

The California state meeting is a thing of the past, but the pleasant memories of that convocation of Christians by the sea will live on. The attendance was fully up to any former year, and the surprise was constant that there were so many present this dry year.

Reports showed that a number of preachers had sought the green pastures East of the Rockies, and left their flocks to hunt dry stubble. They will expect to be called back when it rains and the grass starts. They will then return for their health.

We have many others who are feeding their flocks and living with them, sharing their misfortunes, and "streakings of the morning light" lead them on, and the cause is progressing.

The various departments of church work filled two weeks full of business. The Preachers' Institute, C. W. B. M., State Mission work, Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Days showed that California has workers for the greatest cause in the world.

Bro. J. H. Hughes proved himself to be a convention president of the first order. He was also placed at the head of the State Board.

The presence of Bro. A. McLean, the great around-the-world missionary man, was an nspiration to the convention on world-wide nissions, the only cry being that his stay was oo short.

Besides every one was pleased to see Bro. Ben Smith, the Home Mission man. The nformation on our home work will prepare us or better work when the rain comes, and then ve want these brethren to return.

There was much disappointment because of he absence of the Editor-in-Chief of the Pacific Christian. The people wanted to see he new man.

Bro. Berry and daughter are all right, every one knows. And Bro. Berry kept the train running between the Pacific Christian office and Santa Cruz. He hardly took time to plunge into the surf.

The convention was filled with disappointment and regret because of the absence of Bro. Gardner because of serious illnes, and the absence of Prof. Jefferson because of the affliction of his blessed companion.

A plan was set afloat to secure by lease or purchase an additional tract of land for the benefit of the convention.

If enthusiasm and good cheer is a symbol of success in a conflict, you may expect great work to be done for the Lord in 1898.

Our Baptist brethren met at their park, Twin Lakes-by-the-Sea, at the same time, about three miles distant. Several of our brethren, authority of the convention, "did to them a wooing go." Bro. McHatton told them in their council chamber that the bridegroom woos and gives his name to the bride when wed. The Baptist brethren received the brethren with delight, and sent a committee with Christian greetings, which in return were warmly greeted with a reception that made them feel, as well as say, that there is no need of us living in different houses.

Through the indefatigable labors of Bro. McHatton a new church building is nearing completion in the city of Santa Cruz, free from debt.

Our C. W. B. M. enjoyed the visit of Sister Persis Christian more than I am able to tell. Her words of cheer for the sisters' work helped them on to more earnest plans of enlargement.

J. DURHAM.

A Few Points From Omaha.

Not many moons ago there was held in our city a great convention of very zealous religious people who, because they could not take the management of the great Trans-Mississippi Exposition into their hands, and compel them to order it to their liking, passed a strong resolution promising with voice and pen to fight the institution, and thus prevent all they possibly could from attending it. The writer does not agree with this people; their resolution savors too much of the spirit of Rome. From his point of view it was an unchristian resolution and the carrying out of the spirit of it by others as purely acts of unrighteousness.

Would Abraham of old do so?

"And Abraham drew near and said, wilt thou destroy [condemn] the righteous with the wicked? And God answered, I will not destroy [condemn] it for ten's sake."

The writer would not intimate that the great Exposition in any sense is related to ancient Sodom; he uses this figure to give full force to their position and thus show the other side. Do you know any Christian minister or worker, of any church, who would not visit New York City or Chicago, because these cities legalize evil? Do you know any zealous, intelligent Christian, who if opportunity to visit Jerusalem presented itself would fold his arms and say, "If the Turks don't materially change things over there I shall not only remain away myself, but will keep every one away I can?" Such talk and such a position would be extremly foolish, and all Christians would say so; yet this is the attitude of those who refuse for like reasons to attend the Exposition. Is it not a false position? The writer thinks it is. He does not excuse the evil; he recognizes it, not only here, but everywhere. To close the eyes to all the good and open them to all the evil is surely not the Christian way. Christians should search out the good and find it, notwithstanding the evil. It is the spirit of evil that directs pure hearts to see only the mistakes and magnify them, only the sins and dwell upon them. The Christ-spirit grasps the good, and "thinketh no evil."

"Alas for the rarity of Christian charity under the sun!"

Why not treat the great Trans-Mississippi Exposition as it justly deserves—see and profit by all the good and pass by all the evil?

Just this word more: It is said by those competent to judge that the Exposition is second to none in quality and only to the World's Fair in size. As President Zollars put, it: "It is the World's Fair all over again, not so immense, but with some points of improvement." The fireworks he regards as the finest he ever saw.

Brethren, the Trans-Mississippi Exposition at night is beautiful as a dream of glory. To view the government display alone is worth the expense of a long journey and one week of time to properly see it.

I believe the Exposition at Omaha the most glorious sight under the sun to-day, and those who miss seeing it will go through life just that much behind the procession.

This much in the name of righteousness and in defense of our city and state.

Homes in Arkansas.

Many inquiries are made by persons North, South, East and West concerning homes in Arkansas.

In general terms it may be safely said that the state furnishes extraordinary inducements to homeseekers. This is true in almost every part of the state. The present paper, however, will be devoted to that part of Scott county brought into notice as the "Streator Colony," and contiguous country.

1. The land is not first-class; that is, it will not produce as much corn per acre as the noted corn belt of Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska or Kansas; will not produce as much wheat as the noted wheat districts, nor as much cotton as the Arkansas and White River bottom lands.

2. Improved lands that are now obtainable at from three to ten dollars per acre, cultivated in corn, will yield as much profit when either sold or fed as an Illinois farm. Twenty-five bushels here will sell for as much as fifty there, and in the judgment of the writer, if discreetly fed, will have a farther advantage. It ought to be principally a stock country.

3. The yield of the staple crops, as nearly as I can ascertain, for the present year, is about as follows: Wheat, eight to fifteen bushels per acre; last year a little better. The crop of corn now in the field, from ten to forty bushels per acre. Oats good. Peas, the great boon to the Southern farmer, grow well. Sorghum, both for syrup and as a forage or hay crop, does well. Some farmers raise the ribon or Southern cane for syrup. All kinds of garden vegetables seem to be in their element. Irish potatoes and sweet potatoes do well, especially the latter.

In the above estimates care has been taken not to overstate anything. Fruits I do not think have been as thoroughly tested as desirable. Peaches thrive, and there is but little doubt that apples will do well on the mountains and ridges, while it is well adapted to grape culture.

4. The immediate section of the country known as the Colony is a succession of ridges and valleys, terminating in the Potean Valley, in which is situated Waldron, the county-seat of Scott county. The valleys are from forty to to eighty rods in width, with a trend almost due west—the main Potean Valley in the direction of Waldron, widening out into a beautiful country. The main roads down these valleys are excellent. The ridges are broken at intervals of several miles by cross-valleys, thus connecting the neighborhoods by easy communication. The ridges are generally steep and rocky, but covered with an excellent growth of pine and other trees valuable for lumber.

5. Surroundings. A good roller mill, saw and planing mills are in operation at Green Ridge, and doing a good business. Wheat is brought to this mill for many miles around. They are increasing their facilities for grinding, being at present very much crowded, though running night and day. This mill is situated on the main road, four or five miles from the extreme eastern limit of the settlement, about five miles from Waldron, toward which are to be found excellent farms. One of the best schoolhouses in the county is located at Green Ridge. Several families, through correspondence with Bro. Streator, have settled in the valleys east of the mill, and some on the uplands; all, as far as I could ascertain, well pleased with their investments. These are generally members of the Christian Church, and are enterprising and intelligent people. They are from various states, from every point of the compass.

Seldom have I seen more well-informed people brought together in a congregation of the size of that at Cardiff. They have not a house of worship, but will build soon. The church at present meets in the Lone Star Schoolhouse. Bro. A. R. Wallace is employed to preach for them. They have not much means. They came as "homeseekers." Any brethren or other good citizens will be welcomed among them and by the older citizens of the community.

The writer was much better pleased with the country and with the general outlook than he expected to be. This will be a happy and prosperous neighborhood. Brethren can well afford to investigate this matter of cheap homes, where they will not be cut off from church privileges.

6. Brother Streator asked me to present the "dark side." The only serious draw back is want of railway transportation. The nearest railway station at present is about twenty-eight miles. Waldron is a good business place, twenty-two miles from the railroad. There is but little doubt that a road will be built through the county at no distant day.

On the Petit Jean River, twelve miles from the railroad, is another locality in which fine lands can be bought very cheap. Much of the land is better than that referred to above, but it is doubtful whether it is as healthful.

Brother Streator (present address Cardiff, Scott county,) can give you more information about the location of lands, prices, etc., in two hours than you can learn by traveling around in two weeks. He will save you more than three times what his little commission will cost, if you buy.

A suggestion to preachers: A preacher has, of course, a right with all others to a cheap home if he can secure it, but if you are getting from forty to seventy-five dollars per month where you are, don't imagine that you can come where land can be bought for five dollars per acre, or government land can be entered, live on your claim and receive the same wages. You will be disappointed. Three good preachers are already members of the little church of forty-two at Cardiff.

It is my conviction that many homeless persons could improve their situation decidedly by coming here. From $300 to $1,000 will situate one very comfortably.

Homesteads can be taken where some good land can be obtained in small fields. Other places probably offer as good opportunities as Scott County, if there were some one to hunt them out but, considering church privileges, this at present would be my choice. If the reader thinks of investigating the matter, write Brother Streator and come or send some one on whose judgment you can rely. He will take pleasure in showing you land for sale or homesteads. Come not as Northern men or Southern men, not as Eastern men or Western men, but as citizens of the kingdom of heaven and of our common country, to make Arkansas your home and help build up the church and society.

The General Convention.

The most important and interesting event in the work of the Disciples of Christ that will occur in the near future will be the General Convention, which will meet in Chattanooga in October. Every individual should esteem it a sacred duty either to go or to send. This is especially true of those who live in the South and the Southwest. We should show our appreciation of the presence of the convention in our midst by attending in large numbers. Every department of the work should be represented. Churches, Sunday-schools, Endeavor Societies and auxiliaries to the C. W. B. M. should send large delegations. Make preparation at once to attend this great assembly of the saints.

"What we would do
We should do when we would,
For this would changeth."

Great events are born of travail of soul. There are indications that there will be both a new Protestantism and a new Declaration of Independence for the new century. Men of earnest minds are feeling after, if haply they may find, a better way. The lifting up of broader horizons means a larger America. The Christian enterprise of which we are exponents is more American in its genesis, development and animus than any other. In this land, so providentially guided, who knoweth whether we have come to the fore for such a time as this? Blessed are the eyes that see what we see in the open doors of opportunity and the new spheres of influence. Let the convention at Chattanooga be a vast host of representative men and women, who will devise and execute liberal things for our God. May it be our supreme ambition to give to the nation a Christianity that will Christianize, and to the world a civilization that will civilize.

The Foreign Society has recently received $15,000 from one friend on the Annuity plan. This is the largest personal offering ever before received. This friend appreciates the importance of the work. The executive committee will now be able to furnish a number of buildings that have been needed on the mission fields for a long time. Homes, chapels, hospitals and school buildings must be furnished if the work is successful.

The Foreign Society has been compelled to pay exorbitant rents for inferior buildings which are not suited to the purposes of its missions. The money received on the Annuity plan will be invested in buildings at once, and the amount paid annuitants will be charged to the various missions instead of so much rent. This will insure—

1. A saving to the missions. The rents paid amount to much more than the money at a low rate of interest invested in buildings.

2. Better homes for the missionaries, and better chapels, school buildings, etc.

3. It will insure the people among whom a mission is planted that the work is to be permanent.

4. And at the death of the annuitants the society is free from further financial obligations.

Money is received in amounts of $100 or more, and the annuitant is paid interest semi-annually until death. This plan has the following advantages for the annuitant:

1. There is no care about investing the money.

2. There are no taxes to be paid.

3. There is no interest or rents to be collected.

4. The annuity is certain, and will be paid promptly semi-annually.

5. At death there is no danger of the money being diverted from the purse of the donor.

We have received $38,390 on this plan already. Others are considering it.

The Foreign Field.

INDIA: Dr. C. S. Durand, who spent seven years in India, has informed the society that, owing to the condition of Mrs. Durand's health, he will not be able to return to the field. He wishes to be in nominal connection with the society at least as long as he lives. Dr. Mary McGavran writes that the boys at Demoh are in good health; only five or six a day need any treatment. Mrs. Rosine Miller Crisp takes charge of the work at Mungeli in the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon. Mrs. Crisp is an experienced missionary.

JAPAN: Miss Kate Johnson and Miss Bertha Clawson have recently made a trip into the interior. They found the people eager to listen to the gospel. By all accounts the Japanese are more willing to listen to the truth than they have been for some years. M. B. Madden, speaking of the new home, says: "It is a great blessing. It is not to be estimated in dollars and cents, but in added efficiency, power and influence in the work and better health in both body and mind. One church in Japan has decided to co-operate with our people. The advisory committee did not invite this church, but heartily welcomed it upon learning its desire and purpose." E. S. Stevens writes that he recently visited Innai and held a five days' meeting. He had a good hearing. One man signified that he was ready for baptism. Mr. Stevens adds, "The inquiry after Christianity is now reviving." F. H. Marshall reports that in the last year 125 souls have been added to the kingdom. God has kept the missionaries and native helpers in perfect peace and unity. This is the brightest page in the history of our mission. The future is full of hope. Mrs. Marshall expects to return to Japan in December.

CHINA: James Ware writes that the tutor and confidential adviser of the emperor has been dismissed from office because he sought to discourage the emperor from reading Western books. This man was the second man in the empire in power. His dismissal has caused great excitement throughout the empire and has done more to wake up the officials than the war with Japan. Not only has this man been dismissed, but the emperor has abolished by imperial edict the old and worthless system of examination for office, substituting Western learning for the classical books. Most of the new text-books have been prepared by missionaries. A. F. H. Saw, in his last letter, writes of a visit to Luhoh. The mayor issued a number of proclamations making favorable mention of the mission and calling upon the people to treat the missionaries kindly. Mr. Saw called to see the mayor. He was received very cordially by him. The next day the mayor returned the call. He showed acquaintance with Christian writings and with the geography of the world. This man comes from the most anti-foreign province in the empire.

TURKEY: G. N. Shishmanian and his family have returned to Constantinople. Dr. Kevorkian writes that he is constantly being urged by brethren in different parts of Asia Minor to visit them. When a letter does not bring him they send a man after him. The harvest truly is plenteous; the laborers are few. John Johnson writes of Smyrna that there is a great work to be done, but it is beset with great difficulties. He needs a whole-hearted helper and some machinery. He needs a school and a relief fund. Many of the people are very poor. Their mission and the national churches undertake to support their own poor. Many look to him for help, but his own funds are limited and he is not able to do as much as he would like to do.

The Religious World.

The annual convention of the Missouri Sunday-school Union was held at Carthage last week. The attendance was large, the addresses interesting and the report reasonably encouraging. Out of twenty-seven counties seventeen reported good success. The treasurer's report, however, was not so encouraging, as the offerings for the entire state only amounted to $3,-432,.29. One of the special features recommended by the financial committee was that every county be thoroughly canvassed within thirty days for funds. Each school will be asked to contrbute five cents for each scholar and 25 cents for each officer to the.state work.

Prof. W. H. Johnson, in an article in the Standard, Chicago, almost concludes that Baptist Associations are without an adequate object for their existance. After criticising, severely, a typical Baptist Association program, Dr. Johnson says:

Perhaps many of our associations could do nothing better at this year's session than to appoint a committee from among their most versatile, active and spiritual members to hunt for such an object, and report next year. And if such an object be found the writer is willing to prophesy that it will have to do, first and foremost, with church work, both evangelical and educational, within the local bounds of the association. The presentation of the work of more comprehensive organizations will be brief and merely incidental, and it will gain by the apparent loss, for the association that thoroughly tills its own field will be the most liberal toward work outside. Statistics will be held of less importance than plans for future work, and money needed for such work will be wasted in printing the utterly unimportant matter that now fills tne bulk of annual "minutes" of Baptist associations.

A suit for damages was begun on August 10th, in Chicago, by the Rev. Father Anthony Kozlowski against Archbishop Patrick A. Feehan. The trouble arose out of the dissatisfaction of the Polish congregation of the Hedwig's Church with its financial management. No accounting could be obtained from the Archbishop, and the right to have a voice in the management of the church finances was denied to the church members. This caused a split, and money was raised for the building of All-Saints' Cathedral; Father Kozlowski was elected to head the seceders. A constitution was framed and adopted for the new church, and this proved so satisfactory to many other dissatisfied Polish congregations throughout the country, who had had the same troubles, that this constitution was adopted by a large number of their churches. The cardinal principle of the new church is to retain church property, as is universally the rule in Europe, in the hands of the church organization and not to surrender it, as has been hitherto the case with Polish congregations in this country, to any Bishop or Archbishop. The church has spread far and wide, and now numbers 120,-000 souls. The breach betweed the Father and the Archbishop grew constantly greater, and at last became apparently irreparable. The culmination was reached when Father Kozlowski was excommunicated by act of major excommunication, the gravest and severest known to canon law. This is the first time that such a pronunciamento has been proclaimed in America. It has been read in all the pulpits throughout Illinois and elsewhere, and its meaning and effect explained by a priest in each instance to the congregation. The Archbishop in his letter has forbidden the faithful to hold any intercourse or communication with the excommunicated one. Father Kozlowski maintains that this is in derogation of his civil rights, and amounts to a practical boycott, which would in the end make him a social pariah, and hence the suit for damages. Attorney Henry R. Rathbone, who has charge of the case for the plaintiff, was seen at his office, 610 Ashland Block, Chicago, and in answer to an inquiry, stated the nature of the case and said that it would be taken to the court of last resort if necessary, in order that the rights of citizens in such matters might be fully and finally determined. He said he regarded it as an epoch-making case, and one of the most important which had arisen for many years in this or any other country. It involved the rights of the citizen and his civil liberties in their fullest extent and the respective sphere of church and state. Mr. Rathbone is a grandson of the late Judge and United States Senator, Ira Harris, of New York, and came originally from Albany, N. Y., where his people are well known.

Progress of Christianity.

Christianity was born in the midst of Judaism and paganism. It was obliged to obtain its followers from its opponents. It is estimated that its progress was as follows:

End of first century	500,000
End of second century	2,000,000
End of third century	5,000,000
End of fourth century	10,000,000
End of fifth century	15,000,000
End of sixth century	20,000,000
End of seventh century	25,000,000
End of eighth century	30,000,000
End of ninth century	40 000,000
End of tenth century	50,000,000
Ene of eleventh century	70,000.000
End of twelfth century	80,000.000
End of thirteenth century	75,000,000
End of fourteenth century	80,000,000
End of fifteenth century	100,000,000
End of sixteenth century	125,000,000
End of seventeenth century	155,000,000
End of eighteenth century	200,000,000
In year 1877	400,000,000
In year 1880	410,000,000
In year 1890	492,865,000
In year 1894	500,000,000

Dr. Daniel Dorchester says: "The above are probably the most reliable representations of the progress of Christianity, and show its wonderful growth in later years, far exceeding its progress. In 1,500 years it gained 100,000,-000; then in 300 years it gained 100,000,000 more; then in 80 years it gained 210,000,000 more. In the last 20 years, 106,000,000. During nearly ten centuries of almost exclusive papal dominion, Christianity gained only about 85,000,000. Since the birth of Protestantism, a period about one-third as long, it has gained nearly five times as much.

"The population of this earth is about 1,-500,000,000. Of these about one-third are Christian adherents, and two-thirds are non-Christian. Of the Christians about 170,000,-000 are Protestants, about 210,000,000 are Roman Catholics, about 110,000,000 are adherents of the Greek Church; about 10,000,-000 belong to the Armenian, Nestorian, and other Eastern churches. Of the non-Christians about 8,000,000 are Jews, 172,000,000 are Mohammedans, about 820,000,000 are pagan and heathen.

"Of the population of the earth, about two-thirds are under the rule of Christian nations. Of the 1,000,000,000 under Christian rule, about 600,000,000 are under Protestants; 250,-000,000 are under Roman Catholics; 150,000,000 are under the Greek Church.

"The hopeful element of modern life is the growing influence of Jesus. Not only is the number of those who openly profess allegiance to him growing, but they are increasingly gaining insight into the meaning and spirit of his life and teaching; they are more and more perfectly carrying out his instructions—living his life. The influence of Jesus is also more powerfully felt beyond the ranks of professing Christians than ever before."—Gospel in all Lands.

Indiana Baptists.

The last statistics of the Indiana Baptist churches show that there are 525 churches of this denomination in the state; that in 100 years they have increased to a membership of 54,000, of which 4,000 are colored and have their own churches. These are the missionary Baptists. Their property is valued at present at $1,313,422. Their wealthiest church is at Peru; their largest congregation is that of the First Baptist Church at Indianapolis; their most modern church is at Bluffton. Other churches of the first class in Indiana are at South Bend, Wabash, Fort Wayne, Lafayette, Terre Haute, Muncie, Richmond and Seymour. It will be noticed that churches of the first class are all in Northern Indiana, except two or three. On this church membership of 54,000 falls the annual expense of $135,000 per annum apportioned for Indiana, of which $4,500 is for foreign missions, $4,500 for state missions, $2,500 for home missions, $1,500 for the publication society and $120,000 for all other religious purposes.

There are about 550 pastors in the field and Indiana has five superannuated ministers receiving benefits from the church. Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan form one district for the maintenance of superannuated ministers and maintain a home at Trenton, Mich., where twenty-five men are now cared for. In all, there are seventy superannuated preachers in this district.

Aside from the funds enumerated above the Baptists of Indiana maintain their state school—Faanklin College, at Franklin—which has an unvarying attendance of about 250 students a year. It has an endowment of $400,000 placed in good land securities in Johnson and surrounding counties. An additional endowment of $75,000 is now being raised.—Chicago Record.

Family Circle.

Peace.

The flowers float their censers on the sated air,
The waters of the fountain foam in wanton wave,
While sunbeams, slowly streaming through the arch of palm,
Shine softly, filtered to a shaded splendor there.
And all is soothed by silence, nought is sounding save
The fountain's flow, which purls a rhythm to the calm.

And I, my soul, would soar in space supernal, still
And sated, in the calm of timeless ecstacy:
No thought, save only dreams of color-glories, blent
With lethal odors thronging. These my bliss fulfill,
While languored harmonies soft whisper peace to me.
So sleep for aye, my soul, and, dreaming, find content.

THE COMPANIONSHIP OF BOOKS.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

* * * * And have no company with him. * * * * —2 Thessalonians 3:14.

"I feel it my duty, sir," said the teacher, "to inform you of the fact that your son has a great liking for bad company. I am doing all in my power to eradicate this preference for evil companions, but it seems firmly rooted, and I think it right that you should know of it."

"You must be greatly mistaken, sir. Tom has very few associates. In fact, he would prefer a book, any time, to a schoolmate. He is a great reader. His evenings are spent in his room, where he reads, often till very late."

"What does he read?" asked the teacher.

"O, I haven't inquired into that. I just know that he is a great reader, and I am very glad that he is. But you see he cannot be in bad company when he is in no company at all."

"There is where you are mistaken," replied the teacher. "I insist that he is continually in company of the very worst sort. In fact, he is so engrossed with his evil companions that he has no time for his studies. I am compelled to watch him continually. Only yesterday I found him in company of the worst type, for instead of preparing himself for his recitation he held in his hand one of those vile books, whose author calls himself a realist; who takes his characters mostly from the slums and lowest walks of life, with all their coarseness of language, manner and words; who portrays human nature in all its lowest, most degraded and sickening forms. Now, if such a book is not vile company, then I do not know what vile company is. And if a boy enjoys such society in books, might there not be danger that he will seek it in its haunts? If you do not know what sort of company your boy's books afford him, it is time you look into the matter, my friend. Good-bye."

The advice of this plain-spoken but sensible teacher may, with profit, be heeded by all parents. Paul, in writing to the Thessalonians, described a certain sort of man and said: "Have no company with him."

It is most important that we consider the character of our associates—of those with whom we "have company"—and choose them as wisely and carefully as it is possible; and such choice ought not to stop with people—neighbors and friends for ourselves, playmates and school friends for our children—for if books have almost if not quite as great an influence upon our lives as we believe they do, it is equally important that we select with care all those with which we "have company." Especially should we see to it that our children, in the formation of whose characters we are so interested, read the right sort of books. The most blighting influence often lies between two book-covers, not alone of the dime novel—whose characters are so unnatural and inapplicable, while most detrimental during the period when they are believed in, soon lose their charm and are regarded with all the ridicule they deserve—but of many books that are approved by scores of readers and received into hundreds of homes which, if not disgustingly realistic are, perhaps, so sensually suggestive with their insinuating word-pictures, that they cannot but have a most undesirable influence upon the impressionable mind of the young. And the hurtfulness of it is that they may not outgrow these books as they do the dime novel. Their subtle influence remains, perhaps, through life, to the great moral and spiritual injury of the one influenced.

There are so many books—the great printing presses of the country turning out more in a day than one person can read in a lifetime, it is said—that it ought to be and is an easy matter to select many, very many, that are helpful and elevating; that feed the heart; that enrich the mind; that come under the head of "good company," and that influence in the right direction all who read them. Considering how short is life, and how precious are even our minutes, certainly we should read the very best.

First of all, we should read the Bible—the king of all books. Between its covers alone there is a library complete. It we should read first; we should read it last; we should read it all the time. Not that we should read nothing else, but that we should read it so often and be so full of it that we will have no desire for books that are bad. Christian Endeavorers pledge themselves to read the Bible every day. Surely, this is an example worthy of imitation. What other book is so simple, so pure, so full of tenderness? It speaks personally to all who will read it. It has a message for every human being who will study its pages—a message that brings such comfort as can nowhere else be found, for through it God speaks to the soul.

"My burden is greater than I can bear!" and he answers through this blessed book:

"As thy days, so shall thy strength be," and the burdened heart is comforted.

"Temptations assail me on every side," cries another. "Temptations so great that I seem powerless under their influence. Lord, help me!" And the answer comes:

"But God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able." And the way of escape is shown the tempted one.

"There are such great enterprises to be carried forward, and such great tasks to be accomplished, and the obstacles in the way seem insurmountable!" sighs the earnest worker in the great cause of Christianity; but as he quotes from Paul:

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," he again feels "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," and goes on to victory.

"Lord, be merciful to me a sinner!" prays one who feels unworthy to even so much as lift his eyes to the throne of grace—who is wandering, sin-clutched, in deepest darkness. And through the gloom there comes to him, as sweetest music, the tender words:

"Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow."

"Lord, I have turned back after having put my hand to the plow! My backslidings reprove me! I am indeed a prodigal, and no more worthy to be called thy child!" cries another in all anguish of spirit. And the story of the prodigal son comes to him with all its comforting assurance of forgiveness, and the "lost is found."

"I have just entered thy service, Lord," prays the newly converted, "and though we know that thy commandments will bring us to thee in safety, yet fain would we have a model by which to fashion our lives." And they find their ideal in him who said:

"For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." They come to see that he is the one model by which to mold their lives, looking unto him, the Author and Finisher of their faith.

"Father," whispers the aged one whose life has been spent in the service of his Lord; "Father, I realize that the time is drawing nigh when I must lie down to 'sleep the sleep that knows no waking.' I must leave many of my tasks and plans for thy cause all unfinished. I must relinquish the work I had laid out and entrust it to other hands. I must leave many of my hopes unrealized; and the ideal character, toward which I have ever struggled, I have not attained. But, Father, thou knowest that my motive has been true, and that my desire for Godlikeness has been sincere. And into thy hands, with all my imperfections, I commend my spirit."

And the All-pitying Eye of the Father looks upon his faithful child with infinite love and compassion, and gives his answer through his holy Word:

"Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The Late-staying Caller.

Friend Staylate makes a call in the evening. Conversation blithe and joyous, and repeated requests for him to remain yet a little while, lead him, not at all unwillingly, to prolong his visit. He looks at his watch with a gasp of genuine dismay, and hurries away slowly at last with profuse apologies for keeping us up until such an unearthly hour. "Oh, indeed, no!" choruses the entire family. "This is early for us! We never think of going to our rooms until later than this." Friend Staylate loiters a moment after he gets outside the gate. Slam goes the door; bang! wang! slam! go the shutters, calling harshly to each other, "Thought that fellow would never go!" Bang! "Why didn't he stay all night!" Slam! And the chain cries, "Gone at last!" The darkness of the dungeon settles down on the house; the family has gone to bed, having relieved its mind by doors and shutters that are ready to tell the truth any time they are given a chance.—Robert J. Burdette.

Speak Gently!

Speak gently; it is better far
To rule by love than fear;
Speak gently; let no harsh words mar
The good we might do here.

Speak gently to the young, for they
Will have enough to bear;
Pass through this life as best they may,
'Tis full of anxious care.

Speak gently to the aged one;
Grieve not the care-worn heart;
The sands of life are nearly run;
Let such in peace depart.

Speak gently, kindly, to the poor;
Let no harsh tones be heard;
They have enough they must endure,
Without an unkind word.

Speak gently to the erring; know
That thou thyself art man;
Perchance unkindness made them so;
Oh, win them back again!

A Salt Lake Sunset.

W. H. BAGBY.

It was a gala day at Salt Air Beach, the beautiful breathing and bathing-place of the Emerald City of the intermountain plains, and the unique spot at which meet all the charms of mountain, plain and sea. The famous Tabernacle choir was out for a holiday, and the announcement that they would sing at intervals during the afternoon and evening had served to attract a great multitude to the charming resort; so that when our party arrived in the late afternoon, the great pavilion presented a scene of the utmost animation. About the tables in the spacious banqueting hall were gathered thousands of happy people, laughing and chatting over tempting lunches while inhaling the cool, sweet breath of the distant, snow-capped mountains, wafted to them on the wings of the wind from across the waters of the wonderful sea. To the music of laughter and lapping waves, hundreds of merry bathers were floating in the briny, buoyant waters below, while above, in the largest dancing pavilion in the world, to the sweet strains of a well-trained orchestra, multitudes of maidenly forms, clasped in the arms of manly strength, were gracefully floating through the figures of the mazy waltz, enjoying the sweet exhilaration found by happy, healthy youth in setting to music the poetry of motion. Just over the peaks of the low-lying mountains, far on the western shore of the great salt sea, clothed in splendor and clearly outlined against the edge of the azure sky, hung the great, round disc of the King of Day. Picking his way among the banks and bands of leaden clouds that hung in the western sky, he slowly and majestically descended till his nether rim touched the summit of a somber peak where he paused and laid in good-night embrace, from shore to shore across the bosom of the peaceful sea, an arm of burnished gold. Sinking slowly behind the mountains upon the lips of each tired little wave, restlessly falling asleep on the bosom of the limpid mother lake, he imprinted a good-night kiss. Climbing up the piles upon which the splendid pavilion rests and seeking a retired nook, he laid his hands of light in gentle benediction upon a head of brown and one of gold bending low over a band of gold that held a dimple finger and a dazzling gem. Stealing across the pavilion he imprinted a loving kiss on the ruby lips of a sleeping babe and touched with glory its soft, golden curls. With his last horizontal ray softened and subdued, he transfigured the two old, grey heads that bent in loving watchfulness above the beautiful child. Hastening along the city that spans the stretch of water between the pavilion and the shore, rippling across the plains to the city nestling at the feet of the mountains, he touched with golden light the pinnacles of the temple, and leaping from the flaring end of the golden trumpet of mythical Moroni, climbed up the rugged sides of the mountains that lift their heads high into the upper deep. Upon their grey heads, covered with years and crowned with the spotless snows of countless winters, he bestowed a last, lingering, benedictive kiss, and leaped to the vaulted sky. Sweeping from east to west athwart the blue dome of the heavens with his burning kisses of good-night and blessing, he set on fire every floating cloud, and they became a fleet in flames afloat on a boundless sea. Gradually the ships burn down to the water's edge and took on the red glow of flameless fire. Finally the fire died out entirely and they became floating masses of dull-gray ashes-wrecks of the upper deep.

The climax was a transformation scene. The sea below was a reproduction of the sea above. Looking toward the western horizon, we were looking between the leaves of a partially opened book, the opposite pages of which held the same surpassingly beautiful picture. Every tint of the sky was visible in the sea. The wonderful works that were done in the heavens by the sun that had set were reproduced on earth. (So should the Sun of Righteousness be reproduced on earth, for he prayed, "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.") As we stood looking, we beheld two seas. The one that spread out at our feet was shrouded in semi-darkness and the rising wind had made it rough. The islands that dotted it were rugged, steep and grim. In striking contrast with this was the beautiful scene painted on the western sky by the setting sun, in which the pale-blue sky was the sea and the clouds were the islands. This sea was rough, that was perfectly placid; this was shrouded in gloom, that was bathed in mellow light; these islands were dark and desolate, those were clothed in the glory of heaven; these waters were dark and gave back no answering outline, those were mirror-like and gave a perfect reflection of the islands and shores. Night, who had started with her sable curtain from the foot of the mountain simultaneously with the disappearance of the sun behind its peak, and had drawn it gently but surely over the sea, the islands, the golden and the gray heads, the plains, the pinnacles and the snowy peaks, then dropped it down over the western horizon and pinning it with a star shut out from vision the scene of surpassing beauty and glory. But until the curtain of a dawnless night shall be drawn over the plains and peaks of memory's realm, that beautiful scene will remain in the field of its vision, telling of a sea where storms never come and where peace, blessed peace, ever reigneth; where the islands are bathed in the light of his glory, and night never comes with its gloom.

"Where the rich, golden fruit
Is in bright clusters pending,
And the deep-laden boughs
Of life's fair tree are bending,
And where life's crystal stream
Is unceasingly flowing,
And the verdure is green
And eternally growing.
Where no sin nor dismay
Neither trouble nor sorrow
Will be felt for a day
Nor be feared for the morrow!"

Licensing an Evil.

Many Protestants denounce the Roman Catholic Church of the sixteenth century for sending John Tetzell out to sell indulgences to people to commit sin, but are we not doing the same thing in a more enlightened age, when we vote for men and parties who sell the privilege or license to erect murder mills or drunkard factories? Raising the amount of the license does not reduce the sin. If Judas Iscariot had received 300 pieces of silver instead of 30, his crime would have been none the less. Dr. Sutherland, of Canada, illustrates this folly with a fable. He pictures a donkey in a large green meadow, with beautiful lakes of water; but every time the donkey goes to one of these lakes for a drink of water he is [illegible], which rob him of much of his blood. In order to reduce his torture and to regulate these leeches, he levied a tax or issued a license to them, requiring each one to pay back a part of the blood which they sucked from his veins. An observing horse and ox across the meadow fence, watching the proceeding with much interest, both remarked with much emphasis, "Well, that is certainly a brilliant idea, and eminently worthy of the genius of an ass!!"—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Vibratory Power.

All structures, large or small, simple or complex, have a definite rate of vibration, depending on their material, size and shape, as fixed as the fundamental note of a musical chord. When the bridge at Colebrooke Dale (the first iron bridge in the world) was building, a fiddler came along and said he could fiddle it down. The workmen laughed in scorn, and told him to fiddle away to his heart's content. He played until he struck the keynote of the bridge, and it swayed so violently that the astonished workman commanded him to stop. At one time considerable annoyance was experienced in one of the mills in Lowell. Some days the building was so shaken that a pail of water would be nearly emptied, while on other days all was quiet. Experiment proved it was only when the machinery was running at a certain rate that the building was disturbed. The simple remedy was in running it slower or faster, so as to put it out of time with the building. We have here the reason of the rule observed by marching armies when they cross a bridge, viz., stop the music, break step and open column, lest the measured cadence of a condensed mass of men should urge the bridge to vibrate beyond its sphere of cohesion. Neglect of this has led to fearful accidents. The celebrated engineer, Stephenson, has said there is not so much danger to a bridge when crowded with men and cattle as when men go in marching order. The Broughton Bridge, near Manchester, gave way beneath the measured tread of only sixty men. A terrible disaster befell a battalion of French infantry while crossing the suspension bridge at Angiers, in France. Repeated orders were given the troops to break into sections, but in the hurry of the moment and in the rain they disregarded the order, and the bridge fell.—Professor Lovering.

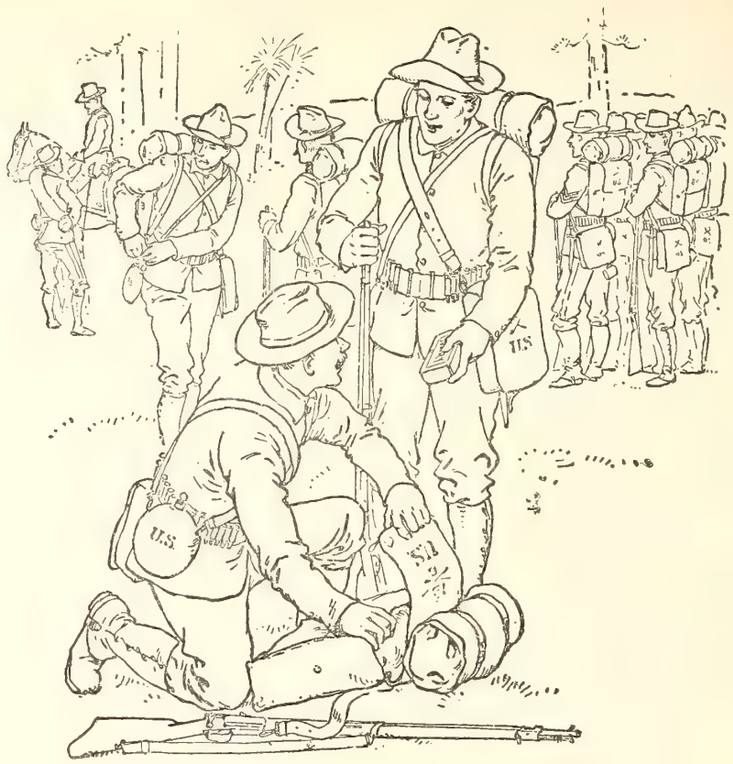
Flowers on the Coffin-lid.



ANNA D. BRADLEY.

"Yes, he had many fine traits. I never liked him while he lived, but I always speak well of the dead."

I listened, but the words aroused a sad, hungry cry of pain in my heart, which I tried in vain to hush. We stab with cruel words or freeze with cold neglect the living, but kindle fires of gentle memory upon the silent grave, and "always speak well of the dead."

I find no fault with this. Cold and insensate, indeed, must be the one that can stand beside the coffin-bed and drag to light the one-time faults of the helpless sleeper. Over the unlovely past even the most unfriendly hand will gently draw the veil and whisper softly—"Requiescat in pace."

This is as it should be. Yet sadley I ask my soul, why need we wait until the heart has ceased to throb with joy or woe before we learn to be generous? Why not now whisper words of approval? Why not to-day drop into the path some of the seeds of tenderness which we are reserving to piously plant above their graves?

Ivory Soap has many advantages for the soldier in the field. Besides being a perfect soap for the hands and face and for the bath, it is specially suited to the washing of flannel clothing. Ivory Soap, because of its purity, is also valuable as a First Aid accessory, it is unexcelled for the cleansing of cuts, wounds and sores.

A WORD OF WARNING.—There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

If, as some think, the spirit of the dead still hovers about its earthly home, I can fancy it whispering sadly to its flower-strewn clay, "The gentle words they speak to-night have lost their power to cheer. While I was with you I was often hungry for a love I did not receive; thirsty for words of approval or sympathy which I did not hear; sick and in prison of spiritual loneliness; but the hand that could so easily have removed my prison-bars forgot and let me alone. And now, oh worn out body, you are dead. You have no need for costly flowers piled high above your pulseless breast. Their fragrance and rich beauty are all unfelt by you, unneeded now by me. But oh, if on each day of our own weary journey only one simple flower had been given by them to us! The ear in which they pour their kindly words is dead; but oh, how eagerly we listened once for words which never came till now! I hear them fondly telling of kindly errands upon which our willing feet have sped; of gentle deeds our willing hands have wrought; of tender words of hope and cheer we tried to speak to other hearts discouraged. I hear them whispering of how they prized all this. Oh dear, dead clay, how priceless would have been this knowledge once! It would have made our way so much smoother; our burdens so much lighter; our words so much easier to speak. But it comes too late to-night to do us any good; for you, poor clay, lie dead, and I am now beyond all need of help!"

Oh friends, let us not wait until death has had pity and brought rest and peace to the tired heart ere we remember how faithful it is!

In every home there is always one who bears the heaviest burdens; whose need for rest and recreation is too often overlooked. It may be a father or mother; it may be only a servant. But one there is beneath whose weary frame there throbs a hungry heart. A tithe of the love we lavish on the dead would gild with glory their darkened life to-day. Don't wait!

A teacher in a large school recently died from mental and physical exhaustion.

Over her flower-hid coffin, how touching were the encomiums lavished upon her! Not one of all the teachers had been so faithful and so true. Her beautiful life, fragrant with the incense of self-sacrifice, had been a stimulant to all. The impulse she had given to nobler thought and purer living would never die, but grow mightier all the while, and the world would always be richer for this one matchless life.

I chanced to know something of the life so eulogized. Poor, worked-to-death woman, she never once dreamed there was such stimulant to others in her life. She did not even know that she was genuinely liked. Many of the teachers—to whom she had ever been such high inspiration—she had thought disliked her. She never dreamed that the great school needed her; she thought—poor thing!—she was barely holding her place.

Yet, if she only could have known! How such knowledge would have helped her triumph over weakness! If, now and then, they had told her they were glad to have her with them, and how much her earnest life meant to them, I verily believe she would have been here now.

They say it freely now, but she is dead! To me the flowers on her coffin cast a sickening fragrance.

I wonder why they waited?

Cross-Examine That Worry.

Are you a worry about something I can't help? If you are, what is the use of you, eh?

Are you a worry about something I can help! Well, then, are you going to help me straighten things out, you worry, or hinder me?

How did you come here, anyhow? Did you get in through the door of indigestion? Did that traitor, Unfaith, let you in? Was it my meddling busybody of a servant, Overwork?

How old are you? Haven't you been in court before? Haven't you been convicted of perjury about fifty times already? And you dare to come here again!

What is your name? Ernest Foresight? I know better. That's an alias. Your real name, you worry, is Lacktrust.

And your father? Wisdom? That's a falsehood; you are one of Beelzebub's brats.

What have you to say for yourself? That you have reason and justice on your side? I see that they are there, but standing over with swords to condemn you!

That all the world is dark and gloomy? Take off those blue glasses!

That you can't help feeling and acting as you do? That you were made that way? Then you made yourself that way, for to charge God with making such a thing as you would be blasphemy; and the sooner your "maker" makes you over, the better for you and all the rest of us.

Mitigating circumstances? You are not feeling well? You have taken the quickest way to feel worse. People don't understand you, don't sympathize with you? They understand you very well; that's why they don't sympathize with you.

Prisoner at the bar, you are guilty. Your sentence is severe—for you—but salutary. One month in Sunshine Parlor, and to be fed on Bible rations.—Christian Endeavor World.

Never Heard a Prayer at Home.

I shall never forget the impression made upon me during the first year of my ministry, by a mechanic whom I had visited, and on whom I urged the paramount duty of family prayer. One day he entered my study, bursting into tears as he said: "You remember that girl, sir? She was my only child. She died suddenly this morning. She has gone, I hope, to God; but if so, she can tell him what now breaks my heart, that she never heard a prayer in her father's house, or from her father's lips! Oh, that she were with me but for one day again!"—Norman McLeod.

ISRAEL'S TRAGEDY.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The cause of Israel's downfall as a nation may be discovered already latent in the division of the kingdom. It was practically impossible that two nations as small as Israel and Judah should survive the sundering of their unity for many generations. The neighboring people were too strong and the lack of unity within gave added cause for apprehension regarding the perpetuity of either kingdom. Especially was this true of Israel, where the rapid change of dynasties and the lack of a central and uniform worship made the danger greater. Some of the kings were strong men; but there was no continuity of power, and in the hands of the weak and nerveless monarchs, the strength was sapped from the nation's life.

But a worse disaster than any of these elements was the idolatrous worship which came in large measure with each succeeding reign and which even the earnest efforts of great prophets like Elijah had never availed to overthrow.

The early and simple worship of Jehovah, as it had been conducted by Samuel at various sanctuaries throughout the kingdon, had met every requirement of the people's higher nature; but Jeroboam changed the simple imageless worship of God into a common form of heathenism. With such a start toward idolatry the worship of Israel rapidly degenerated in the reign of Ahab through the active introduction of Baal worship at the hands of Jezebel. All the lower elements of the Semitic nature-worship came in with this foreign cult. Baal was the god of fire, and his worship was celebrated with the cruel practice of child-sacrifice. Closely related to this was the worship of Ashera, or Astarte, the female companion of Baal, which emphasized the sensuous elements of the nature cult, so seductive to people like the Israelites.

These practices of cruelty and lust, sanctioned by the name of religion, had spread throughout the kingdom. Everywhere from the loneliest outpost or watchtower to the most populous city, the symbols of Baal and Ashera were seen in the form of obelisks or stone pillars for the one, and trees or even a stake for the other. And worst of all, these symbols and their debasing ideas were associated with the worship of Jehovah in the people's mind. Under such a reigme idols multiplied. Children were sacrificed to appease the deity by being slain and burned. Still other pernicious practices relating to religion were introduced, such as the worship of the heavenly bodies and divination or Spiritism—the attempt at consultation with the dead.

But had there been no effort to check such a down-grade tendency as this? One cannot read the books of Kings without seeing that prophet after prophet had arisen to speak against such debasing tendencies. Amos and Hosea had borne witness to the truth. They had emphasized the teachings of the early prophets and lawgivers from Moses down; but the tendency to imitate other nations was too strong to be overcome. The avenues of trade were the open way for the introduction of foreign ideas of morality and religion. There was only one end to such a course of degeneracy. Nation after nation has told the same story. It seems sometimes as though in modern times nations were simply trying the old experiments over, either hoping that the laws of righteousness have changed, or utterly defying them.

The strong reign of Jereboam II. was followed in rapid succession by those of Zechriah, his son, who reigned six months; Shallum, his murderer, who reigned for a month and Menahen, who in turn conspired against him and reigned for ten years. Pekahiah, his son, reigned for two years, and Pekah, his captain, in turn rose against him and reigned for twenty years; and last of all, Hoshea slew his master and closed the list with a reign of nine years.

During all this period the kingdom of Assyria had been pressing ever more closely upon the eastern frontier of the kingdom. Its western campaigns had begun in 740 B. C., and in 732 Damascus fell under the assault of Tiglath Pilesar. Shortly afterwards the same conqueror devastated all the northern territories of Israel, and finally, in 722 B. C., after a siege of three years by Shalmaneser, his successor, Samaria fell into the hands of Sargon, the next of the kings of Assyria. The city was dismantled and the best of its people, including the king, princes and priests, were carried away into the East, leaving only the common people, without sense of unity or nationality to bind them to the land, whose character was changed by the importation of colonists from other devastated provinces. Thus the ten tribes disappeared from history. Very few of their people were ever moved from Palestine, but they were merged into another stock by reason of the importation of foreign elements, and thus lost entirely the name and character they had formerly possessed.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

Secret sins soon lead to open sins. The anger of God is man's way of expressing God's hatred of sin; which, however, is never separated from his love for the sinner. Whatever separates a soul from God is idolatry, whether it is the worship of golden images or of golden coins, or any other object of affection. Those who have received most instruction are most responsible, and bear the heaviest burdens of obligation. It is the most dangerous of all infidelity to doubt that the consequences of sin will be experienced by the sinner. Man is bound to worship something, and if he does no worship God he will make for himself some other object of worship. The desire to be like others, to conform to the ways of those around us by a slavish imitation, is often the cause of serious moral disaster. Cruelty and lust were the ordinary accompaniments of the worship of false gods in the olden times; with all the refinements of later times these are still the great dangers to moral life; cruelty in evil temper and the exhibition of anger and malicious speech, and lust expressed in unclean thoughts and unchaste language. Superstition always flourishes where God is forgotten; Spiritualism and every other fad find fertile soil in the minds of those who are not true seekers after God. A nation or an individual that becomes useless for divine purposes can only suffer rejection.

TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER 18.

THE TRIUMPHS OF CHRISTIANITY.

(Luke 4:16-22.)

Perhaps no other religion has advanced so rapidly and spread so far, with so peaceful a conquest, as Christianity. Its triumphs have been bloodless, except when its own blood was shed. By purely peaceful means it sapped the foundations of the greatest of the world-empires until the vast edifice came tumbling in ruins, and one of its greatest captains, as he cast a handful of his dying blood into the air, gasped forth, "Galilean, thou hast conquered!" They say the Barbarians from the North overturned Rome. It is not so. Christianity did it. Without force exerted by itself, the kingdom of God overturned the Empire of Rome. And this is only a figure of the manner in which Christianity has overturned the systems of thought, the prejudices and opinions and customs of the world—and that, too, by the quietest and most peaceful means.

It has preached good tidings to the poor—the poor in money, the poor in mind, the poor in spirit. Those who have felt themselves in anywise poor and forlorn have found in the sound of the gospel the golden chime of good tidings. Ye that labor and are heavy laden, what joy has come to you out of the message preached by the triumphant Galilean! And this, too, is not the least of his triumphs, for it is a victory over very ancient prejudice and custom. Who had ever heard of good tidings for the poor! It was to the rich that good tidings belonged—the rich, the wise, the favored. Not a religion in the world but gave its chief privileges to the great and powerful and wise and rich. None but the great could offer the best sacrifices, none but the wise could enter the secret places of religious mysteries. But here is a religion whose message comes ringing to the lowly, meek, unwise, the wayfaring fool, the poor in spirit, wretched, abandoned, outcast. Its like had never been seen before!

Again, it brought release to captives—liberty to those bruised with fetters and many stripes. It has not invariably been true, alas, that Christianity has brought the triumph of liberty and freedom to men and women. Too often it has broughi bonds and the Inquisition; too often the church's tessellated pavement has been stained with the black of blood; too often its cells have been less the free homes of worshipers than the prison-cells of the the persecuted. And even to-day it is not invariably true that the Christian Church is a home in which the captives of human thought and prejudice can find free air in which to breathe and think. But all this state of affairs is the corruption of the gospel, and not its true spirit. And one of the greatest triumphs of Christianity has yet to reach its full bloom when, under the broad branches of the church, every man shall find grateful release from spiritual servitude, and full freedom to worship God.

Sight to the blind Christianity has brought many times since Jesus and the twelve went away. Many a poor soul struggling with the problem of sin and how to be rid of "the body of death" has found relief, "thank God, through Jesus Christ." Many a thirsting heart, yearning for some more certain sight of God, has found the revelation of him in Jesus whom he had sent. Many a mind struggling with the problem of evil has groped in vain in the labyrinth, until at last in the light of the Sun of Righteousness he has been content to rest, confident that somehow he doeth all things well. These and other problems which have blinded human eyes like scales have fallen away, not always solved, but at all events somewhat cleansed, until sufficient light has been given the blind to walk.

"I do not ask to see
The distant scene, one step
Enough for me."

Christian Publishing Company, Publishers,

Once again, the triumph of Christianity it is to show that now is the acceptable year of the Lord, that if ever there is to be a kingdom of God it must begin now, that if ever there is to be a heaven it must at least open its gate and we must enter here and now, that if ever man is to be blessed he must begin to be blessed to-day—for now is the accepted time. "Man never is, but always to be blessed," has found its negative in the beatitudes, in which the present tense reigns supreme. If Christianity does nothing more for us than to turn our eyes away from the future and centre them on the life that now is, on the day and act that confronts us, it has done a great deal. Sometimes, to be sure, the church has sought to lift us unduly and prematurely out of this life into another; but this, too, is a perversion of Christianity. The real gospel proclaims the acceptable year of the Lord.

AMERICA OR ROME?
CHRIST OR THE POPE?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

In the history of the world there has never been a more opportune time for Protestantism to show the errors of Catholicism. The curtain has just risen revealing a long line of misrule and oppression by the Romish Church. It only now remains for the world to look on Rome's theater of action and decide for itself on the merits of the part she has played.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

Literature.

EVERY-DAY LIFE IN KOREA. By Rev. Daniel L. Gifford. Fleming H. Revell Co., publishers. Price, $1.25.

Rev. Daniel L. Gifford was eight years a missionary in this strange Eastland, and in this book of 230 pages he has given the world an interesting collection of studies and stories about this strange people. This book is not only an interesting companion for the home circle, but is of special value as a missionary study. In this book the reader will not only see the strange customs of this strange people and the power of their native habits and religion, but also the patience and success of a faithful missionary. There is power in the gospel of Christ to remove mountains of difficulty in these non-Christian lands. The reader of this book will also find himself in possession of much history about Korea and its people that will be of value as well as present interest to him.

FELLOW-TRAVELERS. By Rev. Francis E. Clark. Fleming H. Revell, publishers. Price, $1.25.

Dr. Clark's ability as a writer is so well known in the two hemispheres that the mere mention of a book from his hand is a guarantee to the lover of good books that another interesting volume has been given to the world, and is, therefore, strongly educational in its character. Many strange facts are stated, and animating and exciting experiences related, with impressive vividness. Dr. Clark does not lose sight of the Endeavor Society and Endeavor interests at any time or place, and has a happy faculty of keeping that theme before his readers without the feeling of monotony. This book will be a valuable contribution to the Endeavor Society and literature.

W. E. GLADSTONE. By William Jerrold. Fleming H. Revell Co., publishers. Price, 75 cents.

For a convenient handbook on the life of England's great Commoner the above book is sufficiently ample for all ordinary, purposes. The development of character power and influence in the life of this great statesman are clearly shown in the orderly events selected from his life for this purpose. The book is in good style and moves along smoothly, yet with increasing interest to the end, leaving the reader in possession of the great factors of his life and new impulses to energize his own life.

THE TWO COVENANTS AND THE SABBATH. By L. W. Spayd, Owosso, Mich.

This little paper-back volume of 224 pages contains an exposition of the two Bible testaments, and is a review of a work entitled, "Two Covenants," by Elder Uriah Smith, of the Seventh-Day Adventists, and deals with the Seventh-Day Adventists' teachings in general. It is a thoroughly scriptural exposition of the Bible doctrine of the Covenants, and an able refutation of the Seventh-Day Advent teaching. In many parts of the country, and particularly in Michigan, the Adventists are exceedingly active in propagating their peculiar views, and their method of treating the Scriptures is such as to confuse the minds of many honest inquirers after the truth. The author of this little volume, living in the midst of this kind of teaching and being familiar with it, has dealt it a blow which cannot fail to be convincing to those whose minds are open to the truth. Those of our readers who live in communities where Seventh-Day Adventists are propagating their Sabbatarian views would do well to procure some copies of this little book, from the author, and put them in circulation. The work is marred by imperfect proof-reading, but the sense is always obvious. There is an index at the close giving the contents of the twenty chapters into which the book is divided.

CLERICAL TYPES. By Rev. Hames Mann. Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York and London, 1897.

The author of this remarkable series of sketches, whose real name is concealed, has given us some graphic pictures which, if not drawn from life, are so true to life as to suggest to the reader persons which have come under his own observation. The types of preachers sketched are, "A Successful Preacher;" "A Popular Preacher;" "A Transcendental Preacher;" "A Plodding Parson;" "A Spiritual Preacher;" "A Regular Hustler;" "A Modern Prophet;" "A Revivalist Preacher;" "A Liberal Preacher;" "A Doctrinal Preacher;" "A Book-Worm;" "A Fighting Parson;" "A Faith Healer;" "An Institutional Preacher;" "A ministerial Greatheart;" "A Ministerial Decorator;" "A Thorough-Paced Ritualist;" "A Priestly Priest;" "A Ministerial Wreck;" "A Ministerial Mystery."

Here are twenty types of preachers, whose portraits are drawn by the hand of a master. One recognizes familiar features in every one of them. Their faults and follies, their virtues and graces, are all set down without malice, on the one hand, or favoritism on the other. We have not read a more readable book in a long time. Each sketch seems to whet one's appetite for the next. We are not surprised to learn that the book is having a large sale, for it is just such a book as every preacher especially would like to have in his library to whet up his intellectual appetite, enliven his fancy and correct any of the clerical faults that may attach to himself. Some of the chapters excite almost a tragic interest. This is especially true of "A Ministerial Wreck," and "A Ministerial Mystery." The book constitutes a very good ministerial mirror, in which preachers may be helped to see themselves as others see them. He will be a dull learner who does not find in the work wise suggestions on many phases of church life, and ministerial conduct and character. The influence of the book cannot but be healthy, and not the less so because it is entertaining.

A story that even those who are close pressed by the duties of a very busy and practical age may pause to read with intense interest is contained in the book King Saul, just fresh from the press. It is a vivid recital of the history of the old ancient King of Israel, so told that the ages gone become reinvested with interest, and the characters appear as great in the world's history as they do in divine chronology.

King Saul is told in an up-to-date, matter-of-fact manner, with faithfulness to historical accuracy and plenty of snap, vigor and romantic details. It deserves to be read as well as the histories of other famous men who have played a part in shaping the destinies of the world. As a portrayal of human passions it is a masterpiece.

BABY'S FACE

LOOKED LIKE RAW MEAT.

Our baby's face and neck was all raw meat, and something awful to look at. The way that child suffered, mother and child never had any rest day or night as it constantly itched, and the blood used to flow down her cheeks. We had doctors and the dispensary with no result. By using CUTICURA RESOLVENT, CUTICURA (ointment), and CUTICURA SOAP, the child was entirely healed.
Mrs. GARNJOSS, 213 Nassau Ave., Brooklyn.

MOTHERS, to know that a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, and a single anointing with CUTICURA, will afford instant relief in the most distressing of itching, burning, and scaly infantile humors of the skin and scalp, with loss of hair, and not to use them, is to fail in your duty.

Sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Props., Boston. How to Cure Baby Humors, free.

In his preface the author, J. Breckenridge Ellis, tells why he chose an ancient theme for his story, adding among other things:

"A new novel has this advantage over an old history—the reader does not know how it will turn out. But this advantage is lost after the first reading. For in taking it up again it is too often found that every incident depends for its interest on that 'suspense' which the reader no longer feels. But the calmer stream of history, not pent up in the narrow channel of a single interest, ever discovers upon its way new beauties, new aspirations, new morals, new fields of life; varying phases of love and hate which have found shelter in human beasts. Here are no dreams undreamed."

The author begins his story with the marvelous manner in which Saul became ruler of Israel and the transition from a government by judges to that of kings.

"The people heard for the first time," says the author, "that cry which was to ring in their history for centuries to come, 'God save the king!' Perhaps it would have been better for them if they had occassionally varied this prayer with 'God save the people!'"

The wars, the appearance of David on the scene, the danger to the kingdom, the warnings of Samuel, Saul's double debt for his life to David, who he tries to destroy, the meeting with the witch of Endor and the passing of the crown are unfolded like a drama. The old story is told in a magical way that brings back life to objects almost forgotten by a busy world and almost considered mythical by many through neglect if not actual cynicism and abuse.

The scenes in the cavern of the witch and on the battlefield of Gilboa are particularly strong. The version of the former is extremely interesting from a spiritualistic standpoint, but is told without an argument.

The night scene on the battlefield of Gilboa is thus described:

" * * * And there lay the discarded bow of Jonathan as he had broken it in a last brave stand for his life. From among the gloomy trees shone bright spots upon the gray rocks—the stains of blood. And from the shadows white faces caught the whiter moonbeams, and when the breeze stirred the leaves the shadows flitted to and fro upon the gastly features as if they were trembling in a horrible laughter. * * * Among the dead lay the forms of the three princes and not far away another, with its pallid face market by a gleam of wealth above it. It was the dead face of Saul, mocked by the crown that still rested upon his brow."

The book consists of 281 pages and is a companion to "In the Days of Jehu," which was recently published, and has met with such success that the author is preparing a series of such works. (Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.)—St. Louis Star.

MAGAZINES.

The Biblical World for August has an excellent article on Damascus, by E. W. G. Masterman, M. D. The lucid style of the writer and his excellent perceptive and descriptive faculties make this an article of charming interest to the Bible student. It is a rich and orderly storehouse of historic interest and wealth.

The symposium on "The Problem of the Philippines," in the opening pages of the North American Review for September is noteworthy and important as well as timely. The opinions exrressed are those of the Rt. Hon. Sir Charles W. Dilke, Bart., M. P.; the Hon. John Barrett, late United States Minister to Siam; and Hugh H. Lusk, and are worthy of consideration in any attempt to formulate a right opinion on that problem.

Scribner's for September is one of the most readable magazines of the year. The two leaders on the fight at Guasmas and Sibony, by eye-witnesses, are especially interesting. The entire literature of this number is timely and interesting. There is nothing dry about it.

The true story of those 278 days of suffering by Greeley's heroic little band of explorers in the Arctic region has been told by General Greeley himself, for the first time, for the October Ladies' Home Journal. For years General Greeley has kept an unbroken silence about his fearful experience and that of his companions, as they dropped dead one by one at his side, and it was only after the greatest persuasion that the famous explorer was induced to write the story.

In common with other leading magazines for September, Frank Leslie's popular monthly devotes considerable space to war articles. The leading article, "A Warship's Battery," by Henry Harrison Lewis, tells how the great guns are placed and worked, and is illustrated with some splendid pictures of our victorious ships in action at Manila and Santiago. The entire table of contents is attractive.

Of the interesting articles in the Century for September, one is devoted to "Life and Society in Old Cuba," and one to "Malay Pirates of the Philippines," the latter by Prof. Dean C. Worcester, of the University of Michigan; the former article is made up of extracts from the journal of Jonathan S. Jenkins, an American painter of miniatures, written in 1859. Both are interesting articles. Some of the papers in this number of the Century, bearing upon our new territory, are especially strong documents.

The Sunday-school Times promises its readers a description of the coronation and later religious services of the young Queen Wilhelmina, to be crowned Queen of Holland, at Amsterdam, Sept. 7th, written by the Baroness of Arnheim. The article is to appear in an early issue.

In the September Review of Reviews the editor takes a strong American position in discussing the important international questions regarding Cuba and the Philippines, which must be settled by the peace commission at Paris. Plain words are also used in regard to the deplorable sanitary conditions that the American troops have suffered.

The Religious Review of Reviews for September is forging to the front of religious publications. The September number contains much valuable information for ministers and religious workers, as the list of able contributors show. A glance at the following department headings will indicate the practical character of this journal, published monthly at New York; special rates to ministers: Current Articles of Importance, Periodicals Reviewed, Notes from Recent Editorials, The Religious World, Sermonic Review Section, Editorial Notes, Review of Recent Publications, In a Lighter Vein and Contents of Reviews and Magazines.

BATES.

Charles M. Bates, son of Eld. W. E. Bates and M. J. Bates, was born in Council Grove, Morris county, Kan., Feb. 27, 1878. Departed this life in camp at Fernendina, Fla., of typhoid fever, on the morning of August 12, 1898, about 8 o'clock. Charlie enlisted with the Third Missouri Cavalry when the call was made for soldiers for the Cuban War. His father has for years been one of our faithful ministers of the gospel and has had the pleasure of receiving each of his children into the fold of Christ. Charlie, who was a member of the church at Trenton, became a Christian when about 12 years old. His death was peaceful and without a struggle. He was hopeful of recovery to the very last. Services were held in his memory at the Christian church in Trenton Aug. 22, Sunday morning Charlie was a promising young man, just 20 years, five months and 15 days old. His powers were rapidly developing and would have doubtless become useful in the church and society had he been permitted to live. For such trials as these the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ becomes very precious. It is certainly true of the members of the family that they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

GRANVILLE SNELL.

BAYLIS.

John Edgar Baylis was born near Maysville, Kentucky, on the 24th of April, 1824, and departed this life at his home near Concord, Ill., on the 11th of August, 1898. He was one of five brothers and the last to pass to his reward. He came to the state of Illinois in 1850, and on March 10th, 1853, he was united in marriage to Melissa J. Green. Six children were born to this union, two of whom preceded him to the better land. About the year 1870, under the preaching of Bro. D. R. Lucas, Bro. Baylis obeyed the gospel and ever remained a faithful soldier of the cross. The funeral services were held on Aug. 15, and were conducted by the writer. May the good Father comfort the sorrowing hearts.

IVAN W. AGEE.

GLIDDEN.

Sarah, wife of T C. Glidden, was born in Wayne county, Ind., Feb. 5th, 1836, and died of cancer of the liver August 1st, 1898, aged 62 years, five months and 26 days. Was married April 8th, 1857, in Marshall county, Ill. Went to Douglas county, Kan., in 1857, thence to Colorado Springs, Col., in 1888. She obeyed the gospel of Christ at Prairie City, Kansas, in 1882, under the ministry of Elder Gantz, and was ever afterward loyal and true to its teachings in all the relations of wife, mother and friend. She leaves an aged companion and six children, and a host of friends to mourn her departure, but they sorrow not as those without hope. The funeral services took place from the residence in Colorado Springs, August 2nd, and were conducted by the writer, assisted by Bro. B. B. Tyler.

J. P. LUCAS.

Colorado City, Col.

HOWELL.

Mrs. Miranda McGee Howell was born twenty-three and one-half years ago, and passed from her home on earth to her home in heaven, Tuesday, August 16, 1898. Her merits as a child, a young lady, a friend, a sister and a wife entitle her to more than a passing notice. In all these relations she was a pattern of fidelity. She united with the Church of Christ six years ago, and remained faithful to her Savior until death. She was married to the young and now heartbroken husband who survives her, October 19, 1897. She also leaves several brothers and sisters and her aged mother to mourn their loss in her departure; and a babe to be reared without an own mother's care and love. Her funeral, conducted by Eld. C. H. Strawn in Holliday, Mo., was attended by a large concourse of friends and relatives.

C. H. STRAWN.

MURPHY.

Mrs. Mary H. Murphy, another of the old residents of Arrow Rock, Mo., was gathered to her fathers on August 17, 1898, passing away in great peace and the full assurance of Christian faith, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Frank Spence. She was born in New Castle, Henry county, Ky., Jan. 11, 1813, and had, therefore, attained the age of eighty-five years, lacking from August to January. She moved with her husband, Mr. M. Murphy, to Arrow Rock in 1867, where they both spent the remainder of their lives, her husband departing this life some twelve or more years previous to her death. Of the date of the beginning of her Christian life we cannot speak positively, but she had joined the Church of Christ in Kentucky before her removal to this state in 1867. On the first organization of the Christian Church in Arrow Rock she became a charter member, and was ever an active, constant and devoted adherent, taking full part in all the work of the church until incapacitated by the infirmities of old age. Sister Murphy was one against whose pure moral character not even the vilest ever spoke disparagingly. A faithful wife, kind mother, charitable neighbor and noble Christian has been taken by the All-Father to a better world. Peace to her ashes and tears for her beloved memory. The bereaved daughter and family have the heart-sympathy of all the community. She was laid to rest in the Arrow Rock cemetery, beside her husband, till the time when her Master's voice shall call her up to the resurrection of everlasting life.

A TRIBUTE FROM A FRIEND.

Experience Teaches the value of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is constantly accomplishing wonderful cures and people in all sections take it, knowing it will do them good.

Hay Baler Essetials.

We assume that every man who has had any experience knows that the two prime essentials of a baling press are: First, large capacity so as to be economical in operation; and second, sufficient strength and power to make heavy, compact bales when a large quantity of hay or other material is fed to the machine. Those large, loosely bound bundles which we so often see in the market result directly from a lack of the above-named essentials in the machine which produced them.

A very simple and primitive machine may have a large capacity, but if the bales are not heavy, compact and closely compressed, such a machine fails utterly of the object of its construction. The prime object in baling hay is to reduce its great bulk to a form that admits of its being marketed like any other product. To get full weights in a car, therefore, the bales must be uniform and closely compressed.

It necessarily follows that a machine to produce such bales must be very strong and ridgidly constructed so as to stand the pressure of the great power necessary to produce these results.

The resquisites first mentioned are possessed in a high degree by the Eli Continuous Travel press No. 1, a cut of which is shown herewith in operation in the neld. The baling chamber of this and other Eli horse power presses is made of 1-4 inch steel plate. The bale chamber corner angle plates are 3-8 inches thick. The powers of these presses are composed entirely of malleable iron which the manufacturers guarantee cannot be broken in operation. This obviates the danger of breaking which attaches to the ordinary cast-iron powers in frosty weather. Some idea of the power of the machines is afforded by the knowledge that a 500 lb. pull of the team applies over thirty thousand pounds pressure on the charge Surely this means compact bales, which in turn means lowest procurable freight rates. These presses can be telescoped for convenience in long hauls or in storing away when out of use

The Collins Plow Co., of Quincy, Ill., who makes these presses, also manufacture a full line of steam-power presses with automatic condensers, block-placers, signal-bells, self-feeders, etc. Write them for a catalogue and prices before buying.

Publishers' Notes.

"King Saul," the new book by J. Breckenridge Ellis, is a charmingly written history of this great Bible character. The book is just from the press, and is a handsomely bound volume, containing 281 pages and 16 illustrations.

Many who read the history of prominent men mentioned in the Bible fail to catch the many points of interest connected with their lives. Such books as "In the Days of Jehu" and "King Saul" will point out to the reader both the little and big points in the history of these prominent Old Testament characters. The price of "King Saul" is $1.00 postpaid.

H. W. Everest is certainly acknowledged authority concerning the merits of any literary work which he may have examined. After reading "Organic Evolution Considered" he expresses his opinion of the book as follows: "I regard 'Organic Evolution Considered,' by Prof. A. Fairhurst, as the strongest presentation of the obstacles in the way of evolution that I have read."

The Christian Publishing Company recently brought out this valuable book in splendid style, and the price is $1.50 postpaid.

AN OFFER TO AGENTS.

The Christian Publishing Co. is now prepared to offer special inducements to those who will sell "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." The book contains 530 pages and 55 illustrations. A small portion of your time can be profitably employed in selling this book. Spain and her colonies are ruled by the Pope. The war has revealed to the world the conditions of her people. The facts contained in this book are a strong indictment against the Romish Church. The author spared neither time nor means to secure only reliable facts, and what he says can be accepted as the truth.

Write the Christian Publishing Co, St. Louis, Mo., for their agents' terms on "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope."

The secular press is discovering the merits of Mrs. N. M. Vandervoort's story, "Across the Gulf." The literary editor of the Times, of Clinton, Ill., has written quite a lengthy review of this book. We give the following extract from this review:

"The plot is lain in the city of Rome, and deals with the early rise of Christianity and the persecutions of the early disciples. A most pathetic and thrilling love-story as a golden thread of fascination runs through the ever-curious and attractive details of the narrative. The authoress, with a simplicity and rythm of diction that charms either the scholar or common reader, throws the curtain back on the life of Rome and its people as history paints it; hence the work is not only attractive, but instructive also.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

HUGH CARLIN, or, Truth's Triumph. By J. H. STARK. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Hugh Carlin" is a well-planned, well-developed religious story, and deals with some of the modern phases of religion in a very practical and striking manner. It is the opinion of many who have read the story that it will take high rank as a religious novel in our literature.

Let all the congregations purchase a sufficient number of "Hugh Carlin," and put it into the homes throughout the land. The good it would accomplish could not be estimated.—D. N. DEJARNETT.

Such a book cannot help but have a great influence for good over the mind of any young lady or gentleman, who might have the privilege of reading it. Such grand truths presented in such a fascinating way must not be lost.—D. N. MELICK.

WAYS OF WORKING. By OREON E. SCOTT. Paper, 10c.

A Handbook of Suggestions for Wide-Awake Christian Endeavorers.

AFTER PENTECOST, WHAT? By JAMES M. CAMPBELL, author of "Unto the Uttermost." 12mo, cloth, 297 pages, $1.00.

This work is a discussion of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit in its relation to modern Christological thought. The following Table of Contents will give an idea of the scope of the book: Introduction, The Significance of Pentecost, A Spiritual Christ, A Spiritual God, Spiritual Worship, A Spiritual Apprehension of Truth, An Influx of Spiritual Life, The Spiritual Man, Spiritual Holiness, Spiritual Authority, The Distribution of Spiritual Operations, The Impartation of Spiritual Power, The Production of Spiritual Works, The Formation of a Spiritual Society, The Inauguration of Spiritual Movements, The Establishment of a Spiritual Kingdom.

ROSA EMERSON; or, A Young Woman's Influence. A Story of the Lodge, the Church and the School. By JOHN AUG. WILLIAMS. 375 pages, cloth, $1.00.

Rosa represents most of the beautiful female virtues, and young Thornton is as bright and noble and fearless as a knight. Their love is strong and true, without the heartaches and heartbreaks which so frequently send the Cupid-smitten unfortunates dangerously near the mad-house. The whole-soulness that left no stone unturned to find the heir of the estate of the father French, and succeeded at last in laying the prize on the head of Simon Bugg, who was not a bugg at all, is as wild and beautiful as the story of Pythias and Damon. Here is another diamond, first in the rough, but polished, in the old way, with his own dust, until Simon French Stuart, as he proves to be, comes fearfully near getting the crown of heroism. I like the fine selection of characters, with which to expose hypocrisy and sham. Faithfulness in the discharge of duty is made to rank high above sectarian orthodoxy, and to throw a white light on the miserable sectarian apologies for religious conviction and Christian living. I hope the author will receive a liberal patronage, and the book a wide reading.—D. R. DUNGAN.

STUDIES IN ACTS; or, The New Testament Book of Beginnings. By W. J. LHAMON, M. A. Introduction by A. McLean, Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Large 12mo, cloth, 416 pages, $1.25.

This book is not a commentary; it is not a collection of sermons; but it is a volume of essays, in which the author seizes upon the most critical and interesting portions of the Book of Acts, the strategic forces, and mountain peaks of its history. These he treats with a charm of style, a vigor of thought and mastery of material that have called forth the hearty praise of many readers, though the book is but recently from the press. 116 pages at the end of the volume are devoted to Notes and Comments. A few are by the author, but for the most part they are selections from first-class authorities, and are exceedingly helpful upon many difficult and important passages.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Current history is now demonstrating the fact that peace hath her conflicts no less bitter than those of war, if they are less fatal. Since the meeting of the Cortes in Madrid both Houses have been discussing the war behind closed doors, but enough has leaked out to indicate some very stormy scenes. Republicans, Carlists, Conservatives and Liberals are each bringing charges and countercharges, but in spite of all this Senor Sagasta expects to have passed the bill authorizing the alienation of territory as provided for in the protocol between that government and the United States. Meanwhile, in our own country there appears to be a widening breach between Secretary Alger and Gen. Miles and other generals. A great deal of complaint has been lodged against Secretary Alger's management of war, especially as relates to the distribution of supplies, and he has made an earnest request of the President for a thorough and searching investigation of the war department. He is joined in this request by Adj. Gen. Corbin. It is believed the President will grant this request and order such an investigation. Gen. Miles is criticised for certain reported interviews in which he has indulged too freely in the criticism of his superiors, including, it is said, even the President. A judicial investigation of the general conduct of the war is much preferable to these mutual recriminations that have been going on for some time.

The unspeakable Turk once more is getting in his work against the Christians in the Islands of Crete. It is reported that eight hundred Christians have been slaughtered by the Bashi Bazouks. There are eight warships in the harbor and the British war vessel, Camperdown, has been used already in bombarding Candia with a view of quelling the outbreak. The admirals of the international fleet are said to have decided on disarming the Bashi Bazouks and in demanding the surrender of the instigators of the disorder. The Turkish troops, so far from making any effort to prevent this butchery, are reported to have joined in the slaughter. The only permanent remedy for these frequent disorders is the removal of the Turkish troops from Crete, or Candia, the modern name of the island, and replacing them by troops that will maintain order. Edem Pasha, who is in command of four thousand Turkish soldiers on the island, claims that he is powerless to control the Turkish mob, but his sincerity is doubted, and he has been told that he will be held responsible for further distnrbances.

The thirty-second annual encampment of the G. A. R. was held in Cincinnati last week. A royal welcome was extended by the Queen City to the old soldiers. A motion to make eligible to membership in the Grand Army the soldiers who have served their country in the late war with Spain was laid on the table. Resolutions were passed endorsing the management of the war by President McKinley and Secretary Alger, and criticising somewhat severely the management of the Pension Office by the present commissioner. The resolutions declare in favor of a more liberal interpretation of the pension laws instead of refusing pensions to those who honestly deserve them, on mere technical grounds. Commander-in-Chief Gobin was succeeded in command of the organization by Col. James A. Sexton, of Chicago. Philadelphia secures the next encampment, defeating Denver in a contest for the honor.

The American commission for looking into the condition of affairs in Hawaii, and making recommendations as to suitable legislation for the islands, is on the ground and making considerable headway with its work. The members of the commission are mingling freely with the people in different parts of the island, explaining the nature of their new relations with the United States, and receiving the free expressions of the opinions of the natives as to how they regard the annexation. Public meetings are being held where the commissioners speak and where the native Hawaiians are allowed to express their sentiments. One of the questions which the natives pressed with great earnestness on Messrs. Cullom, Hitt and Frear was whether this union was only a temporary war measure, or whether it was to be permanent. Senator Cullom assured them that it was a permanent arrangement, and that so long as the American Union shall endure, so long will the Hawaiian Islands be a part of the United States of America. They wanted to know if their rights would be respected the same as Americans, or whether they were to be treated as the North American Indians. The commissioners assured them that their rights would be sacredly regarded and that they might still cherish the tenderest regards for their native land, just as the citizens of our states do not yield their love of native state because of its connection with the American Union. No doubt this mingling with the natives, hearing their views, answering their questions and removing misconceptions will have much to do in reconciling that part of the native population that was opposed to annexation.

United States Ambasador, John Hay, being about to leave England to assume the offiice of Secretary of State, was waited upon by a committee of the Anglo-American League, headed by its chairman, James Bryce, who made an address in which, after expressing regrets for Col. Hay's departure, he said:

> It has been your fortune to represent your country here at a time of exceptional interest, when the war, now happily ended, gave occasion for an expression of the feelings of affection and sympathy toward the United States which the British people have long entertained, but never before have they been so conspicuously manifested. You carry back the assurance of the depth and strength of these feelings. The principle that there ought to be permanent friendship and cordial co-operation between the British Empire and the American Republic is one that all parties and all statesmen here are agreed in regarding as a fundamental principle of British foreign policy, and by it the whole people desire that their government be guided.
> We rejoice to believe that in your country corresponding sentiments are entertained, and that a corresponding principle is now largely accepted. Knowing that no one holds these convictions more firmly than yourself, or can express them in clearer or more felicitious terms, we gladly acknowledge the great service you have rendered to both nations and console ourselves on your retirement by the reflection that you are called to duties in your own country even wider in their scope and graver in their responsibilities and more important in the results that they may secure.

During the past week the President and Cabinet had to consider a request from Spain that that government be allowed to send gunboats to the Philippine Islands where American authority has not yet been established in order to afford security to Spanish interests. It was claimed that Spanish subjects were being badly treated by the insurgents in various parts of the islands. The President and his Cabinet were of one mind in refusing this request, rightly supposing that to accord Spain such a privilege at this time would be to cast doubts on the sovereignty of the United States in the Philippines. This may indeed have been Spain's ultimate motive in making the request. Admiral Dewey was advised by cable that it was the wish of the government that he ascertain what outrages were committed by the insurgents and take steps to put a stop to them immediately. He was instructed to see that Spanish interests had the same protection accorded to other nations. It is believed that Admiral Dewey is able to take care of himself and to preserve order, as the squadron under his command will soon be thoroughly renovated, and has already been reinforced by the Monterey and Monadnock.

British dominion has been notably increased by the recent victory of British arms on the Nile. Gen. Kitchener, with an army of 24,000 made up of British and Egyptian soldiers, gained a decisive victory recently over the dervishes under command of the Mahdi. This battle resulted in the capture of Khartoum, or strictly speaking the site of Khartoum, for the original city has been destroyed, and the opening up of a large part of Africa to British rule and civilization. It will have important bearings, too, on the slave trade, for wherever British dominion extends the slave trade is prohibited. The campaign of which the capture of Khartoum is an incident, has for its object the occupation and control of a broad section of Africa extending from the southern cape to the mouth of the Nile. The report of the Anglo-Egyptian army in the battle above referred to, on September 2, is estimated at two hundred, while that of the dervishes was of course very much larger. The dervishes fought with great bravery, but were no match for the solid and well-drilled ranks of the British. The results of this victory of British arms in the Nile is likely to be far-reaching.

On Saturday last the Empress of Austria was murdered at Geneva by an anarchist named Luigini. The heads of the leading nations of the world immediately telegraphed their condolence to the emperor, who was almost prostrated at the news of her assassination. After an autopsy, ordered by Emperor Joseph, the body of the empress was embalmed and prepared for transportation to Vienna on Thursday of this week and for burial on Saturday. The assassination of Empress Elizabeth by an anarchist has renewed the alarm of rulers of the nations of Europe from that quarter. Not long ago an attempt was made upon the czar's life and some have supposed that the killing of the Empress of Austria is a part of a conspiracy against them; but so far no evidence has been discovered to support this theory. But the deed is none the less sinful on that account and will only increase the profound horror the nations and their rulers have for the adherents of a doctrine so dangerous to any civilization. And now that their hatred of rulers is turned toward the gentler sex and a woman of splendid attainments and record for good deeds is slain by one of that school, the horror of the Christian world of such a doctrine as nihilism will only be intensified.

The rapid gain of the United States in her invasion of the commerce of the world is shown by the British Consul at Stockholm, Sweden, by an important series of statistical tables just issued by the Swedish Government, covering the commerce and production of the world in a series of five-year periods, from 1871-5 to 1891-5. From these tables we learn that in the iron production of the world the United States has increased its output from 16.1 to 30.9 per cent., while that of Great Britain and Ireland has decreased from 46.3 to 27.5 per cent. of the world's production in the last twenty years. In the coal field, for the same period, the United States production has advanced from 17 to 30 per cent. of the world's output, while Great Britain and Ireland have decreased from 47 to 34 per cent. In the cotton consumption Great Britain has increased one-fourth, while that of the rest of Europe and the United States has doubled. In railways the increase of the United States is about eight times greater than Germany and about 23 times greater than Great Britain and Ireland. In wheat production the United States ranks one-fifth, the British Colonies about one-eighth and Germany less than one-twentieth of the total production of the world. A further analysis of the table indicates that the United States alone produces about 22 per cent. of the gold of the world, and over 35 per cent. of the silver of the world. The per centage of increase of population in the leading conntries as shown in the table places the increase in population in the United States during the last ten years at 24 per cent., the British Colonies and dependencies increased 10 per cent., Germany 12 per cent., Russia 11 per cent., Great Britain and Ireland 8.77 per cent., and France 78 per cent.

THE HEROISM OF JESUS.

There seems to be a tendency to hero-worship in all men. So far as this is the admiration of high and noble qualities which are displayed by others, it is both commendable and inevitable in good men. Why should we not admire the qualities of courage and devotion to right and patriotism, or the unselfish love of country, when we see them exemplified in a high degree in any of our fellowmen? What we call hero-worship is perhaps nothing more than the tribute which our common humanity pays to a high order of talent or genius, consecrated to high and worthy ends. To be sure, there is a lower form of hero-worship which appeals to men who are influenced by traits and qualities of a lower character; but this is by no means so universal as the admiration for the higher qualities displayed by the true heroes of the people.

Among the many elements of greatness in the character of Jesus of Nazareth we should not fail to recognize the high quality of heroism which he manifested and fully exemplified in his life. There is abundant reason why Jesus should be regarded, not only as the hero of redemption, but of humanity. Surely, no one among the sons of men has displayed a courage so lofty and unselfish as that which characterized him throughout his whole career. Consider a few of the ways in which that moral heroism was manifested.

He consented to be poor when he might have been rich because he saw that he could accomplish his mission for humanity better in that way. He became poor that we might be rich. Not many men voluntarily choose poverty rather than wealth, and when this is done in the interest of the human race, it manifests the true quality of heroism.

Again, Jesus selected the life of humiliation and suffering rather than one of kingship and earthly glory. He refused the crown when it was offered to him, and turned away from the temptation of being a great earthly ruler to tread the pathway of humiliation and lowly service. He did this because an earthly crown would have hindered him from accomplishing what he desired to do for the race. How few men reject position and power to pursue higher aims!

Jesus entered upon the work of establishing a kingdom of God whose nature and principles were out of harmony with the expectations and desires of the Jewish people. This brought him into antagonism with the religious authorities of his age. He knew this would be the case, and yet he unflinchingly adhered to his program in spite of the gathering storm which he foresaw was to break upon him. This requires courage of the highest and rarest kind. Men love to be popular. They prefer to do that which will please the people. Jesus Christ chose to do that which was best for the people, though it brought him into conflict with the Jewish leaders and resulted in his death. That is true moral heroism which pursues its goal at the cost of life.

Not only did Jesus offend the Pharisees and Scribes by his teaching and by his manner of life, but even those who acknowledged him as Master were offended at his sayings, and many of them turned away from him. There is, perhaps, not a m pathetic scene in the whole life of Jesus than when a large company of his disciples forsook him because of some of his "hard sayings," and he, turning to the apostles, said, "Will ye also go away?" How it must have cut him to the heart to see his followers turn away from him! And yet he must tell them the truth, even if the telling of it leaves him a lone Man, without followers and without friends. This is heroism of the highest type. How often does a preacher hesitate to declare the plain truth from his pulpit for fear of offending those to whom he sustains the relation of teacher and on whom he depends for his support! What a temptation it is to tone down the message so as to make it agreeable to those who need it in its plainest and most direct form!

One of the greatest temptations which comes to an editor of a religious journal is to make all his editorial utterances harmonize with the views of his readers, and to "play to the gallery," instead of delivering the message which his readers need. The editor who has never written an editorial which he knew at the time would offend some of his readers and cost him some subscribers, is not following in the footsteps of his Master, who uttered truths very unpalatable even to his friends and which cost him many of his followers. We admire this heroism in the case of Christ as we look back at it across the centuries, but we deprecate it and often oppose it when we see it manifested in our own day.

Whoever is chosen of God to be a leader of the people must, in the nature of things, if he be seeking continually the divine guidance, see certain truths and certain applications of truth sooner than a majority of others. If he lack this quality of spiritual insight, then he is not a leader of men in spiritual things. But if he see the truth and declare it not, in love and with due patience, he shows the lack of that quality which we so much admire in Jesus of Nazareth—moral heroism.

Jesus pronounced a blessing upon those who would not be offended at his sayings. He promises the same blessing to all those who are not "disobedient to the heavenly vision," but who follow the truth as God gives them to see the truth. The example of Jesus is a constant challenge to every man to be loyal to his convictions of truth, and not to shun to declare the counsel of God as the needs of men may require. May this quality of heroism in the life and character of Jesus find ample illustration in the leaders of the church of the present day!

THE HEBREW FINANCIAL SYSTEM.

The intimate historic connection of Christianity with Judaism makes the latter an intensely interesting study. The religion of the people of Israel prepared the way for the Christian religion. It is impossible to understand the principles, precepts and practices of the Christians in New Testament times without an understanding of the customs of the Hebrew people. The New Testament points back to the Old; the Old Testament points forward to the New. In our study, therefore, of the money question, from the biblical point of view, it is important for us to study the financial system of the Jews as individuals in their ancient writings.

The law of Moses was explicit and emphatic in what it required of the people in the matter of finance. The law said, "Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year" (Deut. 14:22). "All the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord. And if a man will at all redeem aught of his tithes, he shall add thereto the fifth part thereof. And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord. He shall not search whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it; and if he change it at all, then both it and the change thereof shall not be redeemed. These are the commandments which the Lord commanded Moses for the children of Israel in Mout Sinai" (Lev. 27:30-34).

This is certainly definite and emphatic. The requirement of Jehovah cannot be mistaken on this point. The Jew of the olden time knew what would please, and also what would displease his God in the use of property. The author of the epistle to the Hebrews says that "the sons of Levi" had a "commandment to take tithes of the people." But the Levites, according to the law, were required to pay tithes of the tithes coming into their hands. Read the following:

"Thus speak unto the Levites and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithes which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up a heave offering of it for the Lord, even a tenth part of the tithe" (Num. 18:26).

Not a man was permitted to escape. All were required to pay a definite proportion of their income to the Lord. The law says that when men appeared before the Lord to worship "they shall not appear empty; every man shall give as he is able" (Deut. 16:16-17).

And besides the payment of the annual tithe mentioned above a triennial tithe was required. The following is the law on this point:

"At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithes of thine increase the same year, and shall lay it up within thy gates; and the Levite, because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come and shall eat and be satisfied; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest" (Deut. 14:28-29).

It seems that this triennial feast was offered with unusual solemnity. Its payment was a matter of no ordinary importance. Having given this tithe to "the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless and the widow," the donor was required to "say before the Lord:"

"I have brought away the hallowed things out of mine house, and also have given them unto the Levite, and unto the stranger, to the fatherless and to the widow, according to all thy commandments which thou hast commanded me; I have not transgressed thy commandments, neither have I forgotten them; I have not eaten thereof, in my mourning, neither have I taken away aught thereof for any unclean use, nor given aught thereof for the dead; but I have harkened to the voice of the Lord my God, and have done according to all that thou hast commanded me." After which he was required to offer the following prayer:

"Look down from thy holy habitation from heaven, and bless thy people Israel, and the land which thou has given us, as thou swearest unto our fathers, a land that floweth with milk and honey" (Deut. 26: 12-15).

But the payment of tithes did not begin with the law of Moses. Why should it terminate with the abrogation of that law? Abraham paid tithes to Melchisedek. "And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will help me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I can come to my Father's house in peace; then shall the Lord be my God, . . . and all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee" (Gen. 28:20-22). This was previous to the giving of the law by Moses.

Obedience to this specific and oft-repeated requirement of Jehovah was sometimes neglected by Israel. What was the result? Hear these words:

"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have I robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse." Why? "For ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." How were they to get rid of the curse? Answer: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, . . . and prove me now, herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it; and I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not dstroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field. And all nations shall call you blessed, saith the Lord of hosts" (Mal. 3:8-12). This was not only the way of freedom from the curse; but it was also the way to an abounding prosperity.

The right use of money—a use of money for the good of man and so also for the glory of God—was an unfailing feature of a genuine religious revival among the Hebrew people. They did not know how to be religious without giving money. Besides the payment of tithes, at the same time, there were free-will offerings. The Lord, in the language above quoted from Malachi, speaks of "tithes and offerings"—not tithes alone, but of "tithes and offerings." Read at your leisure the account of the revival when Hezekiah was king in Jerusalem, written in 2 Chronicles 31:5-10. Examine also the accounts of revivals in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah, described in the books bearing their names. There was also a great revival when Josiah was on the throne of Judah. In all of these instances money was given in abundance.

From the foregoing quotations it is evident (1) that one tenth of the produce of the soil was assigned by Jehovah for the maintenance of the Levites; (2) that out of this the Levites were required to dedicate one tenth to God, probably for the use of the high priest; (3) that a tithe, or in all probability a second tithe, was to be applied to festival purposes; (4) that in every third year, either this festival tithe or a third tenth was to be eaten in company with the poor and the Levites. The question arises, Were there three thithes taken in this third year, or is the third the second only under a different description? This question cannot be discussed in this place. Enough has been said to show that God claims as his own, i. e., for his use, a portion of the income of his people Israel, and that this was not less than a tenth. THE TITHE WAS THE MINIMUM.

What was the foundation of this claim? It was the fact that all belongs, in the final analysis, to God; that even the ability to accumulate property is from him. Read, please, the followihg passages:

"But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God." Why? "For it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth" (Deut. 8:18). David said, "Who am I, and what is my people that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? For all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee" (1 Chron. 29:14). Through the prophet Haggai Jehovah said, "The silver is mine and the gold is mine" (Hag. 2:8). "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein; for he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods" (Psa. 24:1-2). These words show the basis on which Jehovah's claim to a portion of the annual income of the Hebrew people rested.

But is there not the same foundation for a similar claim on us? Is it not still true that God gives ability to gain property? Is it not now true that the silver and the gold belong to God? Is it not true to-day that the earth and its fullness belong to him? Is it not, therefore, true that when we contribute to the work of the Master we only give to God a portion of what belongs to him by an indefeasable right? The man, therefore, who keeps all that he gets—using no part of it for the good of man and thus for the glory of God—is guilty of the basest kind of robbery. He robs God.

IS OUR CIVILIZATION A FAILURE?

C. A. Conant's article in the North American Review for September, "The Economic Basis of Imperialism," furnishes food for serious thought. Indirectly the article seems to have been written in justification of the probable annexation of the Philippine Islands to the Uuited States. The basis of the argument in favor of the advanced need of an extension of our commercial interests is the need for a new outlet for the profitable investment of capital. Mr. Conant has given his readers quite a collation of figures to show how profitable earnings on capital have decreased in the last few years in civilized nations, and to this he attributes the present restless condition of the financial world and consequent reaching out towards uncivilized lands for new investments. But what is strange in Mr. Conant's view is his final conclusion as to the final outlet for capital. Here we desire to quote his words:

There are three important solutions of this enormous congestion of capital in excess of legitimate demand. One of these is the socialistic solution of the abandonment of saving, the application of the whole earnings of the labor to current consumption, and the support of old age out of taxes levied upon the production of the community. It will be long before this solution will be accepted in a comprehensive form in any modern civilized state. The second solution is the creation of new demands at home for the absorption of capital. This has occurred at several previous stages of the world's history and is likely to continue as long as human desires continue expansible. But there has never been a time before when the proportion of capital to be absorbed was so great in proportion to possible new demands. Means for building more bicycle factories than are needed, and for laying more electric railway than are able to pay dividends, have been taken out of current savings within the last few years, without producing any marked effect upon their amount and without doing more, at the most, than to stay the downward course of the rate of interest. Aside from the waste of capital in war, which is only a form of consumption, there remains, therefore, as the final resource, the equipment of new countries with the means of production and exchange.

Here, then, is pessimism, certainly, in its worst form. If this conclusion must be admitted, then is our civilization along with every other civilization, like those of the past—a failure. To prove this we have only to look forward to a time inevitably coming when there remaineth no more new countries to equip, and ask, What then? It will not do to reply by saying that the present living and dying nations will then have changed places, for that would not be progress, but history repeating itself. The weakness of this argument, however, is glaringly apparent. In the first place, we believe that it quite dangerously underestimates the extent and value of internal or home demands for capital; but the most serious fault we have with the argument and its logic is its narrowness. It limits profits on capital to an increase in its kind only. The arts, sciences, schools, trades, professions and all are set aside as unprofitable fields for the use of capital beyond their first establishment in a new country. Neither is the mental, moral and physical condition of the masses recognized in the premises by the eye of capital. Its trend is simply toward its own in kind and along the lines of syndicated investments and national loans. And furthermore it makes it the primary end of governments to seek out profitable fields for its capital, which is a prostitution of the true purpose for which all governments should exist—the mental, moral and physical welfare of all citizens. Our criticism of present governments is that they are already too much committed to just that kind of business. We do not believe in buying just to consume for the sake of trade, neither do we believe in turning our Christian civilization into a barbarous scramble for money, especially with the odds already in favor of the legally favored. Let us have more of the kingdom of heaven in our hearts, whether we add more territory to our country or not. Let us have a little more interest in an outlet for surplus labor and the question of an outlet for the profitable investment of capital will not be so difficult. One of its reasons for seeking undeveloped countries is that they abound in cheap labor. Profitable employment for laborers is one of the corner stones of our civilization and factors of progress as well as the profitable investment of syndicated capital. Our reasons for the extension of our national influence do not rest upon the interest of capital alone, nor of our own people alone, but in the welfare of our common humanity. W. W. H.

The Yearbook of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America gives figures with regard to 1,415 associations, with a membership of upwards of 240,000, and owning real estate worth more than $20,000,000.

Hour of Prayer.

PEACE AND PROSPERITY.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Sept. 21, 1898.)

Peace be within thy walls,
And prosperity within thy palaces.
—Psa. 122:7.

This psalm is an outburst of patriotic and religious devotion toward Jerusalem—the center of Jewish hopes and Jewish worship. Thither the tribes went up to their great feasts to worship God and to remember their national deliverance. They went with gladness of heart, much as our tribes now gather in their annual conventions. There was the temple, the pride of every Jewish heart and the symbol of their national unity. There Jehovah manifested his presence and made known his favor to Israel. It is not strange that concerning such a city the psalmist could exclaim:

If I forget thee, O Jerusalem,
Let my right hand forget her cunning;
Let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth,
If I remember thee not.

The prayer of the psalmist for Jerusalem is, that it may enjoy peace and prosperity—the peace which comes of God's approval, and the prosperity which is the reward of righteousness. There is no peace for the wicked, nor is there genuine prosperity for those who forget God and neglect his worship.

Jerusalem, or Zion, in its spiritual sense, in the Old Testament, stands for the church in the New Testament. What the psalmist asked for Jerusalem we may well ask for the church of God—peace and prosperity. We should not desire for the church the peace which is purchased at the price of truth, or compromise with evil, but the peace of God, which results from the union of the soul with God in Christ. Few blessings are more to be desired than such a peace.

We are compelled to admit that the church as a whole is not enjoying this peace. It is rent by divisions and its peace is marred by unholy strifes and jealousies. Not until the church regains its lost unity can it enjoy, to the full, the legacy of peace which Jesus left it.

Candor must compel the admission, too, that the prosperity of the church is not what it ought to be. It is moving forward slowly, instead of advancing by leaps and bounds. The hindering causes are the worldliness and carnality of the church, and the absence of that apostolic faith and zeal which enabled the early church to suffer the loss of its goods cheerfully and to endure bitter persecution for the sake of the gospel. In praying for the prosperity of Zion let us remember that we must seek to remove the obstacles to such prosperity. Not until then can we say truly,

Peace be within thy walls,
And prosperity within thy palaces.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the God of peace, we pray that Thou wilt give peace to Thy divided and troubled church. May its divisions and its backslidings be healed, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding abide within its walls. Grant, too, that all hindrances to its spiritual prosperity may be removed, and that it may purge itself of all sinful conformity to the world and go forward on its triumphant career, until the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of Thee and Thy salvation, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

OR MACATAWA MUSINGS.

During the past week Michigan has be welcoming home the boys it sent to t front in the war for "Cuba Libre." T return has been marked by pathos as w as gladness. Many of the brave fello who went forth with full health and elast step, came home emaciated, fever-strick and weary, while others were left behi nevermore to return to their homes a loved ones. It is well that the people ha received these returning heroes with eve mark of tender affection and care, a welcomed them with ringing bells a shrieking whistles. They laid their liv on the altar of their country, and wheth in Southern camp or on Cuban battle fie they have faced death for the flag we lo and for the extension of that liberty which it is the glorious symbol. Welcon to home, to parents, to wives, to friend to sweethearts, and to all the blessings peace and domestic life!

Labor Day, on the 5th inst., seems have been more generally observed tha usual and, as a rule, more sensibly ob served. Instead of a hot parade throug the streets, there was in many places quiet rest at home with wife and litt ones in the forenoon, and meetings in t parks in the afternoon, when there we music and speeches on questions whic have to do with the cause of labor a laboring men. This method of observin the day will tend to cultivate closer rel tions between the different classes of lab and between labor and capital. Such day might well be used for cultivatin better relations between employers an employees. No class of men deserve mo respect and kinder treatment than th great army of wage-workers, by whos honest toil the national wealth is enhance and the comforts and necessities of li provided. The true nobility in this Repub lic are those who by labor with brain brawn, or both, contribute to the welfare society and to the care of the helples Only idlers and the vicious, who prey upo others, are beneath the respect of decen people. Let us seek to make labor mo respectable and idleness more odious.

What a change a few hours can brin about in the lake! This morning early was as tranquil as a millpond or a land locked bay. But soon the blue sky wa flecked with flying clouds, and the gentl zephyrs stiffened into a brisk breeze. The whitecaps began to appear, and dar shadows from passing clouds rested upo the lake in weird forms, like the shades o monsters in the upper deep, making marked contrast with the green surfac where the sun was shining. As the win increased the waves have grown into roar ing billows that are now thundering on th shore, promising a lively time to those wh cross the lake to-night. O, fickle lake Thou art as changeable as thou art beauti ful! Thou art as responsive to the wind that blow upon thee as public sentiment i to the demands of Fashion, or as politician are to the behests of the liquor power Roll on, thou great inland sea, until th roud waves are stayed by the same Almighty Fiat that put them in motion!

The abuse of the revival meeting is manifesting itself in a strong reaction against what are known as "great meetings." A pastor, writing to a brother preacher about a meeting recently, wrote: "The reason why I want you is because you do not hold great meetings. The need of many of our churches is some one to help them to recover from the effects of the great meetings they have had in the past. What green apples are to a small boy, that is what many of our protracted meetings are to the church." Too true. And yet, let us have protracted meetings, but see to it that only the ripe fruit of gospel truth be presented to church and people. First, be sure that the converts are converted to Jesus Christ and to his plan of life, then the more converts the better. But it is a sad mistake to lay the emphasis on quantity rather than quality.

Every day there are storm-shutters going up in the windows of the cottages as they are closed for the winter, and they wear a lonely, silent aspect. An uninhabited house is not an interesting object. It is the sound of human voices and the presence of human faces which makes a house look homelike. But there were never so many people here at the Park at this time in September as at present. We have been absent on the last two Lord's days, but we hear of good meetings on Sundays, with a good attendance. Still the boats are crowded each night, and sleeping berths are hard to get. We are going later, "to avoid the rush." We like these calmer, cooler days, and are trying to take a little more rest, so as to go home feeling as if we had had a vacation.

The editor of this paper had the pleasure of attending the closing sessions of the Michigan State Missionary Convention, held at Saginaw last week. Arriving at noon Saturday, most of the business of the convention had been transacted, and a majority of the preachers had returned home to occupy their pulpits on Lord's day. It was our privilege to deliver two discourses on Lord's day to large audiences. The work of the convention will be found reported elsewhere by the corresponding secretary, Alexander McMillan. The feeling was that substantial progress had been made during the past year. Converts are not made in Michigan as rapidly as in some other states, but they have staying qualities which make it worth while to push evangelistic work in that state. The preachers we met were mostly young men, but they seemed zealous for the cause. Our home was with Ira Billman, pastor of the East Saginaw church, where the convention was held. This church is finely located on one of the leading thoroughfares of the city, and the house is an excellent one. It was our first meeting with Bro. Billman, as he came among us from another religious body a few years ago. We found him a genial host, and his wife a genial hostess. Bro. B. is a poet, too, of marked ability, as a volume of his verses, "Bluebird Notes," amply testifies. The church at Saginaw seems to be prospering under his care. We greatly enjoyed our visit with the Michigan brethren, and in the house of Bro. Billman.

Questions and Answers.

What is the resurrection referred to in Col. 3:1: "If, then, ye were raised together with Christ, seek the things that are above," etc. In other words, from what were these Colossians raised? T. M. Hixson.
Hannibal, Mo.

It is the resurrection from moral and spiritual death to a new and better life, as set forth in their baptism. They were raised from their former manner of life to the life which is in Christ Jesus. "And you, being dead through your trespasses and the uncircumcision of your flesh, you, I say, did he quicken together with him, having forgiven us all our trespasses" (Col. 2:13). This verse, in connection with the 12th verse, which asserts the burial and resurrection of the believer with Christ in baptism, "through faith in the working of God, who raised him [Christ] from the dead," leaves no room for doubt as to the kind of resurrection referred to by Paul. As Christ was raised from the dead, so these Colossian Christians, being quickened by him in their moral nature, through faith in him, declared that faith in their baptism, an emblem of Christ's resurrection from the grave and of their own resurrection to a new life in him.

1. What does it take to constitute membership in the Christian Church?

2. If withdrawn from what would be the regular procedure to get back into the church?

3. Does the Christian Church govern itself by majority vote of the body, or by a board of elders ruling arbitrarily?

4. In employing a pastor is it the custom of the Chrtstian Church to decide on the pastor by a majority vote, and instruct the elders to make terms with him, or is it the custom for the elders to employ without reference to the will of the congregation?

Yours truly, Mrs. J. C.

1. Faith in Jesus Christ, accompanied by repentance for sin, and manifested in obedience to Christ in baptism.

2. Confession of the wrong for which the person was excluded, seeking of forgiveness from God and from the church, and application for membership on this ground.

3. Each congregation is a self-governing body, but it acts ordinarily through a board of elders, or elders and deacons, who should act, not "arbitrarily," but according to the Scriptures in all things wherein the Scriptures give instruction, and in all other matters according to the spirit which the Scriptures inculcate.

4. The custom in our best churches is for a committee, usually the elders, to enter into correspondence with some minister, after having first convinced themselves of his worthiness and fitness, and if they find he can be secured his name is submitted to the church with such evidence as they have procured of his ability and character, and the church is asked to vote on extending him a call. The elders should never act finally in such matters without consulting the wishes of the church. This would be unjust both to the church and to the preacher who is called.

Will it not be quite in harmony with our plea for Christian union to work with the Baptists, in a Roman Catholic country where there are no Disciples of Christ, rather than to make one division more among the Protestant workers, whose forces are already much weakened by their lack of union? I mean join the Baptists as far as evangelical work is concerned, but keep, of course, a distinct individuality of your own as a Christian who refuses all party name and human creed. E. S.

Undoubtedly so. There is no good reason why Baptists and Disciples should not cooperate much more than they do in this country; but in a Roman Catholic country, like France, where this question originates, there are additional reasons for union of action, when such action can be had without the sacrifice of any principle. Often it is the means of extending union principles more widely than they otherwise would be.

THE PROGRESS OF SCIENCE.

J. W. LOWBER.

While the greatest philosopher of the world lived in ancient Greece, and the Greeks made many important scientific discoveries, the present age is eminently the scientific age of the world. The most important discoveries have been made within the past four hundred years. Among the ancients a knowledge of the sciences and arts was confined to the few, and the masses were overshadowed by the grossest ignorance and superstition. Since the invention of printing, everything has changed, for through the medium of the press knowledge can be very rapidly disseminated.

During the middle ages kings and nobles were almost totally ignorant of literature. Many of them were unable to write their names. The revival of classic literature in the fifteenth century changed the whole face of things. When Constantinople was taken by the Turks, Greek scholars were forced West and they gave a great impetus to the cause of civilization and to the advancement of letters. The inventive powers of man were thoroughly aroused and a glorious age of invention and discovery dawned.

The old school of scientists became very much alarmed at the new awakening. They could readily see what would, in the near future, be their doom. So they made use of the civil and ecclesiastical power to check the new doctrine. Such men as Copernicus and Galileo were rushed away to prison, and Luther was met with the most determined opposition. The excitement became so great that the fanatical rulers established that infernal court—the Inquisition. Racks, chains, scourges and thumbscrews filled its execution rooms; and the work carried on in the chambers of this horrid tribunal was calculated to strike terror to the bravest hearts. No tortures invented by untutored savages could compare to the blood-curdling horrors perpetrated by these inhuman monsters upon their victims. All Europe was for a time drenched with blood; but truth crushed to the earth did rise again.

The cruelties of the Inquisition could not stop the scientific progress of the age. Inventions and discoveries were being constantly made. America was discovered, and a new field for liberty and progress was opened. It is not surprising that the Spaniards now blame Columbus for discovering the New World. The invention of the telescope gave a new impetus to the science of astronomy. The old Ptolemaic theory fell to the ground, and the truths advocated by Tycbo Brahe, Galileo, Copernicus and Kepler were now fully established, and believed in by all thinking persons. The moon with its rugged mountains was seen coursing around the earth. Venus, the beautiful starry queen; Saturn, with his brilliant rings; Jupiter, with his belts and resplendent moons, were seen traveling round the sun. The sublime scenery of the heavens filled the mind of man with wonder and astonishment, and the reformation in science and religion went hand in hand. The Reformers were persecuted by false science as well as false religion. In fact, the old physicists stimulated both church and state to persecute the newscience.

The reformers in both science and religion were cruelly persecuted. Galileo, when an old man, was brought before the Inquisition. The tribunal, which was composed of the old scientists, pronounced him a deluded teacher and lying heretic. They intended to subject him to the severest torture and death. Galileo was an old man and could not endure such a terrible death. He knelt on the crucifix, with one hand on the Bible, and renounced all. When he arose he said to one of the attendants, "The earth does move for all that!" Science will not fortify a man for persecution as will religion. Martin Luther did not retract as did Galileo. Nothing could have forced Luther to retract. Religion develops manhood as nothing else can. We cannot endorse the conduct of Galileo, for he should have died for his convictions. The martyrs of the Reformation did much to advance the cause of truth. Religion and scientific Reformation have always gone hand in hand. In fact, true religion is the brightest science in the world. As Christianity is the pure religion, which contains the truth in all the rest, so it is the brightest of the sciences, for it is adapted to the development of the highest elements in the nature of man. The Christianity of the Bible represents the highest culture to which it is possible for man to attain.

WHO WROTE THE FOURTH GOSPEL?

C. A. YOUNG.

I have stated the question in this form because modern biblical scholars prefer to use the terminology, "The author of the First Gospel," "The author of the Fourth Gospel" in their New Testament introductions, rather than "The Gospel of Matthew," "The Gospel of John." Furthermore, it would be unscientific to naively prejudice our conclusion by asking: "Who wrote the Gospel of John?" We must admit that the authorship of the Fourth Gospel is open to question. However certain we may be as to the didactic purpose of the First and Fourth Gospels, they are distinctively religious, rather than scientific treatises. Now in the realm of religion the famous motto, "Credo ut intelligam," of Anselm, borrowed doubtless from St. Augustine's "fides praecedet intellectum," is as cogent in this scientific age as it was in the scholastic period. But those who "walk by faith and not by sight" must necessarily base all their moral certainties, except those of consciousness, upon probable evidence. It follows, therefore, that we can only arrive at an intelligent judgment concerning any historico-religious question by weighing probabilities. The authorship of the Fourth Gospel is not only an open question, but an exceedingly difficult question. It behooves us, therefore, to avoid the dogmatic temper of mind and to pursue our inquiry in a modest spirit. There are able scholars, conservative and radical, on both sides. McGiffert, in his "Apostolic Age," says: "In John 1:14, and also in the opening words of the First Epistle of John, which was certainly written by the same hand as the Gospel, the author himself apparently claims to have been a personal disciple and a witness of the events which he records. Were it not for these passages we could hardly hesitate to regard the Gospel as the work of a disciple and a companion of John, rather than of the apostle himself. But as the matter stands, certainly either is hardly attainable."—"Apostolic Age," page 616.

The chief difficulty in the problem may be stated in the form of a brief question: "How could the author of the Apocalypse and the author of the Fourth Gospel be the same person?" The difference in the forms of thought and the great difference in the language, which is the vehicle of these forms of thought, is admitted by every student of these two writings. The first thirty-nine chapters of Isaiah are not separated from the last twenty - seven chapters by such a wide gulf in language and religious teaching as is the "Holy of Holies" of the Fourth Gospel (chapters 13, 14, 15, 16, 17) from the Apocalyptic visions of the book of Revelation. Yet few scholars hesitate to ascribe the historical prophecies of Isaiah and the "Rhapsody of Zion Redeemed" to different authors. Now the external evidence in favor of the Johannine authorship of the Apocalypse is practically indisputable. Probably the authorship of no other book in the New Testament is more certain, excepting the two which Luke wrote and the four great doctrinal epistles of Paul. Papias, Irenæus and Justin Martyr in the second century; Origen and Clemens, of Alexandria, in the third; Athanasius, Ambrose and many others in the succeeding centuries have attributed it to John the Divine. As Farrar says: "Modern criticism tends more and more to the conclusion that the Apocalypse is a genuine work of the Apostle John." Even Baur and Zellar regard it as one of the most certainly authenticated of the apostolic writings. Holding to the Johannine authorship of the Apocalypse, the difference in style, thought and language, which a student with a very superficial knowledge of Greek may easily discern, has made many of the New Testament scholars question the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel. There can be little doubt that the present stage of the Synoptic problem has had an indirect influence, at least, upon those who are disposed to attribute the authorship of the Fourth Gospel to a disciple of John. For example, if the First Gospel was written by some unknown author (as it is claimed) who had as his sources the Logia of Matthew, the Mark incident material and other oral and written material coming from various cycles, how natural to infer that some unknown disciple of John threw the Johannine discourses into the argumentative mold in which we find them in the Fourth Gospel. After fairly considering the probabilities against the Johannine authorship of the book my recent study has confirmed my former conviction, that "the beloved disciple," John the apostle, "the Son of Thunder," wrote the Fourth Gospel. In this judgment I follow the leading English rather than the German New Testament scholars. I trust the reader will pardon a side remark to the younger preachers at this point. My brethren, I advise you to read the works of the great German scholars. It will pay you to study the German language for this purpose alone. But be very careful how you accept the judgment of a German critical scholar. I find the conclusions of the best English scholars far more reliable than the German. There are no more careful, critical, painstaking scholars in the world than are found in Germany. No problem is too difficult for these hard workers to undertake. They spend years on details. There may be some truth in the familiar story of the German who spent his life in studying a single noun, and on his deathbed regretted that he had not spent it on the dative case alone! The Germans are strong on analysis, and their methods of study easily drift them toward destructive criticism. English scholarship is more synthetic and constructive. The Germans are experts in tearing down old walls of orthodoxy. The best English scholars are master workmen in building strongholds of orthopisty. My reasons for holding to the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel I will state as briefly as possible.

1. The difficulty, which the difference in thought and language between the Fourth Gospel and the Apocalypse seems to offer, is not nearly so great as appears upon the surface. Even accepting the Domitian date of the Apocalypse, still it is not incredible that both writings were by the same author. The author of "Alice in Wonderland" and" Through the Looking-Glass" was a quiet, unimaginative professor of mathematics. Compare Browning's caricature of a type of Calvinism in "Caliban upon Setebos" with the Christian Theism of his "Pauline." Compare the first part of Goethe's "Faust" with the latter part. Among New Testament writers compare 1 Thessalonians with Galatians, and it will not be difficult for you to believe that John wrote both the Apocalypse and Fourth Gospel, especially as there are so many positive evidences in favor of the Johannine authorship of both. If, however, with a host of the best biblical scholars of our day we accept the Neronian date of the Apocalypse, the chief difficulty to the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel disappears.

2. The external evidence for the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel is very strong. We can trace the tradition that John was the author of the Fourth Gospel back to Polycarp, who was a disciple of John himself. Irenæus, who became Bishop of Lyons in the year 177 of our era, wrote a work against the Gnostics which contains about eighty quotations from the Fourth Gospel. Irenæus died in 202 A. D., but in his youth he had been a disciple of Polycarp. Eusebius has preserved a letter from Irenæus to Florinus in in which the latter says: "I saw you while

I was yet a youth in lower Asia with Polycarp, when you were living in scenes of princely splendor, and when you were trying to gain the approval of Polycarp. What took place then is fresher in my memory than what has occurred more recently." My older readers will testify to the naturalness of this last statement. "What we took in our youth grows up as it were with us, and is incorporated in us. And so I can even now bring back to mind just the place where the good Polycarp used to sit when he talked to us, how he looked as he came in and as he went out, how he lived, how he used to speak to the people, how he used to allude to his intercourse with John and repeat the words of others who had seen the Lord, how he used to recount what he had heard from their own lips about the miracles and the teachings of the Lord, and all in full accordance with the written narrative." When Polycarp was put to death, because he would not renounce his faith in Christ, he testified that he had served the Lord "eighty and six years." If, as the early legends of the church teach, John lived to be one hundred years old, Polycarp was the contemporary of the Apostle John for twenty or thirty years at least. From the time of Irenæus and the fragment of Muratori, 160 or 170, which ascribes the Fourth Gospel to the Apostle John, we have an unbroken tradition of the Johannine authorship down to the present day. As Tishendorf, the discoverer of the Codex Sinaitacus, says: "This testimony is nothing new, but it has not had its due weight." He thinks the testimony of Irenæus and Polycarp should outweigh all the difficulties urged by skeptical scholars.

3. But the internal evidences of the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel are, if possible, even stronger than the external evidences. In the very preface of the Gospel the author classes himself among the eye-witnesses of the glory of the incarnate Word (John 1:14). Again, at the close of his wonderfully cogent argument proving that "Jesus is the Christ the Son of God," he appeals to his testimony as an eye-witness (19:34f). Even the appendix to the Gospel attests the credibility of the author. Weiss, Westcott and others have repeatedly pointed out that we must look for the author in the circle of Jesus' three confidential friends. Peter is repeatedly named along with the author (12:24; 17:15, dc.), and James, who died early, cannot be considered. There remains only John, who in an indirect way describes himself as an eyewitness of the events related in the Gospel. The author must have been a Palestinian Jew familiar with the Aramæan language, and it would seem that he learned his Greek late in life. He is very accurate in his geographical and topographical references. He is not only familiar with Jacob's well, but also with the traditions clinging to it. He reckons according to Jewish time, is very familiar with the Jewish feasts and customs, names particular places in Jerusalem (9:7; 19:13) and in the temple (8:20;10:22). If space permitted I would give a resume of Luthardt's excellent study of the Hebraistic style of thought in the Fourth Gospel. The repetitions are so frequent that a vocabulary of only eight hundred words are used in the entire book. The word "father" occurs twenty times in one chapter (8), the word "witness" eleven times in nine verses (5:31-39), the word "world" seventeen times in the seventeenth chapter. The parallelisms, cycles, etc., so easily recognized by any one familiar with Old Testament literature, can be seen on every page of what I will now call the Gospel of John. To give Westcott's summary: "The author was a Jew, a Jew of Palestine, an eyewitness, an apostle, and could be none other than St. John."

THE WORKING OF THE LEAVEN, OR
The Progress of Christian Civilization.

R. J. TYDINGS.

The thoughtful student of history, if he be a Christian, can find much now to cheer him. Verily, "the mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly fine." The light of truth is being shed abroad, even as "the waters cover the sea."

The embodyment of all truth is the Son of God. He said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." That momentous truth will prevail in God's own good time. The dormant stage of the leaven may have been to us many ceturies, but to him that is but a moment, and we can begin to see the leaven at work. Lasting civilization is not the mere temporal progress we can see in our surroundings; such as our railroads, telegraphs, electrical appliances, etc., but they are the outcroppings of true and lasting Christian civilization. The transforming influence of the gospel is growing more and more apparent as the years go by. There are those who claim as high a state of civilization for ancient times as exist now. The error of that statement should never go unchallenged in the light of current events. Some ancients, I admit, made great progress in the arts and sciences, but it was genius groping in the dark, and they could but fall. Modern Christian civilization walks as the light extends, and its stability is as the Rock of Ages. Christianity is the essence of all truth, and truth will make us free. After the dark ages had rolled by, the lump of leaven, placed in the great mass of humanity by the Son of God (by the atonement), began to show signs of working in the Reformation, and the mass has never lapsed into stillness since that day. Most all the triumphs of modern civilization can be traced, at least indirectly, to the Anglo-Saxon race; a race of people who point church spires heavenward and build schoolhouses on nearly every hill. To the English-speaking people seems entrusted the great mission of spreading the truth and its magnificent attendant developments in science and industry. Wherever the light of the great central truth shines forth there is progress, and the leaven is seen to work, but when nations continue in priest-ridden ignorance, egotism and avarice, as are the Latin races, there is retrogression and national decay. It seems our mission to tear part, at least, of the veil of error away. The English-speaking people are fast dominating the world. The sun never sets now, on England's domains, and her God-fearing people have done wonders in bringing nearer that "happy coming day" when all the earth shall be radiant with the light of all truth and knowledge. Though the sun may be able to set now on our dominions, it may not be able to do so when this present war ends. Our work is alongside that of the mother country if, indeed, we should not be in advance of her, because of our free government and its great possibilities. In this struggle the impress of Christian progress is going to be wondrously stamped on bedarkened spots. We will help in spreading the dawning light and the rainbow of promise may be discerned in the cloud of our sins. Our seventy millions of God-fearing people are fulfilling a God-given purpose, and the truth will be widened and the time brought nearer when it "will prevail." I know our boys in blue are not perfect, but how few are those among them who have not had the fervent prayers and sympathies of some loved one which may bear fruit in their lives in God's own time? Thus we may be said to be a Christian nation. Our people as a rule acknowledge a ruling Providene, and the nation will be blessed for it. Though our saloons, gambling dens, race courses and other place of evil are grievous indeed, yet by contrast with the rest of the world we thank God and take courage. God is using us for a great end. Whatever may be said of the ability or lack of ability of the Cubans or the people of the Philippines to govern themselves, if the hand of this nation is taken off those countries or any other territory acquired by this war, before the impress of Christian civilization is indelibly stamped thereon, then this struggle will have failed in its devine mission and purpose. I do not look for any such failure. The prayers and struggles of our devoted men and women of God of all times are bearing fruit and the leaven is worging, the day is dawning.

> "From Greenland's icy mountains,
> From India's coral strand,
> They call us to deliver
> Their land from error's chain."

Sometimes war is the delivering agent, or is the instrument to work out Gods plans.

Besides the great central truth of the gospel, which is being pushed by our devoted and self-sacrificing missionaries in foreign lands, there is another potent agency at work of which we sometimes lose sight. This is the constant demand on the English-speaking people for adepts in science and industry to superintend or push some work of railroad building, of electrical progress or other up-to-date, time and space annihilating achievement, in a laggard nation and the cause of Christianity is always strengthened thereby. American and English enterprise planned and are pushing to completion the great Trans - Siberian Railway, and the Russian serf, if he but knew it, is having the entering wedge driven into his bonds which will in God's own good time split them asunder, and even Russia will be free. Every leading work of shortening time and space in communication and transportation around this earth by the achievements of modern industry are resultant from the spread of truth, and are mighty agencies for its continued spread. Let us not get in the way of destiny, but act as true coworkers with the Master for the spread of all truth. That truth will eventually make us free from national as well as individual sins, and thus will the whole lump be leavened.

So mote it be!

HUMILIATION.

JOSEPH H. MAC EL'REY.

No. I.

Humiliation, which is the state of being humbled, reduced or lowered in any way, but now in the specific sense of being meekened and rendered submissive, ethically and spiritually, is an experience which may come upon one in many ways. And although not likely to be welcomed or received with exultation, yet the condition in which the experience places one will ultimately produce a state of safe exaltation if one will accept it. But it may not be of the kind one would have selected.

This is a problem which must be developed by experiences which are seldom agreeable during that process. To find ourself placed in a lower posture, so called, in our own estimation, is sad enough. But to be compelled to face that fact as it faces us in the faces of our friends, who calmly accept the fact, and that, too, without asking explanation, and not proffering even the most moderate dissent from disinterested public opinion. This is bearing two burdens of these, one being degradation. This develops an emotion which is well named mortification, because it is indeed an incipient chill, like a death-shudder, because the higher we had exalted ourself the higher we thought we were by our friends exalted. Hence to be humiliated in their eyes is more galling than to fall only in our own. We might palliate with ourself and revive self-esteem under the guise of a rapid growth of meekness or humility and thus win credit for magnanimity, which is more admired than dull humility. Many cannot live comfortably without drawing out the admiration of those who indulge their own desire to flatter the vain at the cost of honesty and the littleness of deceit for the mean fun of addling the weak-minded.

Pity any one, but be candid with the disciple who is temperamental to the virus of the fiery fever of flattery. The disciple —any one—should desire to be highly esteemed in love for his work's sake. But adulation is never loved. Self-admiration is the idolatry of selfishness. And selfishness is complete isolation from the humane. Lower than that one cannot go. The wise know that humility is preferable to pride, exaltation, popularity, or its conferments, because the affection of humility can companionate us in any condition into which love and good-will can go. Miracle you may call it, that the high and lofty One who inhabiteth eternity dwelleth either with himself there or with the humble and the lowly here to revive the humble and to restore the soul of the contrite and thus to show God to the sipirit in man. The explorer of nature finds there what nature has to disclose. What more could there be found? The humble in spirit find God the Spirit. Humility is the natal, normal spirit-attitude of God. Can the man lose the spirit-attitude in which God and the man come mutually to know each other? Can a vain, self-opinionated spirit know God? Can a man having good eyesight, but not having studied optics, either describe or understand the prism, the phenomena of colors or of light? He may have acquired much expertness in flora culture, and be a keen observer of the ways of plants. But one lesson in the revelations of light laws from the world within the recesses of the flower goddess and behind the Ægis of Ahena's eyes would reduce to a self-confessing humiliation the self-acquired knowledge which gave him feeling of creditable superiority above the many in what he called botanic skill. From whatever source the increase of our knowledge or experience may come, it is as remarkable as it is unfailing and salutary that it does bring to us normally the experience of humiliation, but which is to those of harmonious mental and spiritual composition a real uplift.

"Lord, I know not. Teach thou me!" How apt a learner will that one speedily become. Because this is the attitude of the humble, whose spirit and intellect God can educate—draw out and associate with—through humiliation. "He humiliates himself upon the throne." Is not haggle over words, although words are as necessary to sense as are other forms of things to thought and action. Get the proper words and the proper concepts and you are thoroughly secure. You thus have the teachable temper and the proper implements which put you in proper posture for knowledge and wisdom with God and usefulness with man. You can serve the Lord only with all humbleness of mind, no matter with what other attainments you may seek to know him.

The honest-hearted, true in purpose, desire and affection, and in spirit meek, holding, as Aristotle said, the resentments under good control, representing the will and the whole personality, wield power far superior to that of the impulsive, contentious and self-asserting, who can never endure meek humiliation, which will without resentment lead one into tranquil humility. Humiliated often such persons must be, but they only chafe under it as a debasing load, rather than bend and adapt their energies upon that agonic line of contest against ease to win the race essential to the triumphal crown. It is the daily and long series of ease-denying agonizings which vex the tempers and and tire the fame they toughen for the hour of contest, which are very much harder to endure than is the work of the opposing athlete in the arena. The toil of preparation and the dread of possible defeat and crushing humiliation try the stoutness of the heart far more than the actual contact. The bearing of victor and vanquished are severer tests of character than the superior prowess of the champion, because in bravery, fearlessness and gallantry the defeated may, as is often so, overmatch the winner. After defeat the foiled one generally hastens to tell the why and how of it, intending thus to lesson the credit of success. In such cases explanations are, as they must be, unsuccessful. The whole of the case is victory for one, defeat for the other. Of course there were causes for the effect. But contingencies cannot count. Each contestant did his then best. Let silence confer dignity. New facts may, if of sufficient gravity, justify another trial, but cannot change the past facts. Take defeat gracefully. Let it teach caution in the future. Success often lies in properly anticipating an opponent, but can never spring from explaining how you were beaten. Adam gave the world a standard example of that tactic. It did not touch as was intended the reason of God, because it was not a reasonable tactic. Nothing could reasonably supersede the reason given by God because there can be no reason above the reason of God, because pure reasoning can but coincide with right and truth, and God and truth and right are inseparable. Therefore it often is that much more intrinsic honor attaches to the humiliation of defeat than to the elation of conquest. All depends on the nature of the stake invested in the combat.

If the contention be of purely secular difference, there may be no element of moral right or wrong in it. If it be purely a moral issue, one side must be morally right and the other side must be morally wrong. Although many and devious have been the maneuverings among causists in all time concerning the imperative and optional ethical reason why we shall find their mazes as tangly now as of very old times, to say the very least. Nor must we blame this on the refinements and definements of modern science in any sense. The scientists are superior to the professed moralists. When the secular historian would lampoon the teachers of debasing ethics he finds his samples among ecclesiastical teachers of morals.

See how many of our specialists in civics, in social moralities, do by intentional or unintentional propositions of specious reasoning, contrive into the vital question some minor item which they magnify into the importance of the real one, as if that were the real one of the age. The true gauge is, "all [any] unrighteousness is sin." "A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things." These measurers are all-including and all-reforming. Make the tree good and all will be good. Make it corrupt and all will be so. Heart-reform is God's way. Specialties are men's hobbies. Out of the heart proceed the issues of life. Thought, emotion, passion, affection, word and action. Everything will develop after its kind. Thus one thing is as special and no more special than another.

Humility makes confession elevating and the receipt of pardon most comforting. It keeps all the faculties in equable movement and secures the performance of every duty with patience and cheerfulness.

God is gracious to the humble, but must resist the proud, because pride is vaunting and inhumane. The stars of God always shine to the lowly, as those who look up from great depths see them in the light of noonday. Humility bringeth no excuse, and yet is accepted of God and man. Her confession is whole-hearted.

One of the most if not the very most important lesson man can learn is humiliation, because it includes everything man needs that can make him useful and happy in any state or condition, obscure or opulent, in any kind or way. It places him on the line of being and doing right, from the smallest to the greatest reaches of ability. It frees him from every delusive motive, hope and proffer of mere exaltation, because every act of humble work exalts him. The Rabbi washes the disciples' feet and the disciple confesses the Rabbi's power to wash their heads, hands and hearts.

The humblest monarchs needed no body guards, because their people knew ney shook hands with the honest beggar nd loved them all. And it was thus that ings could work miracles upon them and d them to believe that the king could do o wrong. And in theory, in ideal, the ing, the leader, model, guide, defender, ath that honor, integrity, nobility, that oth, like very divinity, hedge about a king, nd such a king can do no wrong. The leal is, of course, in God. He was chosen f God, anointed by God, endowed by God o be to the people the man of God. The leal is sublime. It has often been real-zed, but more often it has been counter-eited. And so instead of that we have a neage blood royal from heaven through ne Spirit of the Highest, a holy people ffering spiritual gifts and sacrifices of very kind to them that need. We have ings and queens many, as royal and true s he who anointed them to witness and ork for him on those as among whom "he ent about doing good." That is the brief iography of "the King's own." It is and ill be the biography of the great clouds of itnesses for God the Son and the Spirit ll now and to the end. What at once xalts and humbles the king can be done y the lowliest subject of the king. It is one every hour, in every house, hospital, ayside, alley, basement, garret, prison, alace, mansion, happy cottage home, here suffering can be soothed, restoration e secured, or deliverance made easier. ut mark, none of this can be done without ride being supplanted by humiliation and umiliation sweetened into humility. To rove this, try it.

Current Religious Thought

Some idea of the surprises which sur-rised European nations in our short de-sive war with Spain may be had from ne following summary view of the matter s seen by and presented in the Christian ommonwealth, of London. This wide-wake, strongly edited journal says:

Just now we are most concerned about the ture of America. Suddenly a great peace untry has been transformed into an immense ar Power. The people of Europe had little nception of the resources of the United tates before the recent contest. The mighty vil struggle of over thirty years ago has most gone out of the memory of the present eneration, and consequently the European ations had come to think of America as only great commercial and productive country. he people there have been regarded through-ut the whole of Europe as mainly distinguished r successful business operations. Now, owever, all is changed. The American peo-le have shown that, nowithstanding their eaceful proclivities, they are capable of greay hings upon the battlefield. It is not verd enerally known that when war was declaret etween the United States and Spain the rmer had scarcely a single thing in readiness r the contest. With little or no standing rmy, with the most meagre war supplies, ver 200,000 men have been placed in the field ith thorough equipment for a protracted ampaign. In every battle upon both sea and nd the Americans have been victorious, and the two great naval engagements they ained the most signal victories recorded in aval warfare. Surely all this means some-ing in the future affairs of the world. The eaty of peace between Spain and the United tates will concede to the latter territory that ill enable the United States Government to evelop one of the strongest fleets of modern mes. It may be expected, therefore, that ithin the next ten years the United States ill become, next to England, the strongest aritime people of the entire world. Already ie American fleet is an immense power. Not mply because of the number and character of ips, but mainly because of the fighting ualities of the men in command and behind ie guns. The war with Spain has demon-strated that however good the ships may be they are practically worthless unless the fighters can shoot and have courage and in-telligence to take advantage of every strategic position.

The Christian Commonwealth thus speaks of the results of our war with Spain. The views are not materially different from those generally held in the United States, but it is of interest to note their agreement. The Commonwealth says:

What, then, is the outlook for the future? Two things have resulted from the war. First of all, the American people have themselves been thoroughly united. The old division lines between the North and South have been completely obliterated. This of itself is probably worth all the war has cost the American people. In the second place, the old sores which have so long kept England and the United States practically in a suspicious attitude toward each other have been completely removed. England's course with respect to the United States has been friendly in the extreme, and the people of the states are not slow to recognize the fact. In short, while there is as yet no definite alliance between the two countries, it is absolutelycertain that in any conflict which England might have with other European nations she could count upon the moral support of the United States, and in an emergency it is not at all improbable that an offensive and defensive alliance might be secured. In such a case it is easy to see that these two nations could practically dictate terms to the rest of the world. However, it is almost certain that Japan would be glad to come into such an alliance. This would give an immense advantage to operations in the East. It may be also further suggested that Germany would not hestitate long to join such an alliance. It is true that during the war between the United States and Spain the German interference became very irritating to the American people, but, all the same, both Germany and the United States know well enough that on almost every ground there are strong reasons why they should stand together. But whether Germany joins the alliance or not, the great Teutonic consolidation for progress will continue to develop, and is not likely to be checked very seriously, for the following reasons: First, such an alliance means a plea for human liberty throughout the world. Nothing can stand against such a righteous cause. Second, it means the dissemination of the Christian religion throughout the world. England and America are the only two countries of the world that are characterized for vigorous missionary enterprise. When they have united their forces, both moral and material, it cannot be doubted that the Bible will soon become the text-book of every nation under the heavens. Third, such a combination assures the future peace of the world. Modern warfare must be confined largely to the sea. The battles of the nations must be mainly fought during the future years by the navies. England, the United States and Japan, in co-operation, will be stronger than all the rest of the world combined. This will give them the balance of power, and as their aim is undoubtedly for the best interests of civilization, it seems to us their real mission practically assures the peace of the world for the twentieth century.

That we may know how the learned men of Holland in the 17th century held the action and design of baptism, Ford's Christian Repository, a Baptist magazine, quotes from Herman Witsius, a Professor of Divinity in the universities of Franequer, Utrecht and Leyden, 1680 to 1698, in the June number as follows:

XXVI. First, therefore, the immersion into the water represents to us that tremendous abyss of divine justice in which Christ was plunged for a time, in some measure, in consequence of his undertaking of our sins: as he complained under the type of David, Psa. 69:2. I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into deep water, where the floods overflow me. But more particularly, an immersion of this kind deprives us of the benefit of the light, and the other enjoyments of this world; so it is a very fit representation of the death of Christ. The continuing, how short soever, under the water, represents his burial, and the lowest degree of humiliation, when he was thought to be wholly cut off, while in the grave, that was both sealed and guarded. The emersion, or coming out of the water, gives us some resemblance of his resurrection, or victory, obtained in his death over death, which he vanqished within its inmost recesses, even the grave. All these particulars the apostle intimates (Rom. 6:3, 4).

XXVII. Moreover, baptism also signifies those benefits which believers obtain in Christ: and these are either present or future. Among the present, the principal is fellowship in the death, burial and resurrection of Christ; and the consequence of it, viz., the mortification and burying of our old man and the raising of the new by the efficacy of the blood and Spirit of Christ. For the immersion into the water represents the death of the old man, even in such a manner that it can neither stand in judgment to our condemnation, nor exercise dominion over our bodies, that we should serve it in the lusts thereof.

XXIX. Moreover, as in baptism are set forth the death, burial and resurrection of Christ; but his resurrection is a pledge of our glorious resurrection: we may learn from our baptism that after being buried as it were in the water, we directly rise out of it, so at the last day we shall be raised out of our graves to eternal life. Hence Theodoret says of baptism: "It is an earnest of good things to come, a type of the future resurrection, a communion in the sufferings and a participation of the resurrection of our Lord, agreeable to the words of Christ (Mark 16:6): "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

The Religious World.

The World's Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association was held at Basle, Switzerland, July 6-10. The reports of the Central International Committee show 5,768 in forty-four countries with 500,000 members, an increase of nearly 500 associations and 50,000 members during the last four years. There was a full representation of prominent association men, including Sir George Williams, of England, John R. Mott, James Stokes and others, of this country, and representatives from Germany, Sweden, Italy and other countries. There were addresses on the different departments of association work, in which the American representatives had a good share. Following upon this was the meeting of the World's Student Christian Federation at Eisenach. This federation is at present composed of ten national or international Christian Student movements of North America, Great Britain, Germany, Scandinavia, India, Ceylon, Australasia, South Africa, China, Japan, and other scattered associations in mission lands. Twenty-four different countries are covered by the organization, and there are corresponding members in other lands. The unions are found in about 900 universities, colleges, etc., and have a membership of fully 45,000 students and professors. The largest growth during the past year has been in America, and the next largest in India. —The Independent.

The committee in charge of the local arrangements for the World's Missionary Conference, to be held in New York City, in April, 1900, has organized with the Rev. S. L. Baldwin, of the Methodist Missionary Society, as secretary, and begun preliminary work. Dr. Baldwin was formerly a successful missionary in China, and is well qualified for this large task.

The general committee of nine consists of the Rev. Dr. H. N. Cobb, of the Reformed Board; the Rev. Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church; the Rev. Dr. F. F. Ellinwood; also the Rev. Dr. A. J. Brown, of the Presbyterian Board; the Rev. Dr. A. B. Leonard, of the Methodist Society; the Rev. Dr. J. F. Goucher, and Darwin R. James, William E. Dodge and Robert O. Fuller.

The conference will be confined to foreign missions, and features of it will be a record of what has been done in mission work during this century, the mistakes that have been made, and what ought to be and can be done during the century soon to open. At present the committee is much interested in securing the co-operation of all boards, it being felt that it should be, if possible, a united conference of all mission agencies of the evangelical Christian world.

Refusals have been received from no quarter, and the committee expresses the hope that all Protestant bodies will unite, since it is a conference only, and in doing so there can be the sacrifice of no religious tenet. A very large number of missionary organizations throughout the world have already promised to send representatives.—The Religious Review of Reviews.

Our Budget.

—Missouri state convention, Nevada, Sept. 26-29.

—General Convention, Chattanooga, October 13-21.

—All missionary pledges should be paid before Sept. 30.

—All should remember Church Extension work before the month closes.

—We publish another of Mary Black Clayton's army stories in our Family Circle this week.

—One more article will conclude our interesting "Wheeling Through England" series, by Dr. W. E. Garrison. He is now at Macatawa, Mich.

—The cool weather for the past week has been delightful in contrast with the great heat of the previous week. We are now on uncomplaining terms with the weather.

—The annual fall festivities of the city are at hand. The St. Louis Exposition opens this week. A peace jubilee is also contemplated. There is also an election in sight and political interests are coming to the front, so that the country is not likely to suffer for attractions, even if the war is over.

—A revised sermon by Alexander McLaren appears in Christian Commonwealth, London, each week. The Christian Commonwealth claims to be the only paper in which authorized reports of Dr. McLarens sermons are published.

—See notice of the Iowa Christian Convention in announcement column this week.

—England, Russia, France and Germany have been denominated the "Big Four" in China.

—The infirmity of years seems not to hinder Pope Leo from writing encyclical letters. He has recently addressed another to the bishops of Italy.

—While China is classed as one of the dying nations, there are indications that she is about to give birth to a new life.

—Four suggestive programs appear in this paper for the observance of Forefather's Day, Oct. 23rd. There were many favorable reports from this service where observed last year, and a glance at the programs in this paper will show at once what an interesting and profitable occasion this can be made for any church or Christian Endeavor Society. Read these programs carefully and then proceed to arrange for such a meeting and the hour will not soon be forgotten.

—New York City has commenced the conversion of some of her worst tenement districts into parks under the small-park law. This is a costly but healthful sanitary and moral reform movement.

—The receipts for Foreign Missions for the first eight days of September were $2,349.30, being $314.34 more than for the same period last year. The receipts for the month of August were far below those of last year. Here are the figures: August, 1897, $6,743.02; August, 1898, $3,169.09; loss, $3,573.93. But we are glad to know that the receipts for the year will go far ahead of last year. Bro. Rains writes that the receipts to date are $122,842.42, and says they ought to reach $130,000 before the books close at the end of this month.

—Hardly a week passes that we do not have to consign one or more articles to the waste-basket for want of the writer's name. Obituaries, reports of meetings and other articles come to us frequently with no other signature than "A Friend," "Observer," or some other equally indefinite term. Sometimes there is no kind of signature whatever. The author's name does not necessarily have to appear in the paper, but it must be known to us.

—The church at Fredericksburg, Va., is making a strong effort to secure a house of worship. It is said that the one they now have "is a monument of shame to the memory of the worthy pioneers and defenders of the primitive faith and to the old historic Virginia town of Fredericksburg." Only $500 is yet lacking and the church appeals to the liberality of the brotherhood for this amount. Their pastor is sustained there only by the assistance of the American, the Virginia and the Tidewater mission boards. On the merits of the plea there is no question, and we trust that the amount asked for will soon be in hand. Address the pastor, Cephas Shelburne.

—We wonder how many Endeavor Societies not yet enlisted in the Bethany C. E. Reading Course are preparing to begin with the second year. The value of the course has now been demonstrated, and it remains for you to act. This will be a rare opportunity for profitable self-culture, and if improved will prove a blessing to the readers, the society; the church and to the world. Write at once to J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, Ohio, for an outfit or for further information on the subject; see also an excellent article in this paper from Bro. Lynn on this present particular subject.

—The receipts for Home Missions for the month of August amounted to $1,921.05. Last year they were $1,212.18 for the same month, so that there was a gain of $708.87. We do not know the total receipts for Home Missions this year to date, but hope that they are far ahead of this time last year. The indications are now that all our missionary boards will report larger collections this year than ever before, and if so this will add greatly to the enthusiasm of the Chattanooga Convention, Oct. 13-21.

—At the request of W. R. Hunt, one of our missionaries, who after nine years of service in the Celestial Empire has been recuperating in England for a season and who expects to be present at the Chattanooga Convention, Oct. 13-21, we reprint the poem by our lamented missionary, A. F. H. Saw, entitled, "Sinim For Jesus." It is the wish of Bro. Hunt to have this poem sung at the convention for the good cheer of all our missionaries in China.

—Many of the wealthier people of the country have no conception of the amount of poverty and suffering in the land, because they are not thrown in contact with it and will not read about it. The same is true of many professed Christian families. They have no idea of the religious destitution in the land, because they are not thrown in contact with it and will not read about it in our church papers, and consequently have little or no interest in missionary conventions and missionary efforts. If some way could be found to open their eyes to see and their ears to hear, there would then be some hope for fruit in their lives, and our convention halls would have to be enlarged to contain the delegates and friends of the Master.

—Let all persons contemplating attendance at the Chattanooga Convention, Oct. 13-21, give particular attention to railroad rates. The railroads of the Central and Southeastern Traffic Associations have granted the rate of one fare for the round trip. This covers the territory from the Potomac to the Mississippi River, and from the lakes to the gulf. The Trunk Line Association northeast of the Mississippi and the Western Passenger Association, west of the Mississippi River, have granted a a one and one-third fare on the certificate plan, or you can buy through the gateways of the Central or Southeastern at the regular rate, and get the one-fare rate through these gateways and return. Last year F. M. Call, the business manager of the Christian Publishing Co., this city, arranged for special coaches to the General Convention, to the delight and financial profit of the St. Louis and Western delegates. We are authorized to state that he is making arrangements for a similar convenience this year, in which the round trip from St. Louis to Chattanooga will not exceed one fare, if not better even than this. All persons, therefore, in St. Louis, or in the surrounding country, or in Missouri, or anywhere in the West, who would like to avail themselves of this advantage, are requested to send their names to him at once. Address F. M. Call, 1522 Locust St., St. Louis, Mo. This is important, that he may know how many for whom to provide transportation room. Those who purchase tickets to the gateway of the Central Passenger Association must remember to secure certificates of the agent from whom tickets to St. Louis are purchased in order to secure the one and one-third rate from their homes to this city and return.

—In an article in the Outlook of Aug. 27th, by Dr. Amory Bradford entitled, "Where Rolls the Oregon," he has occasion to mention the colleges in Oregon, which he does as follows: "In Oregon there are two Methodist colleges, one Presbyterian, one Campbellite, one Congregational, and so on through the list—more than a dozen in all—and added to them is the State University." The use of the term "Campbellite" in this connection is very surprising and disappointing as well. Coming from a man of Dr. Bradford's intelligence and good-breeding, and appearing in the Outlook, a paper not given to using offensive names and epithets. Dr. Bradford knows that the people referred to sometimes as "Campbellites" not only do not acknowledge any such designation, but that such a name is in direct antagonism to their plea for union on the ground of a common name and a common creed. We are wholly unable to account for this breach of etiquette on the part of Dr. B. unless it be that he imbibed something of the sectarian spirit and manners during his sojourn in the West by coming in contact with some of the bitter partisans who, unfortunately, have not advanced beyond the sectarian stage of religion, and can conceive of nothing broader than a sect.

—Last week we published the program of the 31st annual convention of the Missouri Christian churches, to be held at Nevada, Sept. 26-29. The time is short and the work is great. Great because of the numerical and financial strength of the Disciples of Christ in Missouri. Great because of the destitution that yet remains in the state in spiritual things. More churches, Bible-schools, Endeavor Societies, pastors and evangelists are needed and these conventions represent the only systematic co-operative efforts in the state to secure them. Let the brotherhood of Missouri see that the convention at Nevada is made one of the best in our history and plans for greater things for the Church of Christ in Missouri than ever before. A good convention in Nevada means great things for our cause in Southwest Missouri.

A MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Rev. C. H. Smith of Plymouth, Conn., Gives the Experience of Himself and Little Girl in a Trying Season—What He Depends Upon.

The testimonials in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla come from a class of people whose words are worth considering. Many clergymen testify to the value of this medicine. Read this:

"By a severe attack of diphtheria I lost two of my children. I used Hood's Sarsaparilla as a tonic both for myself and little girl and found it most excellent as a means to restore the impoverished blood to its natural state and as a help to appetite and digestion. I depend upon it when I need a tonic and I find it at once efficacious." REV. C. H. SMITH, Congregational parsonage, Plymouth, Conn.

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

—The Observer, St. Louis, pays the following worthy tribute to Dwight L. Moody:

The hero of the war with Spain is not Dewey, nor Hobson, nor Shafter, nor Roosevelt, nor Miles, but plain, blunt, God-fearing, God-honoring Dwight L. Moody. This simple Christian layman has exerted more influence and directed the religious forces of the nation with more masterly skill and ability than any admiral of the navy or any major-general of the army has wielded his forces on sea or land. When the war broke out the problem of bringing the influence of the gospel to bear upon nearly three hundred thousand men in camp seemed too great for solution. No ecclesiastical court had the wisdom or the tact to deal with the question. No purely church organization was competent to set on foot a plan to meet the emergencies of the hour. But Dwight L. Moody, with the courage of an Elijah, and the faith and zeal of a Paul, saw and seized the opportunity. He marshaled the religious forces of the country, and with as much self-command as President McKinley or Major-General Miles, set the clergy and the laity of the country to saving the young men of the army. Wherever an army pitched its camp, there Moody's men pitched their tents with every facility for worship and practical Christian work. Never has the gospel been preached with more faith or more earnestness than it has been proclaimed by hundreds of practical Christian men during the summer months now closing.

—Spain's rediscovery of America is about to become as consequential an event in her history as her first discovery.

—The Independent says that the proposal of the Czar of Russia to call a conference of the nations of the world to provide for disarmament and the preservation of peace "is like a breath of heaven blown across the open pit of hell."

—D. H. Bays has been ordered by his physician to go home (to Michigan) for two months absolute rest from all labor, mental or physical. We are sorry to hear this, but the Irving church has voted him a vacation and we hope he will return restored and ready to continue his good work.—Christian Index.

—The suggestion of Bro. Marshall in our last issue, in reference to Bro. J. Z. Tyler and the Christian Endeavor work among us, is exactly in time with what the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has more than once suggested. It is manifestly the proper thing to do. Bro. Tyler should give his whole time to the work for which he is so well fitted, and which so much needs his wise and cautious leadership. No doubt he is a good pastor, but he is not able to do both works, and he can be better spared from his pastoral work than from the fruitful field which he has been cultivating among the young people as superintendent of Christian Endeavor and editor and manager of the Bethany Reading Courses. The convention at Chattanooga should call Bro. Tyler to this special work, and all of us should co-operate with him in making the Endeavor movement accomplish the greatest amount of good among us.

—Many hearts and homes have been made glad during the past week by returning soldiers, but our joy over the return of those released from active service should not dissipate our interest in those who are holding the fort in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines, or even those still in camp in the states. Let us remember them all in our prayers and forget not to assure them of our sympathies. Let us also mourn with those whose loved ones will never return to them on this earth again. To all such this war means more than words can express. They are those who have made the greater sacrifices for their country and who most need our remembrance and our love.

—The Observer, of this city, after an eloquent tribute to Dwight L. Moody for his noble work in the army, makes this noteworthy observation on Christianity, the magnitude of which has not yet been realized nor appreciated. The Observer says:

Christianity has never displayed its spirit to greater advantage than it did during the war and is still doing. The Christian men and women who flocked to the camps to minister to the spiritual and moral welfare of the soldiers hovered around every wayward boy with a brother's or a sister's affection. It is said that never did soldiers listen to the gospel with more eagerness than they did at Tampa, Jacksonville and Chickamauga. Thousands of young men were converted, and will return to their homes better and purer men than they were when they enlisted. Alas! thousands resisted the message and went into the ways of evil. Although the war is over, the work of the Christian Commission is still greatly needed. More than a hundred and fifty thousand troops will remain after the regiments now returning shall have been disbanded. For many months to come the men will be exposed to the hardships and perils of a trying climate. The temptations will not be less, but rather greater when the men are camped on distant soil.

—We are sorry to learn that the condition of Sister T. A. Abbott, of this city, does not improve. The report from Brother Abbott to-day is that she is no better.

—RAILROAD RATES TO STATE CONVENTION.—The Mo. Pac., M. K. & T., Fort Scott & Memphis, and the Port Arthur System, which includes the Omaha, Kansas City & Eastern, Omaha & St. Louis, and the Kansas City & Northern Connection, together with their line south of Kansas City, or that portion of it that is in Missouri, have granted a rate of one fare for the round trip from all Missouri points. Tickets on sale Sept. 26-27, good to return until and including Sept. 30. All other roads have refused any concessions whatever, and you will buy local tickets to the nearest point on any of the above roads, and thence into Nevada, at the one fare for the round trip. Please see your local agent at once if his instructions have been received, and prepare to come for the first day. T. A. ABBOTT.

—We have recently been informed of a new plan of insurance which has some commendable features. It is based on regular and fixed monthly dues, and having no big rents to pay, no great salaried officers to support and no costly buildings to keep in repair affords a much lower rate to the insured. The monthly dues are fixed by the regular mortuary tables according to age and are expected to meet all liabilities. Medical examinations are required, and only church members in good standing can become applicants for a policy. The organization is called The Mizpah League, with home office 712 Commercial Bldg., this city. The officers are of our substantial business men and there seems to be no apparent reason why this new enterprise should not prosper and prove a blessing to many who cannot reach the cost of a policy in one of the old line companies.

PERSONAL MENTION.

J. M. Rudy preached at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on Sept. 11th.

Pastor C. C. Rowlison and wife were duly installed in the Marshalltown pastorate on Sept. 6th. N. A. McConnell and A. M. Haggard, with the city pastors, took part. A fine musical program followed. When we remember that it was prepared for an entirely different kind of reception, apparently solid criticism should be omitted.

W. W. Blalock, of Topeka, Kansas, is in a meeting at Bartlett, Ia.

W. B. Crewdson, of Corning, Ia., is seriously ill.

Leander Lane, late of Davenport, Ia., has taken the work at Fairfield, Ia., until January 1st. For several years Bro. Lane was the Minnesota secretary and is one of the most experienced and valued men.

Mrs. B. D. Holbrook, of Onawa, such a woman as Paul would not forget to mention, has returned from her summer vacation in Pittsburg and beyond.

L. F. McCray is in a meeting at Lehigh, Ia.

D. A. Hunter is in a meeting at Minto, Ia.

A. McLean, Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, called at this office on last Tuesday on his way to Columbia, where he is to spend four days in a course of lectures at the Bible College. He is looking well and speaks encouragingly of the coming report of the Foreign Society at Chattanooga.

Dr. B. B. Tyler and his wife, who have been spending the last few weeks at Colorado Springs, Colorado, expect to reach this city on Wednesday morning, of this week, on their way to Lexington, Ky., and later to the Chattanooga Convention.

H. G. Bennett, said be one of the most promising young preachers of Eureka, Ill., on Sept. 6, was married to Miss Bettie Button, of West Port, Ky., George A. Miller, of the First Church, Covington, Ky., officiating.

We have received cards announcing the 50th anniversary of the marriage of Dr. and Mrs. J. B. Crane, of Waynesboro, Va., September 17th. Dr. Crane and his wife have our congratulations on the attainment of so distant a mile post on the matrimonal highway.

Bert Van Meter, of Belle Plain, Ia., and Miss Lee, of Des Moines, formerly of West Liberty, were united in marriage on Sept. 6th; J. H. Wright, of Osceola, officiating.

W. T. Hilton, of Beloit, Kan., has begun the publication of a monthly church paper called the Kansas Evangelist. The appearance of the first uumber is pleasing to the eye and ear.

The Christian Index says that James Small, of Oakland, Cal., is to assist T. W. McDonald in a protracted meeting at the Highland Park Church, Des Moines, Iowa, beginning October, first week.

J. S. Myers' initial sermon at the First Christian Church, Philadelphia, Pa., Sunday, Sept. 4th, was based on Rom. 1:16, and a brief of the same appeared in the Public Ledger, of that city, the following day. The paper states that he was heard by a large audience.

The Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., recently observed with appropriate services the 23rd anniversary of the installation of its pastor, F. D. Power. There were present of the original congregation, 23 years ago, but ten persons. His sermon was a review of the progress and events of the year and an exhortation to greater diligence and faithfulness.

The editor of this paper and his family are expected at their home in this city the latter part of this week, or first of next. They have had a pleasant and profitable vacation at Macatawa, Mich.; that is, such a vacation as usually falls to the lot of a busy editor.

Dr. W. E. Garrison, arrived at Macatawa, Mich., last Saturday, after a delightful trip through England. By his courtesy his readers as well as himself have enjoyed his trip. His "Wheeling Through England" series of letters have called out many expressions of appreciation and many fine compliments on their literature, which we take the liberty here to mention, but of which as yet we presume he has not learned. W. W. H.

P. J. Dickerson called at this office on last Friday on his way to the district convention at DuQuoin, Ill. Prof. Dickerson has been spending the summer in Colorado, but is going to Alma to take charge of the Christian Industrial College at that place. He also informs us that the Bible department of that school will be in charge of Thomas Munnell, recently of Christian University, Canton, Mo.

J. S. Hughes is out with his new lecture on John of Patmos. Churches thinking of a lecture or lecture course should note this. Bro. Hughes' address is Station O, Chicago.

H. B. Coen, of Mt. Ephriam, Ohio, can be had to assist in protracted meetings as a singing evangelist after Oct. 14th.

Dr. W. T. Moore, President of the Bible College, Columbia, Mo., has just returned from England. This, it is said, makes his thirty-third trip to Europe. He is reported as saying that he found the feeling of friendship toward the United States stronger than ever before.

J. P. Parker writes us from Delta, Col., that his wife died Aug. 22nd, and that he will return to Charleston, Ill.

W. G. Smith, after two years service for the church at New Castle, Ind., has resigned to take effect Nov. 1st.

Jas. S. Helm, a singing evangelist, of Marshall, Mo., would be glad to assist any preacher or church in a protracted meeting.

G. W. Hamilton writes that he has resigned his engagement with the church at Galena, Mo., on account of inadequate support, and desires another field.

The report read by Earle Wilfley, pastor of the church at Wabash, Ind., on the occasion of the beginning of his third year is an encouraging one. The anniversary services, sermon and songs were appropriate, interesting and impressive. Bro. Wilfley has an extended acquaintance and influece in that city, being loved and respected by all.

The sixtieth anniversary of the birth of J. W. Ingram, of Pasadena, Cal., was unexpectedly celebrated August 31st by the uninvited presence of about 100 members of the church for which he preaches. It is needless to add that the evening was most pleasantly spent and long to be remembered. One especially pleasant feature of the occasion was the presentation in the name of the church of a fine morocco-bound teacher's Bible. The presentation speech was made by W. H. Shell, of Washington, D. C., who was present.

Railroad Rates.

The Western Passenger Association has granted a rate of one and one-third fare, round trip, to the gateways of the Central Association, on the Certificate plan, to the Chattanooga Convention, Oct. 13-21, 1898.

Those coming from the Western Passenger Association will pay full fare to the gateway of the Central Traffic Association, and from there will get round trip tickets to Chattanooga and return, at the rate of one fare for the round trip. When you pay full fare take a certificate for the same, and after having it signed at Chattanooga you will be returned from the gateway at which it was purchased to your home for one-third fare.

Please notice that those coming from the Western Passenger Association purchase tickets twice, one at the home station for which they will take a certificate, and the second at the point where they reach the bounds of the Central Traffic Association, where they will buy round-trip tickets at the one-fare rate.

Our convention at Chattanooga promises to be the most interesting in all our history. Preparations have been making for months that it shall be the strongest Convention we have ever held. The brethren at Chattanooga have had it on their hearts the entire year, and have made the most ample preparations for the successful entertainment of this Convention.

In behalf of the Boards we desire to extend the invitation for a general gathering of the loyal Disciples of our Lord and Savior. Let us say in our hearts, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of our Lord."

Come to the Convention at Chattanooga, October 13th to 21st, 1898.

THE SPURGEON LOVE-LETTERS.

A book has been issued this week which will make a stirring sensation throughout the whole religious world. It is the second volume of C. H. Spurgeon's autobiography. Four volumes are to appear in all, so that now the authorized "Life of Spurgeon" is half completed. In very many respects this second installment is superior to the first. The greatest of modern preachers was not in any sense a prodigy when a lad and, therefore, the first volume was in many respects tame and disappointing, but now that the work treats of his early manhood and the real achievement of his marvelous fame, all is full of the most absorbing interest. What must gratify and perhaps astonish many of the loving friends of the revered and beloved subject of the work is the utter lack of reserve on the part of the devoted wife and the indefatigable private secretary who are jointly editing the autobiography. Three chapters of this volume form one of the most fascinating of realistic romances ever given to the public, for they give in open and unaffected detail the history of the "love, courtship and marriage" of C. H. Spurgeon and Miss Thompson. Nothing could exceed the refined and delicate style in which this history is related. Miss Thompson saw her future husband for the first time on the Sunday when he preached his first sermons in London, at New Park Street Baptist Chapel. "I do not recollect my first introduction to him," says Mrs. Spurgeon. "It is probable that he spoke to me, as to many others, on that same Sabbath evening; but when the final arrangement was made for him to occupy the New Park Street pulpit, with a view to the permanent pastorate, I used to meet him occasionally at the house of our mutual friends, Mr. and Mrs. Olney, and I sometimes went to hear him preach. I had not at that time made any open profession of religion, though I was brought to see my need of a Savior under the ministry of the Rev. S. Bergne, of the Poultry Chapel, about a year before Mr. Spurgeon came to London. He preached one Sunday evening from the text, 'The Word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart' (Romans 10:8), and from that service I date the dawning of the true light in my soul." Mrs. Spurgeon then tells how she afterwards became alarmed at the tendency in herself to coldness and backsliding, in which dark condition she, by a great effort, sought the counsel of Mr. William Olney, her cousin by marriage. "He may have told Mr. Spurgeon about me," she proceeds, "but one day I was greatly surprised to receive from the new pastor an illustrated copy of the 'Pilgrim's Progress,' in which he had written this inscription: 'Miss Thompson, with desires for her progress in the blessed pilgrimage; from C. H. Spurgeon, April 20, 1854.'"

SPURGEON AS A LOVER.

The most striking thing about the love-letters which are given in this volume is the combination of real and unaffected religious sentiment with ardent affection. Spurgeon had the gift, which is not always allied with sincere religious conviction, of applying the higher sanctions in phraseology of the most absolute propriety to the most intimate human ties. He did not overwhelm trivial things with scriptural diction. He could write to his sweetheart about the popularity of his preaching with a genuine pride that appealed to her, and yet with a restraint that satisfies fastidious taste. Even to the commonplace phrases which garnish the pulpit style he never failed to give a certain impress of his own abounding vitality and love of truth. Here are two letters, one from each side:

MY OWN DOUBLY-DEAR SUSIE:—How much we have enjoyed in each other's society! It seems almost impossible that I could either have conferred or received so much happiness. I feel now, like you, very low in spirits; but a sweet promise in Ezekiel cheers me, "I will give thee the opening of the mouth in the midst of them." (This was in reference to the preparation of sermons for the Sabbath.—S. S.) Surely, my God has not forgotton me. Pray for me, my love, and may our united petitions win a blessing through the Savior's merits! Let us take heed of putting ourselves too prominently in our own hearts, but let us commit our way unto the Lord. "What I have in my own hand I usually lose," said Martin Luther; "but what I put into God's hand is still, and ever will be, in my possession." I need not send my love to you, for, though absent in body, my heart is with you still, and I am your much-loved and ardently loving,

P. S.—The devil has barked again in the Essex Standard. It contains another letter. Never mind; when Satan opens his mouth he gives me an opportunity of ramming my sword down his throat.

To this letter Miss Thompson sent the following reply:

MY DEAREST:—I thank you with warm and hearty thanks for the note just received. It is useless for me to attempt to tell you how much happiness I have had during the past week. Words are but cold dishes on which to serve up thoughts and feelings which come warm and glowing from the heart. I should like to express my appreciation of all the tenderness and care you have shown towards me during this happy week; but I fear to pain you by thanks for what I know was a pleasure to you. I expect your thoughts have been busy to-day about the "crown jewels." (He had talked of preaching on this subject.—S. S.) The gems may differ in size, color, richness and beauty, but even the smallest are "precious stones," are they not?

That Standard certainly does not bear "Excelsior" as its motto; nor can "Good-will to men" be the device of its floating pennon, but it matters not; we know that all is under control of One of whom Asaph said, "Surely, the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath thou shalt restrain" May his blessing rest in an especial manner on you to-night, my dearly-beloved; and on the approaching Sabbath, when you stand before the great congregation, may you be "filled with the fullness of God!" Good-night. Fondly and faithfully yours, SUSIE.

COURTING AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

Surely, the most beautiful building on earth is the Crystal Palace! I have taken many American visitors to that fairy land at Sydenham, six miles from London, and they have generally agreed with my opinion that it is unequaled by anything in the world. How many loving hearts have plighted their troth under that graceful roof of iron and glass! It was there that young Spurgeon and his affianced chiefly courted. "After the close of the Thursday evening service there would be a whispered word to me in the aisle, 'Three o'clock to-morrow,' which meant that, if I would be at the Palace by that hour, 'somebody' would meet me at the Crystal Fountain." It was during a walk in the Palace, on the very day when it was opened, that the secret of the two hearts was mutually confessed. Spurgeon adopted a peculiar way of revealing his love. While sitting with a large party of friends at the inauguration of the glorious building, waiting for the procession to pass by, he handed the young lady a book into which he had been occasionally dipping. It was Martin Tupper's once famous "Proverbial Philosophy." Pointing to some particular lines, he said, "What do you think of the poet's suggestion in those verses?" The lines were in the opening of the chapter on "Marriage," beginning, "Seek a good wife of thy God, for she is the best gift of his providence," etc. Full of profound pathos is the chapter in which Mrs. Spurgeon tells of the ripening of the perfect love between the two. But an episode comes in which shows how true it is that the course of love never runs with absolute smoothness. Mrs. Spurgeon tells how she learned a severe lesson.

THE LESSON OF THE GREAT PREACHER'S BETROTHED.

"This is the story," says she. "He was to preach at the large hall of the "Horns," Kennington, which was not very far from where we then resided. He asked me to accompany him, and dined with us at St. Ann's Terrace, the service being in the afternoon. We went together, happily enough, in a cab, and I well remember trying to keep close by his side as we mingled with the mass of people thronging up the staircase. But by the time we had reached the landing he had forgotten my existence; the burden of the message he had to proclaim to that crowd of immortal souls was upon him, and he turned into the small side door where the officials were awaiting him, without for a moment realizing that I was left to struggle as best I could with the rough and eager throng around me. At first I was utterly bewildered and then, I am sorry to confess, I was angry. I at once returned home and told my grief to my gentle mother, who tried to soothe my ruffled spirit and to bring me to a better state of mind. She wisely reasoned that my chosen husband was no ordinary man, and that his whole life was absolutely dedicated to God and his service, and that I must never hinder him by trying to put myself first in his heart. Presently, after much good and loving counsel, my heart grew soft, and I saw that I had been very foolish and willful; and then a cab drew up at the door and dear Mr. Spurgeon came running into the house in great excitement, calling, "Where's Susie? I have been searching for her everywhere and cannot find her; has she come back by herself?" My dear mother took him aside and told him all the truth; and I think, when he realized the state of things, she had to soothe him also, for so innocent was he at heart at having offended me in any way, that he must have felt I had done him an injustice in thus doubting him." New York Letter.

The thirty-seventh annual convention of the New York Christian Missionary Society and Ministerial Association, held at the 169th Street Church of the Disciples of Christ, in New York City, Aug. 29th to Sept. 2nd, was one of the best in the history of our work in the Empire State. In fact, Dr. W. A. Belding, one of the veterans of the cause, said it was the best, and he has a better right to speak on that point than any one else, as he has attended the state conventions from the very beginning. The preliminary meeting was held on Monday evening, Aug. the 29th, and though it was not as largely attended as other sessions, many delegates not having arrived, it was, nevertheless, a delightful meeting. The ladies of the church had provided light refreshments for those coming in on Monday; after they had served them in the lecture-room, an informal reception was held in which quite a number expressed words of greeting. Tuesday was occupied by the Ministerial Association, presided over by Bro. S. B. Culp, of Eagle Mills. In the forenoon Bro. D. H. Patterson, of Auburn, read a spicy and suggestive paper on "Some Perils of the Modern Preacher." Not having space here to give a definite idea of it we can only say it would do good if published, in part, at least, in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. To the regret of all Bro. F. P. Arthur, of Rochester, was not present to present his paper on "The Preacher's Personal Preparation," for we very much wished to hear him on that vital topic. "Some Modern Books of Value to the Preacher" was the theme ably discussed by Bro. W. W. Norton, of Niagara Falls, and many others followed him with timely suggestions. In the afternoon Bro. E. Richard Edwards, pastor at Syracuse, delivered a good address on "How to Evangelize Our Cities," expressing among other things the opinion that we might learn some valuable lessons from our Methodist brethren in the matter of arousing sinners to a sense of their need of salvation. He thinks this one of the weakest points in our methods of evangelism.

Bro. J. M. Morris, our state evangelist, was for the first time in a New York convention, and led a helpful conference on "Pastoral Work," making emphatic the wisdom of a minister so keeping a record of his work and the names of people contemplating obedience to Christ, together with possible avenues of approach to them, that he might turn over to his successor in office, or to an evangelist coming to hold him a meeting, and thereby do much to reach and redeem men to Christ. Bro. L. C. McPherson, of Jefferson Street, Buffalo, conducted an inspiring "Parliament on Soul-winning Methods," in which a number of valuable and timely suggestions were brought forth. The sermon Tuesday evening, by Bro. B. I. Denham, of North Tonawanda, on "God in Evolution," was replete with vigorous thought and was delivered in Bro. Denham's popular style, and though some of the brethren apparantly did not accept his exegsis altogether, all seemed to listen with closest attention.

The missionary convention proper, presided over by F. W. Norton, opened on Wednesday morning, the first session being taken up with reports of the past year and the president's address. Compelled to be absent that morning at a funeral service, we missed the reports, but can say they showed one of the best if not the very best year's work in the history of the Empire State Disciples. The board is sustaining Bro. J. M. Morri sas state evangelist, and we are pleased to say the ministers with whom he has held meetings in the state speak in the very highest terms of him as a Christian and as an evangelist. He is faithful to his work and loyal to his Lord, and all who met him at the convention were delighted with him. He occupied the pulpit of the 169th Street Church on Lord's day evending previous to the convention and gave us a clear, strong, inspiring discourse on "Man's Conscious Need of a Redeemer." We predict for Bro. Morris a successful ministry in New York state. The board is helping sustain Bro. E. S. Muckley as pastor at Watertown where under peculiar difficult conditions he is doing a splendid work. His patience and continuous plodding are inspiring. Bro. C. C. Crawford also is partially sustained by the state board at Elmira. His field, too, is fraught with disadvantages, but he stands by his work like the hero he is. A number of other points, such as Albany, Newbury, Poukeepsie, Binghampton and Greenpoint were recommended to the board for favorable consideration. A lively discussion took place regarding the possible establishment of a mission in Albany, the capital of the state, but nothing definite was done.

I must not fail to mention the excellent work of Bro. John R. Tolar, Jr., in the Second Church, Rochester. The First Church, on Howell Street, in this city, is a child of the New York Christian Missionary Society and was planted by Bro. O. G. Hertzog, now of Hiram, Ohio, and has been watered by the faithful ministry of F. P. Arthur, who about two years ago launched the mission, which since has been organized into the Second Church, who last winter called Bro. Tolar, a recent graduate of Bethany College, to be their pastor. He is supported by his father, the church and state board. His work has grown so rapidly that now the question of enlarging their house of worship is forced upon them.

In the address of Bro. Morris, on New York as a mission field, illustrated as it was by a map showing the location of churches and hopeful points where work might be started, our beloved commonwealth seemed to cry out to us like the man of Macedonia of old, for Christian help. Bro. Morris suggested that we should employ two men in the state; one to plant churches in the cities and foster them one by one until they could sustain a pastor, and the other to do general evangelizing among the churches.

Bro. Benj. L. Smith, Corresponding Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, was with us and helped much in counsel and discourse. His sermon on the text, "What is in thine house?" was very ffne, as was also his address on "The Work of the American Christian Missionary Society." This society puts $500 into the New York field and Bro. Smith considers it money wisely spent. We were also favored with a very pleasant visit from Sister Smith and their two little daughters, Josephine and Dorethy. They stopped at our little home during the convention. They brought sunshine and gladness with them and left the fragrance of pleasant memories when they went away.

Bro. W. J. Wright, of Washington City, came up and made the address for the Forign Christian Missionary Society. His was a strong plea. The foreign work was ably represented. Since hearing Bro. Wright we do not marvel at the success of his work at Washington. Sister Helen E. Moses, of Indianapolis, and Secretary of the Bible Chair Committe of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, cheered our hearts and instructed our minds with eloquent words; she made two excellent addresses.

Among others from beyond our own state, whose presence and greetings were spiritually helpful to us, were Bro. E. J. Teagarden and Sisters Teagarden, Baily and Swift, of Danbury, Con. (Bro. T., the beloved pastor at Danbury, gave us one of the clearest and strongest discourses of the convention); Bro. Phillips, of Boston; Bro. S. M. Hunt, of Springfield, Mass.; Bro. W. H. McKane, J. A. Goodfeish, Plainfield, N. J.; E. M. Flinn, Haverhill, Mass.; O. G. Hertzog, Hiram, Ohio (who also occupied our pulpit Lord's day after the convention, giving us an able discourse); Sister Norrish, of Sayre, Penn., and others were with us.

Among the new ministers in the convention were Dr. J. E. Powell, of Williamsville; Joseph Tisdale, of Tulley; W. C. Payne, of West 56th Street; F. W. Troy, of Sterling Place, Brooklyn; E. C. Harris, of Pittstown. Bro. C. E. Caston represented the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and Christian Publishing Co., with a fine display of books and papers in the lecture-room.

All the officers on the state missionary board were re-elected unanimously and the policy of the last year was endorsed and encouraged for the year to come. It was decided to change the time of the convention in the future so as to open on Wednesday before the last Lord's day in September. This no doubt is a nice change, though a few, especially school-teachers, may be deprived from attending, yet cooler weather usually comes with the last of September, and and with it more comfort. It was a good time to suggest such a change, for old King Sol was exercising his great power upon our delegates and making them swelter all through the convention; the people were in humor for a change.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions held one of its very best sessions, reporting gross receipts for the year of $2,500 and a little over. This is considerably ahead of the brethren in the state. Some one said it gave a new meaning to "C.W.B.M."—now it signifies "Can Women Beat Men?" Yes it does—in some places, at some things. Mrs. Dr. R. E. Belding presided with skill. The reports were inspiring, the outlook is full of promise. Mrs. W. C. Payne, of New York, was elected president for the new year. The other officers are all continued in office.

The Christian Endeavor address was made by Bro. J. M. Philputt. The Ministerial Relief conference was conducted by W. J. Wright and the Sunday-school address was delivered by C. M. Kreider.

The place of the next convention was not decided upon, but was left to the state board: C. M. Kreider, B. D. Denham, L. C. McPherson and S. T. Willis.

It is not practicable to speak of all the excellent addresses, good measures and hopeful signs brought before us in this series of conventions, but we wish to say through this letter to all who came that the 169th Street Church is grateful for your presence and help. May God bless our New York Christian Missionary Society and every phase of the work and all the workers in our beloved state!

S. T. WILLIS.

Wheeling Through England.

IX.

A week is a short time to devote to the Highlands of Scotland, but the date of sailing approaches with appalling rapidity, and the Highlands must be seen hurriedly if at all. Ireland had long since been crowded out of the program, and all hopes of reaching John o' Groat's House have by this time been abandoned. Still, much may be done in a week in the Highlands if only the weather is favorable, for the roads through this mountainous country are engineered and constructed with admirable skill. Most Highland scenery is composed of forest, mountain and water. The combinations are infinite, but the three elements are usually present. When you are not riding through a valley looking up at the peaks about you, you are riding along a ridge looking out on a wide expanse of mountain, moor and lake. When you are not riding by the side of some deep and quiet loch, about which no romantic legend could seem too strange to be true, you are being ferried in a skiff across one of the same sort, or perchance across some sinuous arm of the sea that winds its way inland until it is lost among the mountains. For my part, I know of nothing which more nearly approximates my ideal of perfection in the conditions for bicycling than a gently undulating, shady road by the side of a lake and at the foot of a mountain. Such is wheeling in the Highlands, and such, in particular, is the ride from Crianlarich, where the last letter was dated and where the first Sunday in Scotland was spent, westward to Oban and north along the coast from Oban to Fort William, at the foot of the great Caledonian Canal.

Speaking of ferries, there are no less than three of them to be crossed between Oban and Fort William. When the Highland ferryman sees a cyclist loom up on the horizon his mental processes, as indicated by the sequel, are somewhat as follows: "Aha! and oho! What have we here? Is it not even a wheelman? And are not all wheelmen millionaires? for how else could they afford to take bicycle trips? Go to. Is he not our legitimate prey? He is minded to cross the ferry. It is well. Shall we not charge him seven prices (for it is a godly number), and three more to make it an even ten? Verily, he is delivered into our hand." And so, being a guileless youth, a stranger in a strange land and unfamiliar yet with the exceeding "canniness" of the Scot, we are rowed over the ferry. Perhaps, as at Ballachulish, the distance is about a hundred yards, and there are seven other passengers and two trunks in the boat. You hold your bicycle in your lap to make room. The others alight, pay their two coppers and depart. You ask how much for yourself and wheel, and the answer is: "Ah weel, a suppose a shillin' will be aboot richt." The dubiousness of the tone leads you to believe that a reduction might be obtained by argument, but vain the hope. Pay quickly, at the rate of one-bicycle-equals-ten-men, and go your way, or it may be doubled before you can escape.

Fort William, besides being the terminus of one of the finest coast rides a man ever took and the beginning of another grand ride up the "Great Glen of Scotland," following the Caledonian Canal, is the starting-point for the ascent of Ben Nevis, the highest mountain in the British Isles. The ascent can scarcely be called climbing, for there is a well-graded path all the way, but it is a somewhat arduous walk of about six miles from the foot to the summit, for a considerable part of which distance the surface of the path consists of sharp, loose stones. The view from the top is, when there are no clouds in the way, a map of Western Scotland. In my case there were clouds in the way—great billowy masses, like an ocean of feathers, which came seething up from the valley below, parting occasionally and shifting continually so that, after all, I had the view in almost every direction. On the whole, the clouds rather improved than obscured the scene, and besides there was the additional and unusual summer amusement of throwing snowballs into a cloud.

Leaving Ben Nevis and Fort William, the road follows the line of the Caledonian Canal northeast, a series of four long and narrow lochs connected by artificial waterways and affording communication by boat between Fort William on the west coast and Inverness on the east. It was interesting, and to me surprising, to find to what a great extent the Highlanders here in the interior continue to use their ancient Gælic language. About three-fourths of the people attend church services in Gælic and there are some, though not many, who have no other language. All the schools, however, are now conducted in English, and it is admitted that the language is dying out. In Wales, on the coastway, where the allied Welsh language is still the common language of home, market, school and church, it is claimed that the old Celtic tongue is in no danger of becoming extinct. It was with regret that at Inverness our backs were turned toward John o' Groat's House and the southward journey begun toward Edinburgh, by way of Aberdeen, Dundee, Perth and Stirling. We are no longer among the mountains, but in a pleasant and prosperous farming country where sheep and tourists, as sources of revenue, give place to oats, barley and hay. Here is a chance to develop the cyclometer side of the trip somewhat and, with fair roads and no occasion for long stops, two days easily bring us over two hundred miles in spite of a head wind. We do not fail, however, to stop a few hours in Aberdeen, the city of gray granite, and in Perth. Approaching Stirling we begin to see that curious mixture of Highlands and Lowlands, which is even more marked in Edinburgh. There is a broad stretch of local, cultivated valley, through which the Forth winds its devious way—and that is Lowlands. But suddenly there rises from the plain, like a rocky island from a calm sea, the great rock on the summit of which stands Stirling Castle. On one side the hill is a sheer precipice, on the other it is a gradual incline, and on this slope, leading up to the brink where the castle stands, the historic town of Stirling is built Many kings have lived here since the days of Bruce and Wallace, but the personalties which are still dominant, the names with which to conjure here, are those of Willam Wallace and Robert Bruce. All wheelmen who know (as all wheelmen do) that a cyclist's regard for a wheel that has served him well is second only to his affection for his immediate family, will appreciate his self-control that is needed to refrain from speaking a good word for my Sterling bicycle in connection with Stirling Castle. But of bicycles more anon, when the trip is done.

Since turning southward the ride has been a constant wrestling with head winds, and a Scotch wind is in the heavy-weight class when it comes to wrestling. Leaving Stirling the field of Bannockburn is soon passed, where the Scots under Bruce defeated thrice their number of English. The wonder of this famous victory would be diminished if it were known for a fact (and I suspect it) that the English had such a wind against them as blew at me across the field of Bannockburn. It was evening when Edinburgh was reached, not a clear, soft evening with early stars and a mellow twilight, but cloudy and lowering, with a drift of mist through which the lights of the city struggle with difficulty. Hurrying along, dodging pedestrians and cabs and keeping a sharp lookout for policemen (for I carried no lantern on my wheel), I was half way down Princes Street, the central thoroughfare and chief glory of the city, when a chance glance showed a light far up on the right. Its position suggested a balloon rather than anything with foundations on the earth, but a second look revealed a faint silhouette of towers against the dull sky, like a city floating in mid-air and capped by a phantom castle. It was the castle rock of Edinburgh rising from the level of the city in sheer cliffs on three sides, and with the streets of the old town sloping up to it on the fourth.

One day in Edinburgh is like one lesson on a violin—hopelessly inadequate. The difference between the two is that the one day here is a delightful experience as far as it goes, and the excruciating part is only the departure. It is perhaps not too much to say that at no place in Great Britain has the sensation of being on historic ground been so strongly marked. Its only competitors would be Oxford and London, and—well, comparisons are odious. At present we are trying our best to appreciate Edinburgh. At any rate, if one is content to use superlatives somewhat freely and risk slight inaccuracies, it may be said with substantial correctness that Edinburgh is the most historic, the most beautiful and the most drunken city in Great Britain. The latter lamentable characteristic comes by direct succession from the olden times when "everybody did it." Here is an inscription which I copied this morning from a stone tablet over the door of a beershop, in the narrow old street called Cowgate. There is a bas-relief representing two men carrying a beer-barrel between them, and underneath is the devout motto: "O, magnifie the Lord with me and let us exalt his name together. A. D. 1643." Only a few doors down the street, over the door of a house which is now and always has been occupied by a wine merchant, is the pious inscription: "Almighty God, who founded, built and crownd this work with blessings, mak it to abound."

John Knox is the man of action who is most constantly before the mind of the visitor in Edinburgh, but among men of letters Scott is so far pre-eminent here that even Burns becomes a very distant second. Setting aside the boatman on Loch Katrine and his gratitude to Scott from mercenary reasons—and, happily, he is not a representative of many—there seems to be something unique in the honors paid to Scott in his native land. This is seen in the character of the monuments erected to him. In Glasgow a statue of the novelist and poet stands at the top of a lofty shaft, at the foot of which are the statues of noblemen, statesmen and warriors. In Edinburgh the Scott monument, lofty as a cathedral and graceful as a lily, marks the center of the city, and is its noblest ornament. There are many monuments in Edinburgh, and Scotland's heroes are all present in bronze or marble. But of all these effigies none pleases the American like the bronze statue of Abraham Lincoln, which stands as a memorial of the Scottish-American soldiers who fell in our own Civil War.

Death's Betrothal.

A few years ago a New York newspaper conducted an open discussion upon the topic: "Is Marriage a Failure?" The answer is easy and upon the surface. Where there is mutual love and respect, if there is also health, marriage is a success. When health is left out, even the most ardent love does not count, and marriage is invariably a failure.

Modern science has cried the warning so often that all should realize the dangers of wedlock to people in ill-health. In a case of this kind death lurks on every side—in the kiss of betrothal and the caress of the honeymoon. The man who is suffering from ill-health is a physical bankrupt, and has no right to condemn a woman to be his nurse for life and the mother of babes that inherit his physical weakness. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts directly on the digestive organism. It makes it strong and its action perfect. When a man's digestion is all right his blood will be pure; when his blood is pure his nervous system will be strong and his health vigorous.

A woman who suffers from weakness and disease of the delicate organism of her sex is certain to suffer from general ill-health, and to be an unhappy, helpless invalid and a disappointment as a wife. Her children will be weak, puny and peevish. A happy home is an impossibility for her until her health is restored. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures all troubles of the distinctly feminine organism. It cures them speedily, completely and permanently. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Both medicines are sold by all good dealers.

Chicago Letter.

Each year marks an increase in the number of Disciples of Christ who attend the summer school of the University of Chicago. This is partly due to the location of the University in the great metropolis of the Central States and to the attractive features of the work during the summer quarter of the University, and it is partly due to the influence of the Disciples' Divinity House, which corporation has fine rooms, both for general meetings and for classroom work, furnished them free in the University buildings. The following list may not be complete, but it includes most of the students and visitors among our own brethren: Hiram Van Kirk and Erret Gates, Instructors in the Divinity House '98-'99; J. Mad Williams, Drake University; Hugh McClellan, Shelbyville, Ky., N. U.; Henry Minnick, Lubec, Maine, Butler; C. G. Brelos, Tiffin, O.; Bethany; Austin Hunter, Ada, O., Hiram; D. J. Marshall, Palmyra, Mo., University of Missiouri; A. L. Chapman, missionary to Turkey, Bethany; B. L. Kershner, Pittsburg, Pa.; E. M. Gordon, Mungeli, India; H. W. Hoover, Bethany; J. R. McIntyre, Drake; E. W. Allen, Hiram, formerly at Buffalo, N. Y., now preaching for the Ravenswood Church; C. B. Reynolds, Milligan College; A. L. Johnson, Ohio Normal University; E. W. Mathews, Butler College; S. A. Harker, Irvington; W. F. Barr, W. S. Goode, University of Missouri; N. H. Shepherd, Valparaiso, Ind.; J. D. Minnick, John Lister, J. L. Darsie, Little Rock, Bethany. Among the visitors have been Profs. B. E. Dean and G. A. Peckham, of Hiram College; T. N. Calvin, Waco, Tex.; W. E. Ellis, Nashville, Tenn.; C. C. Rowlison, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

In the above list are well-known workers in our brotherhood, and as Chicago is already the greatest center for theological seminaries and Bible institutes in the world, the time is not far distant when several hundreds of our best preachers and teachers will be gathered annually in Chicago and its Disciple suburb across the lake known as Macatawa Park. No city in the world offers better advantages to the graduates of our colleges for advanced study in the Bible and methods of church work. Besides the Moody Bible Institute and such social settlements as the University Settlement, the Hull House and the Chicago Commons, there are more than a dozen divinity schools and missionary training schools in Chicago. Some of these, as the Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) and the McCormick Theological Seminary (Presbyterian) have each over one million dollars endowment. The Garret Biblical Institute is a part of Northwestern University, an institution controlled by our Methodist brethren, which has even a larger student attendance than the University of Chicago. Most of the work in all these institutions is graduate work. The importance of having the Disciples' Divinity House, where graduate students of our own colleges may form a nucleus, may be seen at a glance by those who understand the situation.

1. It would help solve our problem of city evangelization.

2. It would help solve the problem of adequately supplying the pulpits of our city churches. The best of men cannot build up city churches with country methods.

3. It would in some measure, at least, supply the growing demand among us for trained teachers, editors and authors. While "our literature" in the past, not only supplied the demand of the past but still deserves careful study, there is great need in our ranks for sane, consecrated writers and teachers who understand the conditions of to-day and who will be our leaders in the first quarter of the nineteenth century.

How few people realize the great crisis through which we are passing! We need to pray for wisdom from Him who guides the destiny of nations. The sermons of two leading Baptist preachers were reported in one of our metropolitan dailies last Monday. I quote the substance of one sentence from each. "Why should a campaign of one hundred days with a third-class nation make us crazy to abandon a safe national policy to launch upon an unknown sea of international diplomacy?" "Wherever 'Old Glory' has been raised she shall wave forever." But the war with Spain, with its glorious victories, is only an episode in the crisis through which we are passing. Two words may be written over the social, political and religious developments of our day, "Unity" and "Expansion;" or, as the secretary of our Foreign Society would say, "Enlargement." Think of how all parts of the world are touched by a city paper. The Chicago Record had a reporter present at the battle of Manila and paid $1,700 for his cablegram report. The Czar of Russia proposes a Peace Congress one day, and the nations of the earth express themselves against it the next day. God has called the Disciples of Christ to occupy the central place in the most strategic nation on earth. They have been preaching and praying for unity and God is answering their prayers. Shall we fail to learn the lesson of enlargement as a great brotherhood? The Foreign Society is giving us a noble demonstration of expansion. Ten missionaries sent out in one month. What a glorious act of faith and courage! The practical way to answer the above question during September is to push the Church Extension offering.

The writer has been absent from Chicago again. A brief visit to the old home in St. Louis County and a brief visit to Indianapolis. Dear mother is growing old. My reader, be kind to the loved ones in the old home. They need your sympathy more than your money. Don't send the dear old mother an occasional money order and think it will satisy the heart that is longing to leap for joy because you are "home again." I stopped long enough in Indianapolis to report the progress of our Bible work in Virginia to the educational committee of the C. W. B. M. I then had the pleasure of bringing Mrs. O. A. Burgess to Chicago with me. We hope the change will enable her to gain her wonted strength. Mrs. Young and I consider it a privilege to have this noble woman visit us. C. A. YOUNG.

St. Louis Letter.

St. Louis has had a prolonged wave of heat. September opened like an oven! The first Sunday was "a scorcher;" too hot to go to church, to the park, or to stay at home! A heavy shower, but of short duration, fell in the western part of the city in the afternoon, but this failed to cool the atmosphere. The heat was intense, but a cool wave came on Wednesday last and we are comfortable.

The absent pastors have all returned and the churches are now confronted with a new campaign of work. Some of the churches have not had regular preachers for the summer, although most of them have had preaching regularly. I am speaking now of the churches of Christ in St. Louis.

F. G. Tyrrell, the popular pastor of the Central Christian Church was in his pulpit again Sept. 4th, and delighted his audience with one of his characteristically "Tyrrellian" discourses, a good account of which appeared in the St. Louis Republic on Monday morning following. He is fresh from the North and full of new life from the life-giving energy of the lake and the woods.

The First Church had its house swept and garnished during the summer, and on Bro. Fannon's return from a trip to Iowa gave him a warm reception. The house has been beautifully overhauled and is now a delightful resort for lovers of God more than lovers of pleasure. Bro. Fannon came back and plunged headlong into hard work. He is always animating and vigorous, but in his absence he managed to still more deeply intensify his already highly developed religious nature in religious work, and began the new campaign with a greater determination to do greater things for the Master than ever.

Mt. Cabanne Church has abated nothing for the hot season. This church comes about as near keeping an open house for all the year as any of our churches in this or any other city. Dr. Dungan has been found so full of Bible knowlege and so willing to impart it that he has become a veritable well of salvation for the people. He is in constant demand by his church in its various activities and is too good-natured to refuse much that is asked of him not ordinarily within the supposed range of a pastor's duties in hot weather.

Beulah is one of our younger churches, and its pastor, Bro. Smith, was absent a month visiting his mother and friends in "Old Virginia," but the church did not suffer thereby. It has in it some of the non-weather, nonkillable elements, and persisted in keeping an open house and in growing during the summer. Bro. Smith reports that the outlook for that church was never brighter, and the church reports that he never preached better.

The Fourth Church kept its pendulum swinging all summer. Bro. Kern is too seriously in earnest in what he does to permit even of the appearance of play. And, lest his pastoral duties might not be sufficient, or for some other good reason, some months ago he with his good wife took up the study of medicine; which, by the way, would not be a an unprofitable equipment for any city pastor. Bro. Kern reports the church ready for active service in the fall campaign.

When Ague Shakes You

you can shake the Ague by using AYER'S AGUE CURE. It is the one certain and infallible cure for that depleting disease. It has been tried in many countries and under various conditions, and has never been known to fail. An old veteran writes:—

"You may be interested to know my experience many years ago with Ayer's Ague Cure. The year before the war I was in Kansas. Some twenty of us were engaged in farming, and suddenly all were taken with fever and ague. We tried almost everything without getting any help, till at last I sent to the city and procured a bottle of Ayer's Ague Cure. I recovered at once. The others followed my example, and they, too, recovered. Every one in camp took the remedy and was cured by it. I went all through the war, have lived in thirteen different states of the Union, and have never had the ague since."

O. B. SMITH, St. Augustine, Fla.

There's only one thing to get for ague:

Get AYER'S Ague Cure.

The Second Church still stands at its post o duty as a sentinel in the presence of a grea enemy. Bruce Wolverton has been preaching earnestly and faithfully during the summe and has been awarded with frequent additions to the church. But this church is peculiarly surrounded; has great burdens to carry and will need more help from other than its own resources if it is to hold the fort in the field another year. It has a good plant, is located in a needy district and deserves to be upheld in its fight against sin.

Compton Heights has been trying preachers, but it is not pleased to continue the experience It has now secured a pastor in the person of S. B. Moore, of Galesburg, Ill., and is putting its house in order for a new effort. This church has lots of young energy and a good general will certainly lead them to great accomplishments in that new field. This is one of the live churches of the city.

West End Church has ventured on something new, but long needed by other churches in this city—an assistant pastor. So much o Bro. Bartholomew's time is taken up in business matters that, at his own request, Bro West has been called to assist him in church work. Three of our churches, the First, Central and Cabanne, have each a lady missionary employed, but this is the first of our churches in the city, to the writer's knowledge, to employ an assistant pastor. The result will b watched with interest.

The Fifth Church still lives. For years its existence seemed to be a question of doubt, bu it persisted in living. The doubting ones then concluded that if it wouldn't die it ought to b killed, but still it lives. It was voted dead by the city mission board a few years ago and its property advertised for sale, but it still lives It was called "a rat hole" and "a sink hole" d other unpleasant names, but it has survived em all. The Lord sent them the right man and ey prospered, and that man is W. F. Hamann. -day no preacher is better respected than o. Hamann and no church more deserving of aise for perseverance under trying circum- ances than the Fifth Church of this city.

Two weeks ago our brethren in Carondelet cured a tent that had been pitched by others d began a meeting. Bro. Fannon and Bro. ngan began preaching there and have eady awakened considerable interest.

The preachers resumed their Monday meet- gs last week. Bro. Fannon was elected esident and a new program will be prepared a new committee for the fall and winter eetings.

The quarterly meeting of the Christian ndeavor Societies was held at the First urch, Sept. 5th at 8 P. M. These meetings ve been conducted for several years and have come a fixture. They are usually well tended, full of animation and a season of freshing from each other's presence.

Texas Letter.

Texas is an immense agricultural territory, nce the crop conditions are of general inter- t. The Dallas News, a great newspaper, eps us posted on this subject. From its lumns I learn that wheat shows an increased reage and yield this year, and the corn crop the largest ever raised, being fully twenty- e per cent. larger than last year. The cotton op, too, is immense. In the coast district it a fraction smaller than in '97, but in all ner sections the yield is much larger. In the uthwest there is an increase of ten per cent., the central part the increase is eleven per nt., in the northwest it is twelve per cent., ile the eastern section mounts up to fifteen r cent., which will foot up a grand total of t less than 3,500,000 bales. Moral: If you e hungry or naked, come to Texas.

"King Saul," by J. Breckenridge Ellis, thor of "In the Days of Jehu," is a hand- me new volume of 281 pages. Israel's first ng is made to stand out in a clear, simple ht by the author, so that the reading of him like the reading of a well-written novel. e style of Mr. Ellis does much to make the ok a pleasure. It combines simplicity, di- ctness, beauty and force, and you follow him thout conscious effort. His familiarity with s theme enables him to select the leading ints in the story without too much time on tails. The Christian Publishing Company, . Louis, sustains its fine reputation in the pearance of this handsome book.

The Practical Christian, edited by J. C. ason, our Houston pastor, becomes a semi- onthly. It is a genuine pleasure to note this bstantial evidence of prosperity.

S. R. Hawkins has decided to leave New leans. This is to be regretted. But this gret is somewhat atoned for in the fact that s eyes are turned toward Texas.

The outlook for Add-Ran University was ver better. Good crops and easy times will able our people to patronize this fine school it deserves. Special arrangements have en made so that the board, lodging and rniture for preacher boys will not be more an eight dollars per month.

Philip F. King, after two years of good work Belton, goes to Hillsboro. This is one of e strategic points of the state, and just such man as King is needed there.

J. W. Marshall and wife, I am sorry to say, ave the service of our state board and locate Taylor. I say "and wife" advisedly, for e is as good, if not a little better, than he. ongratulations to Taylor. Bro. M. recently osed a meeting at Sadler, where he organized Sunday-school and dedicated their new house. C. W. Worden reports encouragingly from lk. Eighteen months ago there were only vo members; now there are fifty-eight, with new house almost paid for.

C. L. Cole, E. H. Kellar and Bro. Drew have been at work at Farmer's Branch, and henceforth we are to have a church at that place.

Blooming Grove church sent her preacher, J. B. Sweeney, to Mortens. A church of thirty-five was organized and the money for a good house was raised. Good.

Foreign Missions are growing among our people. Total receipts to date for this year, $117,324.03. A larger number of churches, Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor Societies have fellowship in the work than ever before. Almost one thousand new churches on the roll and nearly as many Sunday-schools. Individual offerings and bequests have decreased, but the Annuity plan is increasing wonderfully. This is a new phase of the work, and yet it has reached $31,490. Let all who possibly can go to the Chattanooga convention and hear the reports from the mission fields everywhere. M. M. DAVIS.

Jacksonville (Fla.) Letter.

Three months ago, when we accepted the call of the Christian Church in this city, little did we think what was before us. We expected at that time to do nothing more during the hot months of summer than to maintain our regular services with decreased audiences, but the assembling of the 7th Army Corps here with its thirty thousand men, placed an open door before us, and gave opportunities for work we little dreamed of. During the early days of this encampment the Army and Navy Christian Commission began its work in the corps, with the aim of providing for the soldiers social, physical, intellectual and religious privileges, thus giving much relief from the tedium, discomforts and temptations of camp and campaign life; and with an earnest endeavor to lead the men to Christ. During the months of June, July and August, the resident ministers of this city usually take their vacations, going North to mountain and seaside resorts, leaving their churches either closed a greater part of that time or depending upon social services. We found this summer, with but two or three exceptions, thus to be the case. This circumstance alone vastly increases the duties and necessary labor of those remaining at home, as there are almost constant calls for the performance of ministerial work even from many hitherto unknown to us. Added to this we have had strong and pressing invitations to aid in the work among the soldiers, and receiving almost countless appeals from the parents and friends of the "boys," soon found ourselves not only deeply interested in the religious work in the Seventh Corps, but almost before we knew it fully installed. I have delivered a number of addresses in the various divisions, hunted up and become acquainted with a large number of those whose names have been sent by anxious parents and friends, visited regularly the different hospitals, written letters home for the sick boys, spoke encouragely to them and scattered literature among the convalescents, especially aiming to see that all physically able to read had a copy of the New Testament. The Christian Commission has quite a number of efficient aud earnest workers here, holding almost nightly services. Yesterday the head of the Commission here sent for me and in behalf of the Commission thanked me for the interest I have manifested, and said he was instructed to supply me with all the New Testaments or other literature I needed in my visits. I have preferred to carry with me to the sick beds of these dear boys the Word of God, as some of the tracts and papers sent are, in my private judgment, of much less value. Yesterday afternoon, Sept. 1st, I spent entirely in the Second Division Hopital where there are more than seven hundred sick volunteers. The afternoon was spent in writing letters home to mothers and friends for the sick ones, distributing reading-matter and speaking words of cheer. A great many of these men are convalescing, while others are nearing the borderland, and in the delirium of fever are calling the names of their dear ones they will nevermore see this side the eternal world. May God sustain the loved ones at home who have been called upon and will yet be called upon to mourn the loss of some noble boy! Every regiment here has its chaplain and usually they are busy men. I have in my rounds met them and have found them Christian gentlemen; but some of them have been ill themselves, and one or two have bee compelled to go away on account of ill-health.

Regular services are held in the various regiments by the chaplains, who are more than glad to have aid from the outside.

Very few of the Seventh Corps want to go to Cuba, and the disinclination seems to be growing. The tedious delay of months in camp, with the sickness prevailing among the men and the prospects of active service removed have had a tendency to make the boys believe their mission to be at an end, and many of them long to be mustered out ond desire to return to more congenial occupations and better methods of of living.

The little work that I am daily doing is on my part purely a work of Christian duty and privilege. I have no appointment other than that from my Master, and if I have but added my mite to the alleviation of one suffering, or been the humble instrument of enlisting one volunteer for the army of the Lord, I am amply repaid and rejoice; but I must admit I have just been in a position all this summer to fail to see the glory, or at least much of it, that we read about anent this war. The work in our congregational line moves encouragely. We have omitted no service during the summer. I preach at the Fourth Virginia camp tonight, Sept. 2nd. T. H. BLENUS.

A VERITABLE GOD-SEND to thousands of sufferers for whom rheumatism makes life scarcely worth the living, is Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. It is an old-fashioned remedy, but like some other old-fashioned things—air and water, for instance—it is unequaled by anything in the modern Materia Medica. Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is made of pure roots and herbs It cleanses and revives the blood and sends it coursing through the system, giving new life and cleanliness to every part. The acid crystals are dissolved and driven from the blood and rheumatism is gone, because its cause is gone.

In hundreds of cases where the patient had tried all kinds of mineral waters, baths, electric and massage treatments without avail, a few bottles of the Vitalizer effected a permanent cure. Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is not to be had of druggists. Address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 So. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Notes and News.

Good day yesterday and more than raised our apportionment for Church Extension. The Olivia church makes an offering once each month for missions. Wife and daughter doing well at this writing.

Olivia, Minn. DAVID HUSBAND.

Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from M. G. E. Bennett, Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 5th, which was received too late for last week's paper, says: "Church Extension aided Villisca; we gratefully reciprocate with full apportionment."

David Walk, in his report of the Christian Chinese Mission School, Los Angeles, Cal., for the month of August, says:

Two of the pupils were baptized during the month and one, Jeu Joe Wah, will sail for his native land next week as a missionary to his own people. The field of his immediate labors will be in the city of Hoy Yuen, District of Shun Ning Province of Canton, Southern China. He is well equipped for the service whereunto he is called and the prayers of all God's people are earnestly invoked in his behalf.

His credentials on the part of the Church of Christ, under whose auspices he goes forth, are signed by Elders B. F. Coulter, W. J. A. Smith and David Walk, and on behalf of the state by United States Internal Revenue Collector Francisco and United States Senator Stephen M. White. These last-named signatures will insure him against annoyance or detention by the authorities either here or in China, and our thanks are due Messrs. White and Francisco for the cheerfulness with which they responded to our request, as well as for the flattering character of their respective testimonials.

Five new scholars have been enrolled during the month, the prospects of the mission grow brighter with each day, and with an increase of efficient teachers there will be a corresponding increase in attendance of these sons of the Orient. We thank God and take courage.

To the Clergy of Missouri.

At a meeting of the State Board of Charities and Corrections held in the capitol at Jefferson City, on September 5th, 1898, the following resolution was offered by Miss Perry, of St. Louis, and unanimously passed by the board:

Whereas, Prison Sunday has been observed more or less, in all the Northern states, but particularly in New York, Massachusetts and Michigan.

Resolved, That the State Board of Charities and Corrections, of Missouri, earnestly request all the clergy of this state to set apart the Fourth Sunday in October as "Prison Sunday," and to preach a sermon on that day bearing upon some phase of prison life.

Chattanooga Chair Car.

To the brethren of Illinois who expect to attend the Chattanooga Convention: The church at Spingfield, Illinois, has made arrangements to charter a special reclining chair car which will go through without change from Springfield to Chattanooga by way of the Queen and Crescent Route, through Louisville or Cincinnati, as may be determined. The arrangement, however, is on the condition that at least fifty persons shall go from Springfield. The advantages of going in a special car are many. Besides adding to the pleasure of the trip the necessity of changing will be avoided and the advantages of a reclining chair car affords practically the accommodations of a sleeper without extra charge. The rate will be one-half fare, and the car will start at 7 P. M., either Wednesday or Thursday evening, October 12th or 13th, and arrive at Chattanooga at 7 o'clock on the following evening, giving a day trip through the mountains. The church at Springfield extends a cordial invitation to all delegates in Central Illinois to come to Springfield and take advantage of the privilege of the special car. If you can join the company, please drop a card at once to the pastor of the Springffeld Christian Church.

The Chattanooga Convention.

The time of our National Convention is drawing near. We should have the largest and most enthusiastic gathering in the history of our work. Every year these conventions should grow in volume and power. To this end we urge the brethren everywhere to come. Your presence will swell the attendance, and with the multitude come the waves of enthusiasm and the shout of victory. It is in the hearts of the brethren to make this a great convention. We urge you in the name of a great brotherhood to talk about it in your churches, Sunday-schools, C. W. B. M. Auxiliaries and C. E. Societies. In every one of these select one or more delegates to attend the convention. Don't fail to do this, as we want every church in the brotherhood to be represented in these meetings. Again we ask you to announce the time and place in the secular papers in your community; this will bring the convention prominently before the people. M. D. CLUBB, Chairman.

Chattanooga the Convention City.

Chattanooga possesses special attractions as a convention city. Its transportation facilities are unrivaled. Its entertainment accommodations are adequate to any occasion. The scenery which surrounds the city is rarely equaled, never surpassed. Its historic associations are dear to every patriotic heart. A splendid convention auditorium, with all modern appointments, bearing a seating capacity of 5,000, is at the service of all conventions meeting in the city. It is not strange that Chattanooga has come to be known as the convention city. She has successfully entertained some large gatherings in recent years. At the dedication of the National Military Park, there were 50,000 visitors during the week and as many as 30,000 in one day. The next large assembly to meet here was the International Epworth League, in 1895. There were 10,000 delegates and visitors present. The Southern Baptist Association came next, with a large and enthusiastic delegation. Last year the Baptist Young People's Union were here 1,000 strong. All of these were loud in their praises of Chattanooga's hospitality. In October the General Convention meets here, and all may be assured that Chattanooga's good name will not be allowed to suffer. Everything will be done for the comfort and pleasure of the visitors. Reader, make your arrangements to come. Let nothing interfere. You can not afford to miss the delightful fellowship of this great convention. You will return to your home refreshed and strengthened and filled with a deeper realization of the power of the simple gospel to conquer the world for Christ. You will be made to understand more than ever the genius and potency of the movement with which you are identified. In short, in this great convention, from beginning to end, will be a series of mountain-height experiences that will thrill your heart to its depths and send you away to become a flaming torch in the community in which you live. Every church in the brotherhood should send one or more representatives to this great gathering of the Lord's disciples. M. D. CLUBB.

State Mission Notes.

One of the pleasant experiences of life was the visit to Centralia, where I had the first real good chance to meet H. A. Denton, the pastor. After my association with him there I am not surprised that his people love him. They can't help it. Some of the best people on earth are in the church there, and this, by the way, can be said of Sturgeon, where I was at night. found them full of the great meeting just held for them by Brother Northcutt. They were full of praise for him, and he deserves it all, as also does their pastor, E. M. Richmond, whom they were not slow to praise.

The Pike County meeting at Clarksville was a great success. Bro. Dudley had gotten up a great program, and its carrying out made a profitable meeting. But death had been busy taking away the great ones, Sister J. J. Barrett, John Wyrick, Sister Ferguson, Dabney Woodson, Clem Bryson and others, so that it was sad to see the gaps. Yet, as I saw the younger ones passing forward to take their places, while our hearts were sad, we could still thank God.

From here we went to Carthage to the Interdenominational Sunday-school Convention. They had a great convention, but when it comes to the matter of giving, our people give more than two to one for the same purpose. Indeed, I believe that where our people are informed they are as good givers as you can find. If they don't give it is because they don't know. If a church does not give to our mission work, it is nearly always because the preacher does not urge the matter upon them. Of course there are exceptions, and you may be one.

A message called me home, and I did not get away again till Sunday, when I enjoyed the association of R. D. Chinn, of Vandalia, and preaching to his people at night. We have some regular contributors to our work there who never fail, among whom are Sisters Sperry and Culbertson. May the Lord bless them!

The Ralls County meeting was a great success. It was bound to be so, for J. B. Corwin was at the throttle. No church can entertain better than Center, and it was one of the most enjoyable meetings of the year. Of course ye secretary and his fellow-tramp, H. F. Davis, stopped at Hotel Wicks. We know the good places. I pleaded for an early place on the program, and it was kindly given, and I hastened home to find Mrs. Abbott in such condition that I could not go to either the Cooper County or the Maryville district convention. It was my loss. But all my appointments now must be made subject to her condition.

The program has been delayed, and will be found in the next issue. It is a good one. We are looking for a great convention. Nevada sends invitation to all. Free entertainment for all who come.

Round-trip rates of one fare has been granted by Missouri Pacific, M. K. & T., Ft. Scott & Memphis and the Port Arthur Route. Don't forget these roads. We are pulling on others; with what result we do not yet know.

Another thing: We made arrangements with the men in the field and entered into certain obligations with them, trusting that you would help us to meet them. A great number of churches have not yet responded. Many have said, "We will come in the last month," Well, here it is; we are in the last month. We need the money very, very much. Will you not at once take this matter up? Press it upon your people, they will not say you nay.

Yours in his name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

Michigan State Convention.

The 30th annual convention of the brethren in Michigan was held at Saginaw, Aug. 31 to Sept. 4. It was one of great importance to our work in the state. The policy of placing the evangelistic and executive work of the assocaition under the care of different persons has been under experiment during the year and this convention was to show the result. As we began the year somewhat heavily in debt no evangelist was employed, every effort being directed towards putting our financial affairs upon a better basis. Before the convention closed we reduced our debt to $38. This will probably be cleared off in a very few weeks.

The opening meeting on Wednesday evening, with the address of welcome by Prof. S. W. Pearcy and reply by our former state evangelist, L. W. Spayd, and the sermon by G. K. Berry, pastor at Ionia, gave us a splendid start. In the business session of Thursday morning, practical and pointed addresses on different phases of evangelistic work were delivered by E. M. Widger, B. E. Rossell, C. M. C. Cook and J. L. Smith. Then followed the report of the board. It showed much progress during the year. There are known to exist in the whole state 101 churches. Twenty-one of these had not reported, but the eighty reporting showed a net increase in membership of 839, their present membership being 7,779. Our total membership in the state is probably just about 9,000. The number reported in 1895 was 7,159. These eighty churches report a total property value of $186,696.50, against which there are debts aggregating only $15,047. They have raised for all kinds of local work $27,308.90, and for missions $3,380.87. This latter item promises to be larger in the future. Several pastors have been located through the instrumentality of the state corresponding secretary and the outlook on all points is favorable to much advancement.

This was a convention of good sermons and good practical papers. The Ministerial Association met on Friday forenoon, L. W. Spayd presiding, and listened to several short addresses from different brethren. The C. W. B. M. had an unusually profitable session. There was a desire earnestly expressed on all sides to have a number of the papers read in their meeting published in our newspapers. Sister A. E. H. Holt, of Grand Rapids, has shown herself an efficient secretary during the year and has been re-elected. Sister Thompson, of Detroit, has been reinstated in her old position as president. The C. W. B. M. sermon was delivered by Bro. Widger, of Grand Rapids, and was keenly enjoyed.

The Sunday-school session was presided over by D. J. McCall, of Yale. A number of papers of practical interest were read and the Sunday-school report was presented. The report showed encouraging progress.

The Saturday afternoon session was intended for Y. P. S. C. E. interests, but after a very forcible discussion of "Denominationalism and Interdenominationalism," by W. W. Wyrick, Dr. Butchart, of China, addressed the meeting on Foreign Missions. Dr. Butchart also spoke in the evening, illustrating his talk with a very fine series of stereopticon views of Chinese life. Any convention which the Doctor may visit should insist on seeing these views.

An unusual number of delegates remained over Lord's day and were rewarded with sermons morning and evening by J. H. Garrison, editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Christian character should be stronger in us all for the lessons of Sunday.

The old officers of the State Association were all re-elected, with the exception of O. E. Jennings, who wished to be relieved of the office of treasurer. Bro. Jennings' sacrifices for the association were remembered kindly by the convention. ALEX. MCMILLAN.

Ann Arbor.

South Dakota.

The eleventh annual convention of the S. D. C. E. U. was held at Huron, August 25-28. Speakers from outside the state were Dr. James Brand, of Oberlin, O.; Rev. John Sinclair, of St. Paul, and our own A. M. Haggard, of Iowa. Brother Haggard gave three able addresses that were enthusiastically recived by the Endeavorers.

Our brotherhood was further represented on the program by Bro. W. P. Shamhart, of Aberdeen, who responded to the addresses of welcome; Bro. M. B. Ainsworth, of Watertown, whose topic was "Social Life in Christian Endeavor;" Miss Harriet Chase, of Sioux Falls, who conducted a devotional service, and A. H. Seymour, of Arlington, who had charge of the missionary session.

Bro. L. H. Humphreys, of Sioux Falls, was to give an address at the missionary session, but was not in attendance.

Bro. N. H. Mullins, of Hetland, who was president of the State Union, and is president of our own work in the state, presided throughout. Of the new officers four are of the religious body satisfied to bear simply the name of Christ. Altogether it was an interesting and inspiring convention. Next year's meeting is to be at Aberdeen.

Bro. T. S. Noblitt, of Ellendale, N. D., and Miss Pearl Wiley, of Carthage, are in a meeting at Clark.

Bro. L. W. Thompson, of Volga, baptized two candidates at Lake Oakwood on a recent Lord's day.

The church at Miller celebrates its first anniversary next Lord's day.

Bro. R. D. McCance, after a visit in Nebraska, is again in the state and looking after the work at Oldham and Elrod.

A. H. SEYMOUR.

Arlington, S. D., Sept., 1, 1898.

Minnesota.

Eureka! Minnesota has a $365 Christian. What do I mean? I mean that Minnesota has a brother who pays $1.00 per day the year round to benevolences outside of contributions to the local church. The fact came to light through the annual reports, the brother having paid an even $365 during the past year, and nowhere is there another state to show a like bit of consecration of means. The brother is not a lawyer, banker nor physician, but a farmer of ordinary means, having membership in one of the smaller churches. Glory to God for such men, and may their example be emulated.

And again, eureka! Minnesota's 3,277 brethren have, during the past year, expended $27,086.80 for all purposes, or a per capita of $8.26, and now again, what other state can show a like consecration of means? These figures are also deducted from the annual reports, which causes me to remark that it is my belief that the per capita figures given of our people by the New York Independent, $2.74, are glaringly incorrect, in that we are placed at the foot of the column in relation to the denominations, whereas we should be placed near the top, and I call for a more business-like plan of gathering statistics on the part of the state board secretaries, that we may not be further traduced. Having had training in a large business institution, where reports galore are the order of the day, I perceived, upon taking the Minnesota secretaryship, five years since, that a most unsystematic way of getting at the situation was in vogue and, securing samples of report blanks from various state secretaries, I made up an annual report blank which, in a three years' trial, has proven that the weakly state of Minnesota has been giving as generously as have been the denominations, and I am confident that this is the history everywhere, once the facts are gotten at. May we arouse pride in the business side of our profession, being not content to sit (statistically) with the ignoble and ungenerous, but taking place with the large-hearted and generous, where we undoubtedly belong—first, however, fortifying ourselves with the facts, clear and indisputable. Would that our beloved A. C. M. S. would take up the matter and supply the state secretaries with dragnet statistical blanks which shall bring to light all the expenditures of the brotherhood.

THE ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Minnesota's convention at Mankato, the closing week of August, was an inspiring occasion. A growth of 201 in the little army's ranks had taken place; many new acquisitions to the pastoral force had come about, and a spirit of confidence permeated everybody and everything.

C. C. Smith, Dr. J. Butchart, Chancellor Craig, of Drake University, and Helen Moses were present, cheering on and giving eclat to every session. God bless them! Next year the convention will meet with the Rochester brethren, an equally central point to Mankato. The committee on enrollment reported 153 delegates and numerous visitors.

Not the most memorable feature were words of cheer from surviving pioneer preachers and wives of early preachers, who are deceased, who were given a special program. A picture of these was taken for historical purposes, and those desiring copies of same at actual cost (70 cts.) can address the undersigned. Almost the entire 1897 state board was re-elected, with David Owen Thomas succeeding himself as president. A new corresponding secretary was chosen in the person of E. T. Gadd, of St. Paul (769 Laurel Ave.), to whom communications should hereafter be addressed. M. R. Waters is still treasurer, 530 Guaranty Loan Bldg., Minneapolis. The state C. W. B. M. re-elected Mrs. Carey E. Morgan, of Minneapolis, president. Robert Grieve, of Duluth, is superintendent of the Bible-schools, and Myrtle Oliver, of Garden City, president of the Y. P. S. C. E. F. Church Extension Offerings.

Receipts for first seven days of September, 1898	$1,578.32
Receipts for first seven days of September, 1897	707.29
Gain over last year	$ 871.03

NOTE. — $940 of this year's receipts came from a bequest, so instead of a gain from the churches, there is a loss in general receipts.

The offerings that have been sent in, however, in nearly every instance are double the amount of the apportionment. The stormy weather over the West no doubt accounts for the loss in other receipts. The offering should be pushed vigorously on the third and fourth Sundays.

Many churches have sent us notices that they have reached their apportionment and gone beyond, and that the remittances will be sent later. We hope for greatly increased offerings over last year.

Illinois Mission Notes.

Illinois Day comes on Lord's day, Oct. 2nd, and the cheering words from so many of our leaders show that it will be "an high day" among the churches.

Attention, brethren! Our convention is a thing of the past. We should be anxious for the future. We love our grand old state. Do we love it well enough to plant the cause of pure Christianity in destitute places? These places are calling for help. Our people are able to help them. Will we withhold from them the bread of life?

The state board is anxious to enlarge the mission work in the state. Do not pass this appeal by. Our strong churches should aid mightily this blessed work. I appeal to our preachers to press this matter.—W. W. WEEDON, Pres. of the Board, Taylorville.

For the Disciples of Illinois is both the best and the greatest mission field in the world. Therefore, while we should do no less for other fields we should do vastly more for our own.—N. S. HAYNES, Chicago.

Every live church should strive to help our state and district work with all of our missionary enterprises.—N. E. CORY, Barry.

It is plainly to be seen that the old-time anti-ism is giving way to the missionary spirit in this part of Illinois. The churches that are missionary are living. Those that are not are dying. Time and patience will solve all difficulties.—T. F. WEAVER, Sullivan.

I am heartily in sympathy with the idea of pushing Illinois mission work. There are nineteen county-seats in Northern Illinois and nine whole counties without a single Christian Church in them. If you know of a place where missionary work is needed in Illinois more than here it would be wise to plan its evangelization at once. The field is already white unto the harvest. Laborers are few.

May God bless you in the work your are doing and helping uthers to do. I am ready to assist you in any way I can.—G. HALLECK ROWE, Woodhull.

I will at least give you my word of encouragement. We intend again, at least, to give you our mite. We want to keep in touch with the work.—E. C. STARK, Champaign.

I am glad you are succeeding so well. I hope many more churches may be brought into fellowship with the state organization. I have my own plan for taking missionary collections and prefer it to the one recommended in the minutes. I am also in favor of the other missionary interests being brought to the front.—W. H. CANNON, Pittsfield.

The church here will be one of the churches making an offering for the work of the Lord in Illinois. I will do what I can to secure the co-operation of all the friends in this good and great work.—P. BAKER, Colfax.

After making a statement of the work and needs of the home board, a sister said to me. "I want to help this work," and gave me a dollar. This without solicitation. Let us tell the needs of the state and solicit. The gifts may surprise us.—J. B. GRAVES, Jacksonville.

One-fourth of all money raised in this state for missions is not too much to devote to the work in the state. This can and should be done without decreasing the amount given to other boards. The same amount of interest and effort on the part of our preachers and church officers in behalf of state work that is given to other enterprises will easily raise the offerings for Illinois missions to one-fourth the whole amount given annually. I do not believe that the churches of Illinois are prejudiced against Illinois as a mission field.—H. H. JENNER, Buffalo.

I am ready to do all I can to help along the state work. "Christ for Illinois; Illinois for Christ." God bless you in your efforts to evangelize the grand old state.—W. H. WAGGONER, Eureka.

I am in favor of the recommendations of the board. We will give one-fourth to Illinois.—J. E. PARKER, Waynesville.

If all of the Churches of Christ in this great commonwealth will fall in line and all of us do our duty it will not be long until all of the people in the state of Illinois will have the privilege of obeying the gospel of Christ.—H. C. LITTLETON, Sec. Third District, Astoria.

I shall do all in my power to put "Illinois missions to the front." We ought not to do less for our other missionary enterprises, but more for Illinois.—Geo. L. PETERS, Girard.

I feel deeply interested in the missionary enterprise, and shall strive to enlist the help of all connected with the Raritan organization towards bringing "Illinois missions to the fornt."—J. H. BEARD, Raritan.

I am much pleased with the general interest manifested in our state work. I think perhaps it was never so genuine and widespread before. God grant that it may continue to grow and deepen until every church, nook and corner shall feel its power! May the desert of of indifference bloom as the rose, that sorrow and sighing because of that desert my flee away.—J. B. WRIGHT, Milford.

I second the motion to push Illinois state missions clear up to the front and a little ahead, and if every congregation will adopt and carry out the recommendations of the board—four missionary days and one-fourth for state missions—that result will be obtained. Kankakee adopts the plan, and will do her best. She appreciates the value of state and district missions.—W. D. DDWEESE, Kankakee.

Let the watchword of every preacher in Illinois be, "Illinois missions to the front!" The fields are already white to the harvest. Shall we not go and possess them?—R. A. OMER, Camp Point.

I am heartily in favor of pushing the state work and will do what I can.—L. M. ROBINSON, Mt. Pulaski.

There must be no looking backwards in Illinois. Having determined to take four collections a year for missions and to consecrate twenty-five per cent. to state work, let our battle-cry be ever onward, never backward.—W. A. MELOAN, Blandinsville.

The state of Illinois is ready for the primitive gospel. Our work is to get Christians ready to give the gospel to those who are waiting for it. The "debt of ability" must be recognized. You are taking the right plan to accomplish this. With a Christian paper in every Christian home, and a strong plea for Illinois in every paper, large results must follow. The people will gladly respond when they see victory in sight. Illinois to the front!—F. W. BURNHAM, Charleston.

Too long has our state work been neglected by some and greatly slighted by others. As the handle is to the umbrella, so is our state work to all other work. The recommendations one, two and three, made by board at the Eureka Encampment, are good ones and our preachers and churches must carry them out.—D. N. WETZEL, Farmer City.

"The sunset of life gives mystical lore,
And coming events cast their shadows before."

The twentieth century will bring wonderful events. Wars will practically cease. Character, not creed will be orthodoxy. The earth will be one neighborhood. The Fatherhood of God, and brotherhond of man will be acknowledged. Arbitration will decide national difficulties and armies disband, and so mote it be!—GEO. W. MINIER, Minier.

Preaching the gospel in its simplicity and power to our people, and to those coming from other lands is of supreme importance. Hence I always use my influence for home missions and preach two or three times a year upon the missionary work of tte church and expect to so continue while in the ministry.—P. F. YORK, Normal.

The desire to push the state missionary work by districts is in perfect harmony with the spirit and energy now being displayed in all departments of a world-wide enterprise that is straining every point to crowd into the closing years of the nineteenth century the wonderful achievements and splendid progress that God has decreed belongs to this generation.—G. W. WARNER, Mackinaw.

Our state and district boards are one in action and purpose, and this call is for both, the receipts being divided between them. Will not these earnest words of exhortation bring up every church to the support of Illinois missions? Let nothing hinder you from sending an offering.—J. FRED JONES, Sec., Stanford.

Missousi Bible-school Notes.

The Randolph County meeting only demonstrates what can be done when the right men take hold, for it was one of the very best meetings of the summer. No department of the work is growing more than that of the Bible-school and no county has a more efficient superintendent than Randolph in Miss Nora Kiernan who, by the way, has come so near the banner for four years. The schools not pledged, but accepting their apportionments, were Cairo, Liberty aud Higbee.

The Boone County meeting at Red Top was a surprise to all the brethren, being way up in "G." The Bible-schools are not in the condition that is creditable to such a county, but will be so before the year is out. C. H. Winders is the county superintendent, and he has no idea of leaving them as they are. But other schools made good reports, and of those accepting their apportionments I mention Red Top, Olivet, Mt. Joy, Dripping Springs, while Ashland always has given to this cause. At Ashland in Howard, the friends were so generous to me in their giving that I wish it were possible to mention all the names. They gave me the apportionment for the school for last year and this, and did it so cheerfully and happily and promptly that for once in my life I enjoyed the begging. Bro. Alex. Dudgeon is always putting me under obligations for kindness, but this time it is a heaping up of goodness by himself and wife. The Lord bless them and all the Ashland brethren, with their preacher, Ernest Thornquest, for such favors to the servants of Christ, who pray that the work may prosper under their hands.

In Fayette I found a union meeting at the Christian church, but it was just the same, for S. G. Clay, the preacher, and W. L. Holliday the superintendent, said the apportionment would be paid. Bro. Holliday manages the best hotel in Fayette and one of the best in the state, and yet always goes to Bible-school and Endeavor, while other brethren tell me that they cannot get away from the hotel. See?

The Lincoln County meeting at Louisville has past into history, but the reports have not come to you yet, and so I may say that the condition was reported. Good. H. L. Morton is the county superintendent, while also secretary of the county board, of which W. D. Shaw is president, and these men will not let the work lag. E. H. Lawrence and Simeon Morris have been the faithful helpers of the preachers for twenty years, always seeing that they had conveyance in and out, and this time was no exception, which is quite a gift to our work every year.

Bro. John Giddens reports that a house will surely be built at Ulman and that the work will then be on a permanent basis, and this will cause all of us to rejoice with Bro. Giddens and the Ulman brethren.

As we are giving much attention this year to the home department, will not those of the brethren having such, write me a note, giving your work and its results, as many are asking who has tried that we know, and are their circumstances something like ours, and if so, what are their encouragements? Write me.

The Monroe County meeting went back to its old-time success this year at Santa Fe, being crowded from start to finish, while the character of addresses were above the average. The work reported was not much, but it will be different this next year, or I am no prophet. In Bible-school work the county holds up well, but in reporting its work it is a failure, as was seen in M. J. Nicoson's efforts. No one ever

CUTICURA

I had an attack of Eczema, and ordered a box of oxide of zinc ointment. The first application changed the Eczema to hell-fire, which seemed unquenchable. The druggist had used a rancid cerate and I was poisoned. A local physician did not help matters, and everything either failed to help, or made it worse, I was becoming desperate, when I thought of CUTICURA REMEDIES, and dispatched my servant for a cake of CUTICURA SOAP and a box of CUTICURA (ointment). tried harder and fared worse. The schools kind enough to accept their apportionments were not a few, and I thank them for it.

The new men are now at work, brethren, and you are welcome to their services, but they will want time for arranging their dates; so write them now—F. M. Rogers, Edina, and Geo. E. Prewitt, Schell City—and if you would do us and the work a good turn, send in the apportionment or a part of it or word that you will during the year. Let me hear from you now.

Among the Brethren in Missouri.

A. R. Hunt, at Tarkio, is giving general satisfaction, and his work is prospering in all departments of the church.

F. E. Blanchard, at Barnard, is having the joys of successful work to encourage and help him along. The church, Bible-school and Endeavor are all growing.

Lee Ferguson, from Drake, is now located at Hopkins, and is taking hold of the work like a Drake would be expected to do, and the workers at Hopkins are being revived in hopes and life.

Geo. E. Dew will soon be under his own "vine and fig tree" at Savannah, and has half-time at New Point and Fillmore, and will do them good by thus being with each congregation two Sundays instead of only one.

D. W. Connor has resigned his work at St. Joe and Bolckow, and will go with wife and daughter to Pueblo, hoping to fully regain his health.

The churches of Holt County have preaching and preachers as follows: Bigelow, J. R. Harlan, one-half time; Bluff City, W. H. Hardman, one-fourth time; Corning, H. W. Cies, one-fourth time; Forest City, H. W. Hardman, one-half time; Craig, H. W. Cies, one-half time; Maitland, I. Bauserman, one-half time; Mound City, W. E. Boulton, all his time, being the only congregation in the county with preaching every Sunday, and of course is the most prosperous church in the county; New Point, Geo. E. Dew, half-time; Oregon, Clyde Darsie, half-time; Summitt, J. N. Cole, one-fourth time; Union, Clyde Darsie, one-half time; Walnut Grove, J. N. Cole, one-fourth time. The Nodaway Valley district begins the new year with all debts paid in full, and has over one hundred dollars in the treasury. T. W. Cottingham continues as the evangelist. Their money is raised by the apportionment, so much being apportioned to the counties and then apportioned out to the churches of the respective counties.

H. T. King is giving the first and third Sundays in the month to Mt. Vernon, where he has been laboring with good results for two years.

J. F. Hargrove, of Mt. Vernon, is giving much of his time to the mission work of his territory, and is doing as so many other preachers in that region—giving it without anything like an adequate support. God bless them for it, but it may be charged up to some of the churches that are always pleading poverty to hide their stinginess. He knows which is which, and so will the other fellows some of these days.

Good reports are coming in every week as to the attendance at the Nevada state convention, September 26-29, and that is exactly right, too. Make it a great occasion for all the saints in Missouri.

The friends of Brother Creighton Brooks will regret to hear that his wife happened to quite a serious accident during the Santa Fe meeting, resulting in a broken limb. But all are glad to know that it is not worse.

Hurrah for Edmund Wilkes' good meeting at Linn Creek, with 105 added and money for a new house in the county seat of Camden, taking out another black star!

MISSOURI.

I held a 14 days' meeting in August for the church at Dripping Springs, Boone county. Preached 28 sermons, resulting in 11 additions, mostly by confession. Bro. B. F. Goslin labors one-fourth of his time for this church, whom I found a faithful co-worker. I found this short vacation quite restful. I am pleased with the changes made in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Bro. G. writes me that three have made the good confession since the close of the meeting. —E. J. LAMPTON.

Troy, Sept. 9.—Closed a two weeks' meeting at Lewisville Sunday night. Four persons confessed Christ. There was good interest from the beginning to the end. Will hold a meeting here in October. The board met Wednesday and agreed unanimously to retain me at Troy for a third year, to close Sept. 1st, 1899.—E. MERRILL.

Fulton, Sept. 8.—I just closed a meeting at Hickory Grove, Calloway County, with 25 additions.—A. B. PHILLIPS.

Arkadelphia, September 5.—One of the best meetings we have ever had here closed last night with nine additions; six by baptism. Bro. Geo. Clark, district evangelist, did the preaching. SOUTH DAKOTA.

Ellendale, Sept. 6.—On Aug. 4th I began a meeting at Clark, under the auspices of the S. D. C. M. S. The meeting continued four weeks. Miss Pearl Wiley, of Carthage, S. D., served us throughout efficiently as organist and soloist. I was the first to present the primitive plea in the community. The location in the town was unfortunate; probably also a better time of year could have been selected. Clark has a population of about 1,000. I have held meetings in larger and smaller towns, but never before experienced such difficulty in getting an audience. Indeed, it is one thing to hold a meeting in one of the central states and quite another thing in South Dakota. Results: Eight who are willing to unite on "the Bible and the Bible alone," four by confession and baptism two others to be baptized as soon as health will permit, and a few others almost persuaded.—T. L. NOBLITT.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Huntington, September 5.—Added during August, five; added at the Mission Point, 12. —G. M. WEINER.

At the closing meeting of Bethany Assembly, Aug, 14th, its president, L. L. Carpenter, having declined a re-election, was justly honored by the hearty adoption of resolutions recognizing his untiring energies in behalf of the assembly and expressing appreciation of his patience and unselfish labors in its diversified interests and regrets at his retirement from its presidency. Concerning this meeting, these resolutions and Bro. L. L. Carpenter, Bro, Allan B. Philputt, of Inpianapolis, writes as follows: "While it was a very interesting occasion and one in which the people's esteem for the retiring president of Bethany Assembly could not be mistaken, we all felt that a much larger host, if it could have been convened that evening, composed of preachers and others scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific, would have been glad to testify of their appreciation of L. L. Carpenter's services. The thousands that have come to the Park during the past years, and the scores of preachers that have looked into the face of the great audiences there assembled, challenging them to their best effort, can hardly think of Bethany Assembly without the tall form and kindly face of this Nestor of Indiana preachers coming up in the foreground. He greeted every one who came and gave the parting guest good-bye. Bethany Assembly has been, not a state, but a national gathering. Many noble things have gone forth from it to quicken and uplift our cause. The best speakers in our ranks have been glad to stand before the great multitudes of appreciative listeners here assembled. It has been and is the greatest thing of the kind conducted by our people. What it is, L. L. Carpenter has helped to make it. He has largely guided and controlled it, aided by the counsel of the board of directors. He has invested largely of his means and of his time. He has received not a dollar in return. It has been purely an unselfish labor. Few men have the capacity to do what he has done and still fewer have the consecration to do it for nothing. Short addresses were made at this last service by several, to which Bro. Carpenter, unaware of the nature of the meeting before coming to it, made a fitting and tender response. At the close the ladies gave a reception, at which a light refreshment was served. Howard Cale, of Indianapolis, one of the staunch and intelligent friends of Bethany, was elected president for next year.

Natives of the Philippines.

The American Volunteer, shipped to the Philippine Islands, almost half way round the world from our national capital, and seven or eight thousand miles from San Francisco, finds himself in a country where climate, vegetation, houses and people are entirely different from anything he ever saw. The cattle are only as large as goats, and the horse is almost a curiosity.

The population comprises about 200,000 Creoles and Spanish half-breeds, with a few Europeans and Americans. The four million natives, divided into many tribes, each speaking a different language, are in character and disposition very like the Southern negro. They are a peaceful, indolent people, working as field hands or day laborers when not occupied with cock-fighting. Women in the Philippine Islands are quite independent, retaining their maiden name, with the addition of "de" before the husband's name. A widow buries her husband's name with him and immediately is known again by her girlhood name.

On another page is pictured a grown man and woman, natives of the islands, each operating a Singer hand machine. The original photograph was taken on the island of Luzon by an agent of The Singer Manufacturing Co., whose offices have been established in this far-away country for several years.

Take Time With the Boy.

A. M. HOOTMAN.

Take time with the boy, and lead him aright.
He will have many a battle in this world to fight.
Teach him kindness while young; set his young heart aglow
With the truths of manhood; let his spirit o'erflow.

Take time with the boy, and guide his young soul
Into channels of morals, where God can control.
Help him put the brakes on passion and lust,
And gird up his soul with a heavenly trust.

Take time with the boy; he needs your wise care;
The seed-thoughts you plant in him will abundant fruit bear.
Deceive not his heart with words of disaster,
But give him the TRUTH, it will then please the MASTER.

Take time with the boy, ere sorrow and shame
Crush your hopes of future and mar his good name;
Before the long night of dishonor and crime
Befoul his pure mind while yet in his prime.

Take time with the boy; for the guardian of peace
May be centered in him to give the nations release.
He sovereign and king of his manhood must be,
Ere he unshackles the slave, or sets others FREE.

Army Life In Arizona.

MARY BLACK CLAYTON.

We leave the states on the 30th of November, 1892, and after a tiresome journey of a week's duration reach the terminus of the Southern Pacific Railroad. The place is announced to us by the conductor as Ash Forks. Nothing explains the name—neither ashes nor forks to be seen—only three saloons and one residence, the latter being a deserted freight-car, and occupied by a solitary man in the employment of the railroad company.

From this interesting spot we take a stage for Fort Whipple. The inhabitant of Ash Forks, and patron of the three saloons aforesaid, informs us that the stage is usually robbed en route to Whipple, and we start with little hope that the rule will be varied in our favor. There are no other passengers in the stage besides our five selves and an evil-looking Jew whom I at once decide to be a highwayman who is to meet his pals on the road and unite with them in taking our money and our lives. We rattle off at four in the afternoon, and enter Hell Canon as dusk settles down upon the desert wilds. Road there is none. The stage rolls and tumbles from one great boulder to another. No one can venture a bet on the happenings of the next moment, nor form the slightest idea as to which is going to be under which, or what was going to be on top of what. Now the stage is almost down on its right side, now we expect to be dashed to pieces on the rocks at the left. Now the mules are pulling us up a place so steep that it seems as if they must fall backwards upon us, and now we pray that we may not tumble a somersault over their backs, as they rush down a place as steep as the side of a house. However, grant that the harness hold, that the mules be sure-footed, that the driver be faithful, and that he may not have sinned at the saloons of Ash Forks: the lurid light which the lanterns throw upon the wild and desolate scene does not add to the general cheerfulness of the situation. We pass many dead and ghostly looking trees, whose white branches seem to clutch at us. Hark! are we not pursued by swift hoofs?

The stage comes to a halt so suddenly that every one is thrown into the arms of their vis-a-vis. The moment, the awful moment, has come at last! We are going to be called upon to stand and deliver. Will they shoot? My children, oh my children! will they hurt them? But a merciful Providence still protects us, and we are mildly invited by the driver to alight in the darkness and scramble down a notoriously dangerous portion of our way. We tumble out helter-skelter, and the weak, assisted by the strong, feel our way down the declivity. The Arizona darkness seems lonely and a trifle dangerous, and we are glad to climb into the stage again, and persue our exciting journey.

The saloons of Ash Forks furnished only beverages and a few viands to invite thirst, which were of no possible use to our party. The pangs of hunger make themselves felt. Some one produces a can of pig's feet, a slippery comestible at the best of times, but in this stage-coach, lucky is the mouth which captures a morsel.

However, towards the small hours of the night we see light glimmering in the distance, and we finally pull up before the opening of something, which is neither a cave, a hut nor a bower, but which has a little appearance of all three. Is this a robbers' den, and is the driver in leagua to bring us here? We are told it is a place of refreshment for man and beast. The night has grown bitterly cold, we are not properly wrapped, and we are packed tightly in the stage, so that our limbs are cramped and aching. A glimpse of a bright fire, and the delicious odor of coffee decides us to enter, even if we are lured to our distruction. What a strange place! The shelter is constructed of mesquite boughs, with their green boughs still upon them, and its proprortions are eked out with a few yards of canvas of the tent kind. There is a little partition or screen in the center of the enclosure, and from behind it comes to us such good smells. Here is the warmth and light and cessation from motion. We cluster around the stove. It is made of old tin cans from base to pipe, which disappears through the bowery roof, and draws in our opinion as never a pipe drew before. We gaze with interest at a long table; it is made of rough boards and the seats are stumps of trees, but the implements for eating are laid upon it. Two Frenchmen inhabit this mansion, harmless souls, and as polite as Paris itself. They bring the good odors to the table. We eat them and drink them, and are strengthened for the remainder of this night of terror.

We did not reach Fort Whipple until six in the morning, and I look in the glass and find more wear and tear than one night usually leaves upoh the human physiognomy. I am a hag! The most loyal and devoted citizen of Uncle Sam's dominions might be excused for uttering a groan, sotta voce, on account of having been made to endure all of the forgoing tribulations for naught. We are allowed to remain at Whipple ten days, and then are ordered to Tucson in Southern Arizona, which we could have comfortably reached by rail from Washington. Now we and our effects must be dragged through many more canons, which I am told will make Hell Canon seem like a paradise in comparison.

Arizona does not welcome us pleasantly. Its malaria takes possession of three of the family, and they shake with ague. I fortunately am exempt and administer quinine relentlessly and regularly.

When we start for Tucson we are tolerably well equipped for our journey. We have a government ambulance, six trusty mules, and a driver who is selected for his ability to wrestle with the difficulties of canon travel. We leave Whipple in a snowstorm, which seems to have been arranged for our benefit, as the ground is seldom whitened in this region. The invalids look sadly like the man pictured in the Vinegar Bitters advertisement, before he took the bitters. Fortunately we are journeying southward, and the sun begins to shine warmly, and the skies are blue, blue, blue. The road is often rough and wild, but it is not as bad Hell Canon. We travel only by daylight, stopping at ranches overnight. These same ranches are enough to make the hair stand on end of a person who has hitherto striven to lead a cleanly and decent life. The first shanty at which we tarry is built of unplained boards. The rain comes through the cracks and moistens our slumbers in the one apartment set apart for the use of strangers, male and female. One quick glance at the kitchen and the cook (who is also the incumbent of the responsible position of caring for the wants of our mules) takes away all appetite, and the proprietor of Big Bug, as he called his establishment, made a clear gain out of our sojourn with him. Big Bug is not a misnomer, by the way!

A description of one of the ranches applies broadly to all. At a place called Bumble Bee the proprietress is cleaner than the rest, but she is so cross that she alarms us. Why do cleanliness and crossness so often combine in female human nature? At another place where we stop for repose there are so many ruffians who drink, swear and gamble all night long in the next room, so lightly partitioned from ours that their light shines through the cracks, and we can hear all their ungodly talk. We reluctantly hear inklings of crime, past, present and to come, and we keep firearms close at hand with which to defend our lives.

The farther south we journey the more novel and interesting the country becomes. The distant peaks of the Rockies take on the most beautiful tints. They are many miles away, but in this clear atmosphere they seem to be in walking distance. How impressive is the giant cactus! those tall shafts of several feet in diameter, which rise mathematically straight as high as sixty and seventy feet. They have a monumental effect. They are armed from top to bottom with straight rows of prickles and sometimes they are crowned with a wreath of gorgeous red flowers. In this dry and thirsty land the birds can be seen tapping them to get their plentiful sap, and it is said to have saved the lives of travelers, who would have otherwise perished for want of water. The slight roots of the cactus are often attached to the solid rocks. Whence comes the moisture?

Some of our party enjoy the quail shooting. The meanest sportsman cannot fail to hit some, for they are plentiful and tame. They are not quite similar to their relatives, the Bob Whites of the East, nor are they so toothsome and juicy when cooked. They have a topknot.

After five days of ambulance travel, and five nights of of abject discomfort at ranches, we reach Maricopa, where we send our ambulance back to Whipple. We spend one night at the "leading hotel" at Maricopa. If it "leads" we are sorry for those who occupy the hotels which follow.

It is Christmas Eve. We cannot realize that "the time draws near the birth of Christ." The weather is quite warm. The place swarms with flies. There is to be a festive gathering. The population of all the regions round about come to participate in the fete. The house is crowded with Mexicans. As we rest upon our beds we hear a great rushing through the halls, a great calling to each other in the Spanish tongue, from the different rooms. A senorita is playing a guitar. In the midst of all this foreign jabber, a true son of the Star Spangled Banner meets a dog in the hall and cries out in genuine United States lingo, "Whose perp?"

We feel like applauding him, but are too tired to do anything except laugh.

One more tiresome day in a slow train and we reach Tucson, and aquaint, foreign-looking place we find it. The streets are very narrow. The houses are built of adobe (sun-dried bricks), and are one story high, with flat roofs to guard against the dangers of earthquakes. There are no pavements. The sand is ankle deep. It is warm. Wraps are superfluous. The sky is light blue. The sunsets are magnificent. Is not the climate like Italy? The town itself looks oriental, not unlike what one has read of Egypt. We go house-hunting at once. There is but one in the town which can be had for love or money, and it requires a great deal of money to secure it, considering its want of alterations. It rents at seventy-five dollars a month, and is already occupied—by rats. There are five rooms in it. The paper hangs from the walls in ragged festoons. The ceilings are covered with dirty muslin. The Mexicans call this sort of ceiling "a manta." The roof leaks. The landlord obligingly mends it with tar, which the hot sun soon melts, and it rains down, unimpeded by the manta, thus causing everything we eat, drink, wear, sit upon, or sleep upon to be spotted like a coach-dog.

Frequent sand-storms blow grit through every crevice, and the crevices are numerous and gaping. Mark Tapley would have been pleased here, for it is certainly a credit to be jolly.

It is impossible to fathom the wisdom of the United States Government in expending fifteen millions of dollars to purchase this portion of Arizona. It is a desert.

The Mexicans, who form a large portion of the inhabitants here, are tenacious of their peculiar manners and customs and mingle little with the American settlers. The Mexican women wear shawls over their heads, arranged so as to leave one eye for seeing purposes. The skirts of their dresses are very long, and they trail them through the sand in a manner which does not suggest cleanliness. They also sit down in the dirt on the streets or byways with a nonchalance produced by the fact that their houses have no floors, and that chairs never had any part in their domestic life. The best Mexican houses are built around a hollow square, and that enclosure is the rallying-place for the family. Occasionallly through the open gateways we catch glimpses of picturesque Mexican girls twanging their guitars under the shade of huge oleanders.

Nothing is more interesting to a stranger in a strange land than to note the manner in which the natives dispose of their dead. We are much interested in the funeral of a Mexican baby which we see pass our dwelling soon after our possession of it.

The little coffin, evidently home-made, was a box covered with bright-colored paper. It is carried on the shoulders of four little girls, who are gaudily dressed in white, with red flowers. The lid of the coffin is carried by the child's mother, who followed in her working-day clothes, but who wears upon her contenance as sad and bereft an expression as if she had been covered with black crape.

It takes no penetration whatever to point out, amidst the crowd, the Rachel who is mourning without comfort.

In May the heat comes on in force. The walled mansion we occupy becomes so heated that the withdrawal of the fierce sun during the short night does not cool it. We are confined as in a bake-oven and fear that before autumn we shall be very brown. During the day we are obliged to keep the house so dark that it is almost impossible to read, write or sew. When it is time to seek "tired Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," we drag cots to the sandy corral in the rear and lie down under the silent stars, regardless of tarantulas or scorpions.

The temperature becomes endurable toward midnight, and we are compelled by motives of modesty to enter the house at daylight, for our cots are stretched in full view of passing pedestrians. Sometimes during the rainy season we weather several showers before we take up our beds and walk into our domicle, where the thermometer stands at 100 degrees all night long. In the midst of the heated term the ice factory breaks down, and the tepid, strongly alkaline water is with alteration. We buy this beverage from a wagon which comes to the house and sells sixty buckets for a dollar. It is brought ten miles. We keep our drinking water in an "olla," which is a pottery vessel made by the Indians, and which possesses wonderful sweating qualities, thus cooling the water by evaporation. This vessel is swung by ropes in the open air. Some arrangement of this same kind is used for the same purpose in India.

We buy our wood from the backs of burros (little donkeys), which are driven about the streets cruelly prodded by the sharp sticks of the Mexicans, who know no English, but insist upon receiving cincuenta centaros (50 cents) for enough to kindle a fire.

The streets are full of pedlers, often old women, looking like Macbeth's witches, who desire to sell us queer Mexican viands, tortillos tomallies, and what not, which look so strange that we have not courage to taste them. There is much cactus candy for sale, which has no taste except dead sweetness, and is disgusting.

Two boys for a compensation were willing to allow us to look at two large tarantulas fighting. The combatants are crarried in a tin can. These all vaunt their wares in Spanish.

The streets also swarm with Chinamen who do all the laundry and culinary labor for the American residents. The price for domestic services is fifty dollars a month.

We go sometimes to the rose garden of Leopoldo Carillo, where roses are cultivated by extensive and expensive irrigation and where there are baths in which we spend the few comfortable moments we enjoy during the summer of 1882. This benefactor of ours has immense stone vats into which we descend by three or four steps, and which bring to mind the baths of ancient Pompeii and Rome, making us feel as if our names might be Ione or Julia, the daughter of Diomed, or some other classic creature of a bygone age.

It is hard to realize that this interesting and foreign-looking region, with its centuries-old churches, founded by the early Jesuit missionaries, is actually a part of the dominion over which floats our almost brand-new Stars and Stripes, and that it is within the borders which resounded with the shrieks of the lately fledged American Eagle.

Photographed Texts.

"Our old man is crucified with him" (Rom. 6:6). A vision of Gough, lying prostrate in the gutter and standing manfully in the pulpit; cursing God and then preaching Christ; living a life of infamy, shame and dishonor, and then living a life of righteousness, illumines this passage with a halo of glory. The Christian, preacher, temperance lecturer Gough; the crucified, the vile, godless drunkard Gough.

"A little leaven leaveth the whole lump" (Gal. 5:9). In a gloomy household there was born a bright-eyed girl, whose expression was sunshine itself. She became a child of nature. Soon the silent halls resounded with merriment, the frowning walls echoed laughter, and the once moody, morose and maunding inmates became hopeful, optimistic and vivacious. The lightsome leaven of that Liliputian fairly leavened the heaviness of the whole household.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches" (Pro. 22:1). In an adjoining community is a widow, poor as proverbial Job's turkey, yet rich as the billionarie Solomon. To solve this paradox one must remember that often those poor in this world's goods possess a fortune of the "riches of heaven." Widow Jones' name remains untarnished; whereas, Banker Smith is branded as an embezzler; Congressman Sellvote is stamped as a pilferer of public money, while well-to-do Miss Cleopatra bears the onerous name, harlot. A "good name" is always above par in Heaven's Exchange.

"And the world passeth away" (1 Jno. 2:17). No truer prophetic words were ever penned by the "Beloved Apostle." The fundamental law of nature is the law of decay. Physiologists teach us that our bodies pass away every seven years. So, likewise, everything else earthly has proven mortal, transient, evanescent. Marian Harland, in her recent book of Palestine travel, "The Home of the Bible," tells us the world Christ trod is buried fifty and sixty feet beneath the rubbish of nearly a score of centuries.

"His leaf also shall not wither [fade, marginal]" (Ps. 1:3). Immortality is the amaranth of heaven. Milton thus speaks of it:

"Immortal amaranth, a flower which once
In Paradise, fast by the tree of life
Began to bloom; but soon for man's offense
To heaven removed, where first it grew, there grows,
And flowers aloft, shading the fount of life.
And where the river of bliss through midst of heaven
Rolls o'er elysian flowers her amber;
With these that never fade the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks."

Oh, the depth of love of the Christ who bore a crown of thorns that we might be invested with a crown of heaven's amaranths—a "crown that fadeth not away!"

What the Rumseller Knows.

REV. C. A. RUDDOCK.

The Rumseller knows, yes, he knoweth well,
That the Drunkard's path is the way to hell.

He knows from the growing taste of rum,
That the tippler will soon the sot become.

He knows that sin, like a crimson flood,
Flows on, while he takes the price of blood.

He knows of the waste of valued time,
He knows of the record of daily crime.

He knows of the loss to church and state
From the wreck of manhood, small and great.

He knows of the widow's grief and tears,
He knows of the shame of infant years.

He knows of fond mother's distress untold,
He knows of the millions of wasted gold.

He knows of the blight that must surely come
To the drunkard's home, from the curse of rum.

He knows of the efforts of men to save
Their fallen brothers from drunkard's graves.

He know of the sorrow, pain or woe;
No one has a better chance to know.

But knowing all, he goes on to sell
The fiery Beverage of Hell.

Pointers for Teachers.

[As public schools are just opening, we give below an article containing many excellent suggestions for teachers which appeared in a recent number of the Religious Telescope.—EDITOR.]

1. As to management: Remember that the idle boy is the one whom it is difficult to manage. Hence, devise ways and means by which so to interest all your pupils in their studies and the work of the schoolroom as to keep them busy during school hours. If you cannot do this pretty generally, you had better quit teaching.

2. Recognize each child's individuality, and lead it out into habits of self-control. That is successful teaching as to behavior which develops in the child the ability to govern itself properly, and the disposition to use that ability. The man or woman who has to be controlled by another may be a fit subject for a despotism, but cannot be a good citizen of a free government.

3. So manage your school as to make it as easy as possible for your pupils to do right, and as difficult as possible for them to do wrong. Help them to learn, early and thoroughly, that right-doing is noble, elevating and happifying, while wrong-doing is degrading, unmanly and ruinous in the end.

4. Place all your pupils, as far as possible, on their individual honor. Treat them as ladies and gentlemen. Let them know that you believe them to be honest and upright in their purposes, that you trust them, that you expect good behavior of them, and that you shall be grieved and disappointed if they do mean and dishonest things.

5. Do not unnecessarily restrain their youthful enthusiasm, or curb their inclination to have a good time. When it is time to play, encourage them to romp and play enthusiastically—always, of course, in harmony with the rights, privileges and welfare of their fellow-schoolmates.

6. Do not offensively impose moral obligations; but, in a quiet, sweet, impressive manner, inculcate in their minds reverence for God, belief in the Bible as his Word, love of home, love and regard for each other, love of country and enthusiasm for the flag. Remember that "the teachers of to-day are training the Americans of the future. Therefore, teach them to act and think for themselves, under the conditions of American citizenship."

7. Remember that the kind of teaching you do will be determined almost wholly by the spirit with which you take up and carry on your work in the schoolroom. Would you have your pupils to be cultured, kind, courteous, truthful, natural, cheerful, enthusiastic and anxious to investigate the various fields of knowledge open to them? Then let all your work be marked with a spirit of culture, kindness, courtesy, truth, naturalness, cheerfuluess, animation, readiness to investigate and so be and keep well informed, capable of original thought and action, having self-control and steadiness of character and purpose, patriotic, ready to co-operate with others in close touch with the parents, thus winning the love and confidence of the children.

Next to the peacher of the gospel, the teacher in our public schools occupies the most sacred and responsible position as a servant of the public. His opportunities for benefiting the world by faithful service are incalculable. His culpability for neglect of duty is measured only by the amount of evil he inflicts upon his pupils, and, through them, upon the parents, the country and the world.

That the superiority of our country among the nations of to-day, and especially the superiority of our citizen-soldiery, is almost wholly due to our public-school system and our religious freedom, even the wisest philosophers and statesmen are ready to admit. And that the future destiny of our country hinges largely upon the quality of work being now done in the schools and colleges in the land, together with the work done in our Sunday-schools and churches and by the religious press, is equally true. How sacredly careful, then, should the teachers and leaders in these various fields discharge their duty!

The Heart's Daily Work.

The human heart is practically a force-pump about six inches in length and four inches in diameter. It beats 70 times per minute, 4,200 times per hour, 100,800 times per day and 36,792,000 times per year, and 2,575,440,000—say two thousand five hundred and seventy-five millions, four hundred and forty thousand—times in seventy years, which is "man's appointed three score years and ten." At each of these beats, it forces 2 1-2 ounces of blood through the system, 175 ounces per minute, 656 1-4 pounds per hour, or 7.03 tons per day. All the blood in the body, which is about 30 pounds, passes through the heart every three minutes. This little organ pumps every day what is equal to lifting 122 tons one foot high, or one ton 122 feet high; that is, one ton to the top of a 40-yard mill chimney, or sixteen persons seven score each to the same height. During the seventy years of a man's life, this marvelous little pump, with out a single moment's rest, night or day, discharges the enormous quantity of 178,850 tons of human blood.—American Journal of Health.

Phœbe Cary.

Phœbe Cary wrote, when only seventeen years of age, perhaps the most beautiful of all her poems, commencing—

"One sweetly solemn thought,
Comes to me o'er and o'er,
I am nearer home to-day,
Than I have ever been before."

and ending—

"Father, perfect my trust,
Let my spirit feel in death
That her feet are firmly set
On the rock of living faith."

The Rev. Russell H. Conwell, of Philadelphia, says that once visiting a Chinese gambling house he found two Americans drinking and gambling there, the older, who was winning all the money, constantly giving utterance to the foulest profanity. While the older was dealing the cards for another game the younger began singing the words of the first verse, but as he sang the older stopped dealing, and, throwing down the cards, said, "Where did you learn that?" "In an American Sunday-school," said the younger.

"Come," said the elder gambler, getting up; "come, Harry; here's what I have won from you; go and use it for some good purpose. As for me, as God sees me, I have played my last game and drunk my last bottle. I have misled you, Harry, and I am sorry. Give me your hand, my boy, and say for old America's sake, if for no other, you will quit this infernal business."

It gave Miss Cary great happiness to learn of this incident before her death.

Sinim for Jesus.

Words by our own Chincheo missionary, the late Albert F. H. Saw.

TUNE, MARCHING THRO' GEORGIA.

Across the sea in China far,
A mighty land there is,
A land where myriads never heard
Of Life's eternal bliss;
Where millions still to idols bow,
And heavenly comfort miss,
And know not our blessed Lord Jesus.

Chorus. Awake, awake, ye armies of our God,
Awake, awake, ye bought with Jesus' blood,
And quickly pour thro' China's shores
The gospel's cleansing flood,
And take the land of Sinim for Jesus.

Oh, could you know the awful need
That still in China grows,
And hear their groans, and see the tears
That wet their mournful brows;
Oh, could you know their deepest need,
It would your conscience rouse
To quickly take Sinim for Jesus.

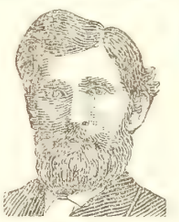
Cho. Arise, arise, ye ransomed souls from hell,
Arise, arise, your Savior's beauty tell;
And ere this century shall end,
The gospel chorus swell,
And take the land of China for Jesus.

And so dear Christian soldiers bold,
We thus to you relate,
Are you not touched with pitying love
For China's mournful state,
Will you not now in earnest rise?
Soon it will be too late,
And help take poor Sinim for Jesus.

Cho. Send me, send me, to join the glorious band,
Send me, send me, for Christ to take my stand,
And tell to sinners far and near
The gospel story grand,
And claim the "Middle Kingdom" for Jesus.

It may be, friend, you cannot go
To any heathen land,
But you can aid by earnest prayer
To enlarge the mission band;
And you can give your money, too,
And lend a helping hand
To take the land of China for Jesus.

Cho. Make haste, make haste, our Lord's command obey,
Make haste, make haste, our chances are to-day,
Since Christ our Lord will soon be here,
Oh, do not more delay,
But take the mighty Sinim for Jesus.



Side Trips During Prayer.

A map of the travels of an absent-minded person's thoughts during public prayer would consist of a series of elliptical dotted loops extending from the altar of prayer out toward all points of the compass and back again—if they always got back. A writer in the Christian Herald says:

"A brother rises in prayer-meeting to lead in supplication. After he has begun, the door slams, and you peep through your fingers to see who is coming in. You say to yourself, 'What a finely expressed prayer!' or, 'What a blundering specimen! But how long he keeps on! Wish he would stop! He prays for the world's conversion. I wonder how much he gives for it? There! I don't think I turned the gas down in the parlor. Wonder if Bridget has gone home yet? Wonder if they have thought to take the cake out of the oven?' or, 'What a fool I was to put may name on the back of that note! Ought to have sold those goods for cash, and not on credit.' And so you go on, thinking over one thing after another, until the gentleman says, 'Amen!'"

The First Railroad in America.

Gridley Bryant, a civil engineer, in 1826, projected the first railroad in the United States. It was built for the purpose of carrying granite from the quarries of Quincy, Massachusetts, to the nearest tide-water. Its length was four miles, including branches, and its first cost $50,000. The sleepers were of stone and were laid across the track eight feet apart. Upon rails of wood, six inches thick, wrought-iron plates, three inches wide and a quarter of an inch thick were spiked. At the crossings, stone rails were used, and as the wooden rails became unserviceable, they were replaced by others of stone.—Ladies' Home Journal.

THREE PROPHETS: A RETROSPECT.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The present study is a review of the lessons for three months, during which we have been studying the history of the kingdom of Israel, which separated itself from the kingdom of Judah at the death of Solomon, 937 B. C., and came to its close with the destruction of Samaria, its capital, by Sargon, the Assyrian king, in 721 B. C., having continued for a period of two hundred and sixteen years. The story of the Ten Tribes, which was the familiar name for this Nothern Kingdom, is after all only told for the purpose of illustrating the divine plan of operation during that period. Writers of the narratives, which are preserved in the books of Kings, were not concerned particularly with the progress of historical events, but only related them in order to form a background for the work of the prophets, who were the real makers of the nation's life.

In the lessons of the quarter, three prophets stand out with special prominence—Elijah, Elisha and Amos. These men were teachers of the divine truth and the interpreters of the Word of God to the nation in their days. They came at times when the kingdom was at its height, politically, which were also the periods of its greatest moral decline. The three occasions on which Israel arose to its greatest political and commercial prosperity were the reigns of Jeroboam. I., Ahab and Jeroboam II., The prophet Ahijah was the leader of the prophetic party in the days of the first Jeroboam; but after the long decline which followed that period the kingdom arose to power again under Ahab; but a corresponding depth of irreligion and idolatry was the result. At this moment Elijah appeared. He was from the hill-country of Gilead, east of the Jordan; was dressed in a hairy mantle, girt with a leather belt; was of intrepid and aggressive nature, a man of prayer, but the child of his age, and inclined to visit with the utmost severity any failure to perform what he believed to be the divine will. His name was soon renowned for the marvels connected with his life; among which may be named his announcement of the drought; his providential sustenance at Cherith; the unfailing supply of meal and oil at Zarapheth; the restoration of the widow's son; the fiery test on Mount Carmel; the providential supply of food in the wilderness; the vision at Horeb, and the prediction of the death of the King Ahaziah. His influence upon the ruling family was felt to the extent that his stern reproval of Ahab for Neboth's death resulted in the king's partial repentance; the stern reproval of Ahaziah for consulting a false god also struck terror to the court. The departure of Elijah in the tempest was a fitting climax to his rapid and meteoric career.

The life of Elisha, who "poured water on the hands of Elijah," or was his servant, is of even greater interest; and with him a still larger list of wonderful events is connected. Among them is the crossing of the Jordan; the sweetening of the well at Jericho; the supply of water for the army at Edom; the store of oil; the restoration of the child of the Shunammite; the cleansing of the poisoned pottage at Gilgal; the feeding of the hundred with a small supply of food; the healing of Naaman; the floating ax; the disclosure to the king of Israel of the Syrian plans; the bewilderment of the Syrian army; the prediction of the rescue of Samaria; the recovery of the corpse cast into the grave—all these show the marvelous character of Elisha's work and its deep impression upon the popular mind. In bearing and disposition Elisha partook of the character of the times, and yet was milder and more loved than Elijah; he wore the usual tonsure of the prophets of his day, and sometimes resorted to the common practice of arousing the prophetic spirit by means of music. He was followed by a servant, Gahazi, who even after his dismissal delighted to tell the marvelous story of his former master's life (2 Kings 4:8 f.). Elisha's ministry fell into the period of Israel's lowest political misfortune; but it marked the time of the greatest religious activity. When the nation was in distress and its enemies pressed on every side, the faith of their fathers was grasped with firm hand. Elijah and Elisha present the two types of prophetic work. One the stern, unbending proclaimer of judgment, the other the more accesible and friendly teacher of truth, the pastor of a nation.

The work of Amos, which came during the reign of Jeroboam II., shortly after the death of Elisha, marks a still higher revival in prophetic work. No miracles are connected with the name of this prophet. His appeal is only to the conscience and the heart. His ministry was of much briefer duration and perhaps not so effective in the transformation of the national life, but it laid the foundation for that new type of prophetic work represented by the great prophets of later days. No longer was the man of God a rough and uncouth figure, abstaining from marriage and marked by external tokens of his office, but a man of affairs, representing the ordinary life of the people; now a tradesman, now a man of leisure, now a priest and now a noble—the prophet was prepared to meet the life of the nation at its own level and bear witness to the will of God. Amos was a visitor from the Southern Kingdom, whose business brought him to Bethel and Samaria, where he denounced with all the fire of an indignant soul the corruption of the nation, and proclaimed the inevitable consequences of such conditions as he saw about him. These three prophets, Elijah, Elisha and Amos, mark the ascending steps in the progress of the prophet's work in the Northern Kingdoms, and prepare the way for the great periods of prophecy which were to follow in the days of Isaiah and the exile.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

1. The fundamental reason for the division of the kingdom was the opposition of the prophets to the secular character of Solomon's kingdom and the great danger to religion from increase of wealth and power. 2. Every crisis produces a man; Elijah arose at the moment when Israel needed him most. 3. The decisive command is always that which Elijah propounded to Israel—"Choose this day whom ye will serve." 4. One must never be discouraged at the seeming failure of his plans; it is only he who perseveres who can hope to succeed. 5. The sin of covetousness is just as odious when committed in small ways as in such a matter as that of Naboth. 6. The death of a great man does not mean failure of his work; others will carry it forward. 7. God, who gives life, is alone able to restore life. 8. The sin of leprosy, incurable and loathsome, is only a sign of the ravages which sin produces in human nature. 9. The hosts around us to-day are just as visible to the spiritual eye as in Elisha's day. 10. The man of God in every age is the safeguard of the state. 11. Ruin is always the result of disregard of the laws of righteousness. 12. The story of Israel with its sin and its fall is the story of every life that does not find its guidance in God.

TOPIC FOR SEPT. 25.

WHAT IS TRUE SUCCESS?

(Matt. 16:21-27.)

Our Savior in these words makes life the test success. According to him there is noth- worth gaining in the world but life; nay, t the whole world itself is not to be weighed the balances against life. Yes, it is life, soul, that he is talking about, as may be n by reading this passage in the Revised rsion: "What shall it profit a man if he in the whole world and lose his own life?"

It is life, not death, for which we pant,
More life and fuller that we want.

That person, then, is most successful in the rld who lives the most life in a lifetime. h, this is life!" cries one, as he thrills and obs under some pleasant excitement. O, t it were always true life and not death that rses through men's veins when they utter se words! "I want to see more of life," oung person declares with yearning. That noble desire, and if it were only gratified ays with scenes of true life and not with hts of death! Successful living, then, is to the most life out of life.

Two things we have to do in order to make l successes of our lives. First, we must ke the most of ourselves; next, we must ke the best of our work. In other words, must first find out what is the utmost we do, and then we must do our utmost; we st study ourselves, and then spend ourselves; must see what is given us, and then give it ay; we must see what life we have to save, l then sacrifice it. These two things done— ry one can do them—and life is become a e success.

"Know thyself" is just as much in Christ's rit as in the Greek philosopher's. The one o would make the most of what he has must ow what he has. Then he must never be couraged by the small talents he finds. God er can hold one responsible for what one not. Beecher said that when he was young used often to grieve because his endowments re so poor, but as time wore on he decided thing to do was to make the most of the le talent he did possess, feeling sure that l would not blame him for anything he n't have. True success is not in obtaining at you do not have, but it is in developing at you do have; it is not in gaining the whole rld, but in expanding the life, of which you sess the germs.

nd, wonderful enough, the way to expand to expend. That great principle of the vior comes out in our experience more won- fully every day, that he who would save his must give it up. It is true in every sphere. athlete to gain strength must expend ength. A speculator to gain money must est money. A speaker or singer who would n breath must expend breath. A friend o would be loved must pour out his love. If ad is ever to come back upon the waters it st be cast forth. And in every one of these es, if you turn the illustration about, and hhold instead of spend, weakness, poverty, athlessness, coldness and hunger of soul l be the result. "There is that scattereth yet increaseth. There is that withholdeth re than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." se old words of a wise man will never be grown as long as the world stands as it is v made.

FACTS AND FACTORS.

Spanish is spoken by 42,000,000; French by 51,000,000; Russian by 75,000,000; German by 75,000,000 and English by 130,000,000.

A new planet has been discovered. Its orbit overlaps to some extent that of Mars.

The largest gasometer in the world is at East Greenwich. When full, it contains 12,000,000 cubic feet of gas. It weighs 2,200 tons, is 180 feet high, 300 feet in diameter, requires 1,200 tons of coal to fill it with gas and cost nearly £40,000.

Last year on American railways one passenger was killed in accidents out of every 2,827,474 passengers carried. That is to say, that you can take a train 2,827,474 times before, on the law of average, your turn comes to be killed. You will have traveled 72,093,963 miles on the cars before that turn comes, and 4,541,945 miles before you are injured. If you travel 20 miles every day for 300 days in the year, you can keep on at it for 758 years before your turn comes to be hurt. If there had been railways when our Savior was born and you had begun to travel on the first day of the year A.D. 1, and had traveled 100miles in every day of every month of every year since then, you would still have (in this year 1898) nearly three million miles yet to travel before your turn.

An exchange says: The cost of the war, up to the first of this month, according to the bills published by the government, was $118,000,000, of which the largest items were: pay of troops and sailors, $27,000,000; purchase of auxiliary ships, $20,000,000; mobilization of army and navy, $17,000,000; commissary department, $15,000,000; ordnance and arms, $10,000,000, and the same amount for harbor defense; the ammunition for the Santiago fleet cost $4,000,000; the coal purchashd by the government for the use of the navy cost $5.000,000, and altogether $8,000,000 were expended in providing ammunition for army and navy.

The surface of the sea is estimated at 150,000,000 square miles, taking the whole surface of the globe at 197,000,000, and its greatest depth supposedly equals the height of the highest mountain, or four miles. The Pacific ocean covers 78,000,000 square miles, the Atlantic 25,000,000, the Mediterranean 1,000,000.

The preliminary report of the Interstate Commerce Commission for 1897 shows that last year the railways of the country paid $40,979,933 in taxes. All companies had not reported, but compared with the preceding year the report shows that on about 2,000 miles less of road in 1897 than in 1896 the railways paid about $3,000,000 more of taxes. The total dividends paid during the year were $57,290,579. Out of every 97 cents earned by the railways, therefore, above expenses, 57 cents was profit and 40 cents went in taxes. In the Central Southwestern states (Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Colorado, Oklahoma and Indian Territory) the taxes exceeded dividends by nearly $3,000,000. In Texas taxes exceeded dividends by over one million. In New England and the Northern and Eastern states dividends largely exceeded the taxes. The report shows that in the densely populated states the railways could pay more taxes than they do, but that in the less populous states of the Middle and West the taxes are already in excess of the profits from the business.

FOX.

Died suddenly of heart failure at her home in Clio, Mich., Mrs. Mary E. Fox. At the time of her death, which occurred Aug. 10th, 1898, she was 39 years, eight months and eight days old. She was born in Romulus, Mich., where she was married Oct. 8th, 1881 to Irwin Fox. She leaves two children, a little boy and a daughter of 16 years. It was said of her by every one, that she was "a lovely Chrisiian lady." She has done her work well and will be worthy of a crown of life. She was the daughter of our Bro. and Sister Eckles, of Pine Run. They will have our sympathy in this deep sorrow. R. BRUCE BROWN.

MINTON.

Warren S. Minton was born in Washington county, Penn., Feb. 10, 1830. His early life was spent about his father's mill, and he familiarized himself with the business in every detail. In 1855 he came to Illinois and settled in Clark county. Subsequently he removed to Edgar county and in 1864 he came to Charleston where he was actively engaged in business up to the time of the illness which, after many months of suffering, terminated in his death, Sunday, Sept. 12, 1897, at 10 o'clock P. M. On Oct. 18, 1859 he was united in marriage with Miss Maltida R. Wright, daughter of Samuel Wright. To this union two children were born, Clarence H., and Evangeline, now wife of S. E. Grove. For years previous and to the time of his death he was the senior member of the lumber firm of Minton & Sons, being associated with his son, Clarence, and his son-in-law, S. E. Grove. He has been intimately associated with the growth and development of this city. He was a man of broad information, keen insight into the affairs of men, and possessed most generous impulses. It has frequently been remarked by those who knew him best, since his death, that no worthy young man ever applied to Mr. Minton for aid in a business way and went away empty handed. His broad knowledge of men enabled him to discern the worth of a man and thus lend generous aid to worthy undertakings. In brief he was one of the old stock, now rapidly thinning by death, whose unquestionable honesty and intensity of purpose stamped their efforts indelibly on the community of which they were a part. In the broadest sense of the term he was an honest man, and that of itself is a monument more lasting than granite. For years he was a devoted and sincere communicant of the Christian Church and his walk in life was an evidence of the faith he professed. And now that he has answered the summons that awaits us all, Warren S. Minton will be mourned and remembered only as the worthy are mourned.—Charleston (Ill.) Courier.

WOOD.

In the death of Betsy J. Wood, the church at Cascade loses one of its charter members and Kent loses a pioneer. She united with the church at its organization in 1865; for 33 years she has lived a consistent Christian. After more than eight months' suffering she fell asleep in Jesus Aug. 25, at the age of 62 years, seven months and seven days. She leaves her husband and eight children. Funeral was held at the church, the writer using as a text Psalms 55:6.

J. JAY FINLEY.

Cascade, Mich., Aug. 29, 1898.

I Was Sick and Ye Visited Me.

Yes, I was sick and the board of Ministerial Relief visited me, and enabled me to obtain treatment in a sanitarium, without which I should never have been able for work again, and perhaps would not now have been living. Since I have somewhat recovered, I have done a little work, and baptized a few converts, and ere this year comes to a close I hope to be in active regular work again.

Now, brethren and friends, there is no theorizing with me about what Ministerial Relief may do, or the wisdom of making a specialty of offerings for it in all our churches. I know what it has done, and many of you know what it has done elsewhere, and we surely must know that it is a grand and noble work, deserving the earnest support of all.

"Sick, and ye visited me"—but what kind of visits do you make? Let us be very personal in this matter—those which bring sympathy are good, those which bring encouraging words and prayers are all right, but when a fellow is down and never expects to be up again, the visitor which brings him the means to put him on his feet, is the one he is glad to see and is the one who adopts the quickest, the best and surest way of showing real sympathy.

And then, brethren, do we remember that there are a great number of our real 'fathers in the gospel' who have given the best of their lives to upholding the Christ to the world, and have done more than you or I ever may hope to do; who, because of no fault of theirs almost destitute? Who needs our sympa more than they do? Do we in sympathy member them, I say? What have we done show to them and to the world, and to 'Father of Mercies' that they really do h our sympaties?

My heart goes out to those who have no stood by Bro. Atkinson, and supported t work. But, I believe many do not rea what a great work this is, and how nobly B Atkinson is laboring and how little real couragement he receives. Let us give o selves earnestly and prayerfully to this w just now, when it is so much needed, push it to the front. Shall we not as pas and evangelists, make this work our work, who knows just how long he may prosper just how soon he may be thankful for a from the board of Ministerial Relief? To- is the time. "Then shall the King say, Co ye blessed of my Father, inherit the king prepared for you from the foundation of world, for I was sick, and ye visited me."

his volume is along the line of the hor's previous work entitled, "With rist in the School of Prayer." It is a otional work, laying special emphasis n the necessity of prayer. As the title icates, the special kind of prayer urged his volume is intercessory prayer; that praying for others. While we would like to endorse all the writer's theo- cal views, no one, we think, can read book without being impressed with the ie of prayer in general, and especially n the importance of intercessory prayer. book consists of fifteen chapters on the ous phases of prayer, with a number of es appended. At the close of the vol- there is also a department entitled, ay Without Ceasing: Helps to Inter- ion," containing a number of sugges- s and hints, together with forms of yer for certain days; and this part of work is published separately, also, as a t. Any work that tends to raise our dard of spiritual life, and to intensify desire for holier living, is to be com- ded, for it is lamentably true that a t majority of professed Christians are ng on too low a spiritual plane, and we there is, in most cases, no discontent n that kind of life. This work of Mr. rray, we doubt not, will tend to awaken rations in the hearts of many after a ier type of Christian life than they e been living. We trust, too, that it cause many who have been neglecting ate devotions and family prayer to l themselves of the benefits to be ob- ed by these means. We therefore mend the work to our readers.

NEW WORK ON REVELATION.—I have read in type-written manuscript the ncoming book of J. S. Hughs on the elation. It is one of the most remark- books ever written on the Apocalypse. is altogether a unique volume, and is racterized by an originality and fresh- quite wonderful when the literary out- on the subject is taken into considera- .

was impressed in the first place with author's profound and comprehensive wledge of the book he discusses. His iliarity with its contents is marvelous. is perfect master of this portion of nnine literature and of the apocalyptic . His interpretation is not a borrowed He has not so much as made a pass- reference to what any one else has said he subject.

is work is purely constructive and is ved out of the book itself and its nterpart in the history of the world. re is a touch in the author of the nnine genius and it is clearly out of affinity that this great interpretation evelation has proceeded.

e has a profound, sympathetic insight John's mind and spirit and his way of ing at life and the world. When he us that John has no shadings or grada- s in his characters and principles— men and things are either black or e, bad or good, either for the devil or for God, out-and-out—he draws a good picture of John.

The cryptic theory which makes up the contents of the book on its positive and constructive side and the great travesty or pantomime theory which presents its nega- tive side maintain the unity of the Apoca- lypse and its intelligibility to a degree to more than suggest the probability that the key has at last been found to the enigma of the New Testament which, when once understood, becomes a fitting close to the revelation of God to man. His publication of this volume will quicken thought and lead to a new study of the Apocalypse and to the whole history of redemption in the light of it. J. J. HALEY.

MAGAZINES.

Self-Culture, Hebron, Ohio, comes out this month in an entirely new and very attractive dress. This magazine is now liberally illus- trated, and instead of 96 pages of text, as heretofore, will in the future contain 128 pages of good reading-matter every month. This addition of 32 pages is to make room for a somewhat higher class of articles than have thus far appeared in the magazine— articles similar to those which have given the Forum and the North American Review their high standing. All the former instructive and entertaining features which have made Self- Culture deservedly popular with intelligent people will be retained, and several new de- partments added. This large magazine can now be had for one dollar per year.

Anything that is of practical benefit to Mothers' Clubs is, in this day and age, very welcome. The course of study published in the New Crusade for March and April, 1898, was received with much enthusiasm. The Mothers' Club Helper, issued monthly by the Wood-Allen Publishing Company, Ann Arbor, Mich., will be equally well received. It con- tains a well-directed series of questions upon the topics presented by the course of study, designates home readings, and presents a complete program for each meeting. It is the only complete guide for Mothers' Clubs yet published. Price thiry-five cents per copy; two dollars for one year.

AMERICA OR ROME?
CHRIST OR THE POPE?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignor- ance and superstition that have so long prevail- ed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the popu- lation of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

In the history of the world there has never been a more opportune time for Protestantism to show the errors of Catholicism. The cur- tain has just risen revealing a long line of mis- rule and oppression by the Romish Church. It only now remains for the world to look on Rome's theater of action and decide for itself on the merits of the part she has played.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra induce- ments to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

Publishers' Notes.

Many of both young and old students of the Bible will say, "I have heard and read the story of Queen Esther all my life." It is doubtless true that you are in a measure familiar with the main facts in the history of this Bible character, but have never studied her wonderful life beyond a superficial glance. What study you have already given to this remarkable person is but of an introductory nature, and now you are prepared to follow M. M. Davis as he delineates this Old Testament character in his new book, now about ready, entitled "Queen Esther." The author being a close student of the Scriptures, an eloquent writer and having an importantBible character for a subject—all combined, can but make an intensely interesting volume. The book is bound in beautiful cloth, with numerous illustrations, and the price is 75 cents, postpaid.

TWO COMPANIONS.

Our two late publications, "In the Days of Jehu" and "King Saul" can properly be called companions. The author, J. Breckenridge Ellis, has gained a widespread reputation as a vivid and eloquent writer on Old Testament characters. The former of these books has been before the reading public but a short time and has been highly praised by competent judges. The latter is just from the press and the author seems to write with a growing interest. The world needs to learn more of the traits of prominent Bible characters.

These books are beautifully bound in latest style cloth binding. The price of "In the Days of Jehu" is 75 cents, and "King Saul" is $1.00, postpaid.

LOOK UP.

Our last publication, "Wonders of the Sky," by W. J. Russell, is an interesting little book, inviting the mind to look up and see the wondors that are shown in the heavens above us. The author shows evidence of great familiarity with astronomical literature. He has so presented the subject that its greatness can be grasped by the youthful mind, and the minds of the ordinary rearders. It is truly a great subject, presented in simple and easy manner and leading the mind to a greater reverence for the Creator of the heavens, and inviting the mind to "look up through nature to nature's God." This neat little volume is just from the press, beautifully bound, and the price is 50 cents.

MORE WANTED.

We still want more agents to sell "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." We are receiving numerous inquiries for our special terms to agents for the sale of this book, but want them in every community. Why not earn a few dollars in selling this book? It is a vigorous and reliable work on the despotism of Rome. The book contains more than five hundred pages, and is profusely illustrated. The sale of a few dozen copies in your community will aid the agent financially and will circulate a book the contents of which should be familiar to the American people. Conclude to take up the sale of this book and get the terms to agents from the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo.

The Hiram College Jubilee Endowment.

THE BURNING QUESTION.

We are strong in our convictions that the adequate endowment of our colleges is the great overshadowing question that now confronts the Disciples of Christ. Ever and anon certain great questions leap to the front and demand the attention of the people. We are firmly convinced that college endowment ought for the present to have the right of way. We believe that this question overshadows all other questions in its importance right now. The reasons are not hard to discover. The immense advance in educational standards in the last decade or two has made it more difficult from year to year for our institutions of learning to meet the demands upon them without being involved in financial ruin. We are teaching in Hiram College twice as many branches as were taught twenty years ago. Probably it is safe to say that the instruction in the colleges of the country covers twice as large a field on the average, as it did twenty years ago. That means that college faculties have had to be greatly enlarged and consequently the general expense of the college work has been greatly increased. In order to have our institutions of learning keep anywhere in sight of the advancing educational procession, they have had to enlarge their work from year to year. Our colleges with meagre endowments have been compelled to cover about the same field of work that other institutions around them with millions of endowment cover. To do this most rigid economy has been practiced; most exacting demands have been made of our teachers; in fact they have had to do double work on about half-pay, and even then most of our institutions have been compelled to incur debts that jeopardize their very existence. Nor has the end yet been reached. Many of our institutions are compelled even now to face the question of future enlargement of work in order to compete successfully with other well-endowed colleges, and all must face the question of greatly enlarged material equipment. Something must be done, and that speedily, for a larger endowment of our colleges. This question forces itself upon us at this time as never before. We must meet it now and we ought to meet it in a way that will reflect honor upon us as a people.

The trustees of Hiram College have determined to make the occasion of their Jubilee Commencement in June 1900, the time for placing this honored institutlon upon a firm financial basis, thus enabling it to enter upon a new era of greatly increased usefulness. An effort will be made to secure $250,000 of additional endowment by means of a great popular movement among the friends of the college and of Christian education in general. We will undertake to enlist an army of at least 50,000 people who will join together in one common effort to adequately endow the institution by giving it $250,000. True, there have no precedent to warrant such an undertaking. Colleges have usually been endowed by the gifts of wealthy people, but Hiram trustees are convinced that the time is ripe for a great popular movement. They believe that the masses of the people ought to have a hand in our educational work, and they furthermore feel that if the proper steps are taken such a movement can be carried to a successful issue. The watchword from this time on will be $250,000 for Hiram by June 1900, and the effort from this time forward will be to enlist an army of 50,000 persons for the accomplishment of this great object.

Perhaps many will ask the question, Is Hiram worthy of such an effort? We believe that it is, but in order that all may share our faith we will publish during the next two or three weeks, brief articles of a historic nature showing the beginning and progress of the school, its work, its financial management, its present condition and its future prospects. We will then call for the army of volunteers who will give from $1,00 to $1,000 each, or even more, if possible, for the accomplishment of this great object.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

Gospel Melodies

Revised and Enlarged

Designed for the Use of All Christians in Public and Private Devotions

In offering this, the REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION OF GOSPEL MELODIES, to the public, we confidently believe that the many excellent features of the work will recommend it to all who love good, pure words, and music adapted to their expression.

The typography is large and clear, with words printed between the music staves, so that both words and music may be seen at the same time.

An important feature of the book is the brief, practical treatise on the subject of learning to sing by note, as found in the thirteen pages of rudiments, prepared by a teacher of experience.

The "Supplement" contains a large number of the very best old standard songs, without which any book designed for use in public worship must seem incomplete.

The authors have earnestly endeavored to make this book worthy the patronage of the public.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The heroes of the hour are the returning volunteers, who are now coming back to their homes after their period of service. Some of them saw actual service on the field; others got no farther than the camp. The degree of honor to which each is entitled is in no way affected by the fact that one served in the trenches at Santiago and another occupied a less conspicuously glorious place among the reserves. There is only one class of volunteers upon whom it is not worth while to waste sympathy and admiration. The amateur soldiers who saw in the campaign an opportunity for a pleasant excursion and who are returning now with their illusions dispelled and with a keen realization of the horrors of war, even in camp, are to be pitied, perhaps, for their folly, but they are poor material out of which to make heroes. It is hard to lionize the soldier who curses the day of his enlistment and swears that he would never go again if there were a thousand wars. How many there are of this sort we do not know, nor do we care to find out. But there are some. We will still believe, however, that most of those who served their country at the front or in camp are not sorry that they have done so. They have suffered; perhaps they have suffered much more than was necessary. But the fact that through suffering they have accomplished the work for which they were sent gives them a claim upon the gratitude of the nation.

Everybody seems to be in favor of an investigation into the conduct and alleged misconduct of the commissary, quartermaster and medical bureaus in the late war—at least everybody except the individuals who have been invited by the President to occupy places on the commission for the said investigation. The following are the distinguished men who have been requested to act on the commission for sifting the charges against the bureaus mentioned: Gen. John M. Schofield, Gen. Granville M. Dodge, Gen. John B. Gordon, Gen. Charles M. Manderson, Daniel S. Lamont, Robert T. Lincoln, D. C. Gilman, Col. James A. Sexton and Dr. W. W. Keen. Of these nine, five have already begged to be excused for one reason or another and the other four are still uncertain. It remains to be seen whether the President will make another attempt to find suitable men to constitute the commission of inquiry. If this is not done probably a congressional investigation will be undertaken. In any case there ought to be a thorough investigation. The charges have been too many, too explicit and too grave to be allowed to pass without either proof or refutation. If they are true, those who know them to be true have no right to rest until the responsibility for the alleged useless suffering and loss of life has been brought home where it belongs. If they are false, the Secretary of War and the heads of bureaus under him have a right to demand such an investigation as will effectually remove the suspicion which has been cast upon them.

The American Peace Commission, which was appointed to confer with a similar Spanish commission to arrange the final terms of the peace is now on its way to Paris where the sessions are to be held. After the last conference between the Cabinet and the members of the commission previous to the departue of the latter it was officially announced from the State Department that the commission would take with it definite instructions in regard to the terms of peace upon which the administration will insist. As to what these instructions are, a formal secrecy at least must be preserved until the negotiations are complete, but there is a general understanding in regard to certain points. So far as the fate of the Philippines is concerned, three points stand out with considerable certainty: The cession of the island of Luzon, on which Manila is situated, will be demanded as being necessary for the establishment of a defensible base for commercial or naval operations in the East. The other islands of the group may be allowed to remain under Spanish sovereignty on condition of the guarantee of a just and and unoppressive form of government. In case Spain is allowed to retain possession of the other Philippines (i. e., except Luzon) special trading privileges will be demanded at least equal to those enjoyed by Spain. The policy to be pursued is one of commercial rather than colonel expansion. The fact that the Philippine insurrection has been confined chiefly to the island of Luzon and that Spanish sovereignty in the remainder of the group has not been seriously disturbed will render it an easy matter to leave those islands in the possession of Spain, unless the Spanish Peace Commission shall take such an attitude as will render it necessary for us to take all of the islands in order to get the one that we need.

New York City has lost one of its oldest and most influential preachers in the death of Rev. John Hall at Belfast, Ireland, Sept. 17th, while on his annual visit to Europe. His health had been failing for about a year. The following brief sketch of his life was published in the Post-Dispatch, of this city: "The Rev. John Hall, who died to-day in Ireland, was born in County Armagh, Ireland, on July 31, 1829. He was of Scotch descent. When thirteen years of age he entered Belfast College and was repeatedly Hebrew prize man. In 1849 he was licensed to preach and at once engaged in labor as a missionary in the west of Ireland. He was installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Armagh in 1852, and in 1858 was called to the Church of St. Mary's Abbey (now Rutland Square) in Dublin. He received from Queen Victoria the honorary appointment of Commissioner of Education for Ireland. In 1867 Dr. Hall was a delegate from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland to the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and after his return to Ireland he received a call to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. He accepted it and entered upon his labors in November, 1867. A new church edifice was erected for Dr. Hall in 1875, at a cost of about $1,000,000, on the corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street. He was elected chancellor of the University of the city of New York in 1882."

The banking, currency, coinage and production of precious metals in the United States during the past century are presented in great detail by a series of tables just issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics as a part of the July Summary of Commerce and Finance. These tables, covering more than one hundred pages of this unusually large volume, present a very complete picture of the growth of the banking system and of the currency, both metallic and paper, and to this is added for comparative purposes a brief statement of the banking and currency conditions and gold and silver production in other parts of the world. An examination of these figures covering the banking currency history of the country brings to the surface some interesting facts. The earliest figures are those of 1774 which give the specie at that date at $4,000,000. The same statement puts the specie in 1784 at $10,000,000, the number of banks three, with a capital of $2,100,000 and a circulation of $2,000,000. By 1797 the number of banks had increased to twenty-five, the capital to $19,200,000, the bank circulation to $10,000,000 and the specie to $14,000,000.

The story of the century 1797-1897 is told very fully in the elaborate series of tables both as to banks and their currency, and gold and silver production and coinage. The number of banks in 1797 was 25, in 1897, 9,457. The capital in 1797 was $19,200,000, in 1897, $1,027,493,653. The bank circulation in 1797 was $10,000,000, in 1897, $198,920,670. The deposits in the First Bank of the United States in 1809, the earliest date at which reports of bank deposits are obtainable, amouted to $8,500,000; the individual deposits reported by the 9,457 banks in 1897 amounted to $5,193,755,807, of which $1,939,376,035 were classed as savings deposits. The increase in the number of state banks prior to the war is shown to have been very rapid, the number in 1830 being 329; in 1840, 741; in 1850, 809; in 1850, 1,562. The decrease from 1860 was equally rapid, the number of state banks in 1863 being 1,023; in 1864, 349, and 1868, 247, while the number of national banks organized in 1863, 1864 and 1865 was 1,601. State banks again increased in numbers after 1868, the number in 1872 being 566; in 1885, 975; in 1888, 1,403; in 1890, 2,101; in 1894, 3,586 and in 1897, the number, including private banks, is reported at 3,873. Prior to 1860 the deposits in state banks amounted to but little more than half the capital stock, while since 1877 deposits have at all times been more than double the amount of capital stock, and in 1897 were $723,640,795, against a capital stock of $228,677,088.

The statements regarding the amount of money in circulation in the United States at various periods are equally interesting. The amount in circulation in 1800 is given at $4.99 per capita; in 1810, $7.60; in 1820, $6.96; in 1830, $6.69; in 1840, $10.91; in 1850, $12.02; in 1860, $13.85: in 1865, $20.57: in 1870, $17.50; in 1880, $19. 41; in 1890, $22.82, and in 1898, $24.73. The statement regarding gold production and coinage in the United States and in the world shows that the mines of the United States produced more gold in the year 1897 than in any preceding year except those of the great gold developments of California—1852-3-4. The gold production of the United States in 1897 is given at $57,363,000, while that of 1852 was $60,000,000, thaf of 1853, $65,000,000, and that of 1884, $60,000,000. Colorado is shown to have taken in 1897 first place in the rank of gold producing states, her production in that year being $19,104,200, against $14,618,300 by California; while prior to that time, California had constantly stood at the head ot the column of gold producing states.

The coinage of gold by the United States mints in 1897 was $64,634,865, which is nearly 50 per cent. greater than the average annual coinage since 1870. The statements covering the gold production of the world are also especially interesting. They show by stated periods the amount of gold produced in the world since the discovery of America. The total value of the gold produced from 1492 to 1898 (estimating 1897 at $240,000,000) being $9,023,320,600, of which amount $6,065,097,600 has been produced since 1850, the product of the last half century thus being double that of the preceding 350 years.

The second annual session of the Civic-Philanthropic Conference will be held at Battle Creek, Mich., Oct. 18 to 23, 1898, of which Rev. David J. Burrill, D. D., New York City, is president, and J. H. Kellogg, M. D., Battle Creek, Mich., is vice-president. Philanthropists, educators and ministers of all denominations are expected to participate in the conference to consider economic, hygienic, sanitary, philanthropic and patriotic questions with the hope of evolving some practical methods of reform.

"Jews who cherish the hope of ultimately purchasing Palestine and resettling it with the people of their own race convened last week at Basle, Switzerland. By a large majority the congress decided to open a colonial bank, having a central office in London, with a capital of $10,000,000. The movement for the recovery of Palestine, although it has been regarded as visionary by many prominent Jews, and has been the subject of much ridicule, nevertheless seems to be making headway."

EXPANSION, OF COURSE—BUT HOW?

The above pertinent comment is made by a thoughtful reader on our recent editorial, "Expansion or Contraction—Which?" The question refers particularly to expansion as applied to our own religious movement, in the editorial above mentioned. While we indicated in that article, in a general way, what is the nature of the expansion we need, it might be well to deal with the question more in detail.

We need more expansion educationally. Our colleges and other institutions of learning need more liberal endowment and better equipment to enable them to do a higher quality of work and to reach a larger number of students. This includes our Bible colleges and the biblical departments of our colleges and universities. An educated ministry is a necessity in order to any permanent or healthful expansion. Nearly every weakness or evil among us may be traced back, directly or indirectly, to the lack of a larger number of properly trained ministers to lead our churches forward in Christian growth and activity.

We need expansion among the rank and file of our membership in biblical knowledge. This want can only be supplied by the pulpits giving more attention to biblical instruction, and by raising the standard of our Bible or Sunday-schools. We are relying now very largely on these schools for imparting systematic instruction in the Bible, and yet the methods employed in these schools are very inadequate, the teachers are often incompetent and a large per cent. of our membership do not attend these schools. There needs to be an expansion of our ideas as to what the Sunday-school is and what it is designed to accomplish for the church and for the children. There needs to be an expansion of the sense of obligation on the part of church members to make better use of these schools for increasing their knowledge of the Bible.

We need expansion of ideas concerning our own religious movement—its principles and its aims. For lack of this many are sick among us and some are dead, so far as their usefulness in our special mission is concerned. The tendency is, and will be as we get older, to forget what manner of people we are, and what we are here for. If the reformation or restoration which we are pleading is a providential movement, having a mission to accomplish, nothing is dearer than that we should understand what that mission is and be loyal to it; that is, loyal to God's purpose concerning us. This work must receive special attention in our training of the young people among us. The Christian Endeavor movement among the young people affords an excellent opportunity for this training, and it is in perfect accord with the principles of Christian Endeavor that we educate our young people in a knowledge of their own principles. If it were not, then we would have no connection with it. A very wise move has been fairly inaugurated among us in the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, under the general editorship and management of J. Z. Tyler. This should be far more generally patronized than it is at present, though the number of Reading Circles is constantly increasing. It has in it the promise of great usefulness in overcoming that ignorance and indifference which are fatal to any cause. In order to the expansion of the Christian Endeavor idea among us, Bro. Tyler should be asked to devote his whole time to this work. There must needs be expansion in our Christian sympathy and fellowship. Along with a better knowledge and appreciation of our own mission there will be sure to come a growing recognition of what God is accomplishing through others, and an increasing fellowship and sympathy with all who reflect the image of Christ in their characters, and who are seeking to extend his dominion over the world. Without this, our plea for union will be as a sounding brass and a clanging cymbal. It is the narrowest sort of provincialism, or even worse, of sectarianism, for any religious people to suppose that they have a monopoly of truth, and that God can use no other agency for extending his kingdom. This feeling is today one of the most serious obstacles to the unity of Christ's followers.

We need expansion in our ideas and our practice of Christian giving. The idea of stewardship has not taken deep root yet in the minds of a large part of our membership. The proportion of money we give to religious purposes, to that given for purely selfish or worldly ends, is lamentably small. There must be expansion, or spiritual contraction and moral shipwreck are likely to result. Both the pulpit and press have a plain duty to perform in reference to this expansion. Not until our wealthy men, and others not so wealthy, come to feel the responsibility that attaches to the possession of means, can our educational and missionary interests prosper as they should.

We must expand in our missionary activities. This expansion must be twofold: A larger number of churches and individual members must be enlisted in the work of contributing missionary funds, and those who do contribute must do it with a more liberal hand. This will enable our mission boards to expand the work in new fields and give better support to missions already established. The needs of the heathen world, and of the ungospeled masses in our own land, call loudly for this expansion.

Finally, we need to expand in our faith and in our spiritual life. This expansion is sure to result from the expansions previously mentioned. By education, by a knowledge of the Bible, and of our own mission in the world, by charity towards others, by more consecration to the work God has given us to do in ministering to the manifold needs of our race, we shall surely grow in spiritual stature and realize the end of our creation and redemption.

The Salvation Army celebrated its thirty-third anniversary in London recently. General Booth reported that in the spring of the present year the organization possessed 15,019 officers attached to 6,231 corps and outposts. There were also 33,662 local officers and voluntary officials, 14,500 bandsmen and 1,647 officers engaged in social work. This social work shows 86 woman's homes with accommodation for 1,754 and 1,227 inmates; the total number admitted during the twelve months was 4,769. There are 15 prison-gate homes, 13 farms, 108 slum posts, 28 food depots, 101 night shelters with accommodation for 11,307; 38 work-shops, 14 children's homes and 24 other social institutions.—The Independent.

IS THE WORLD GROWING WORSE?

According to such books as "Caesar's Column," and a more recent, but no less pessimistic production, entitled, "Christianity and Anti-Christianity," there is a gloomy future in the immediate front of the human race. One of these authors is a materialistic pessimist and the other is a spiritual pessimist, and while they go in at different holes they come out at the same place—a disastrous future for humanity. The world religious, the world social, the world industrial, the world political, and military, and cosmic, and all other worlds, are sadly out of joint and steadily growing worse. If one takes up a premillennialist journal he will find on a conspicuous page, in clear type, a miscellaneous collection of woes, calamities, accidents, crimes, such as earthquakes, cyclones, pestilences, famines, strikes, riots, insurrections, battles, murders, suicides, embezzlements, robberies unsavory divorce suits and all other cosmic and human offenses that can be gathered from the newspapers, hashed up in approved style, with this editorial interpretation appended or implied—"Didn't I tell you so? Don't you see that the world is going to the Devil as fast as it can?" The infidel pessimist, with a materialistic and non-moral conception of the universe, having no faith in God, in immortality, in moral responsibility, in the tribunal of conscience, in the eternal order that makes for righteousness, seeing manifestations of disorder in the world, and lawlessness in society, he is sure, in the absence of a moral brake, and moral direction, that the old machine is drifting helplessly toward the rocks.

Our distinguished editor, in conveying to me the request of a subscriber to write on the question that stands at the head of this paper, said it always reminded him of the other question, "Is God dead?" If there is a living God there is a living universe, an eternal Some-One, not ourselves, that makes for righteousness, and for life everlasting. The unfailing optimism of Israel's prophets, under the gloomiest of present conditions, was based upon a conviction that nothing could shake, that a living and holy God meant the world's future for his glory. They looked with an unshaken hope to the far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves, because they so clearly perceived the moral order of the world, and the immanence of God in all his works, that were the sure guarantees of the expected consummation. If God lives he must reign, and the reign of God means the ultimate triumph of righteousness.

It is highly probable that there is more wickedness in the world than there was a hundred years ago, and just as probable that there is more righteoueness than at any previous time, but only for the reason, perhaps, that there are more people in the world than there used to be. It is true also that intensification and a bold aggression characterizes the activities of modern life, so that the wicked are more wicked and the righteous more righteous, than in our grandfathers' days. But this focalization of moral issues on burning centers, this mobilization of beast-power, and the armies of righteousness for the culminating conflict of the ages, is no proof that the world is growing worse. On the contrary it is a hopeful sign of the world's permanent betterment, unless God is weaker than the Devil, the creed of a vile pessimism that no Christian can subscribe to. Last Sunday is the best the world ever saw, and next Sunday will be an improvement on last. There are more Bibles, more Christians, more churches, more missionaries, more Christian workers, more young people doing battle for the kingdom of God, a cleaner moral sentiment pervading public opinion than ever before. There has been more progress in science, art, education, religion, statecraft and in sociological appliances for the alleviation of poverty and the betterment of the masses, in the last fifty years, than in all the preceding centuries of the Christian era put together. As we look through the gate of the twentieth century, wa can contemplate the dying century as a hundred years of amazing fruitfulness in facilities for the uplifting of mankind.

In studying the world's moral growth we must not compare to-day with yesterday, nor this week with last, nor this decade with the one that preceded it. Long periods, centuries, cycles and millenniums must enter into the comparison. The mills of God grind slowly, if they do grind exceeding fine. Compare the closing days of the nineteenth century with the days of bad eminence, when Christ was born in Bethlehem of Judea. Compare this year of grace with two hundred years ago in the most civilized country of the world. Compare the reign of Queen Victoria with the reign of Henry the Eighth, or that of Queen Bess. They tortured heretics, burned martyrs and stuck the heads of men on iron pikes in the streets of London four centuries ago. To-day a man is fined or imprisoned for beating his horse in the streets of the English metropolis. Modern liberty has completely triumphed over the brutal despotism of the past. Look at the wars of Cromwell and Napoleon in contrast to the Hispano-American war, now happily brought to a close. Cromwell took off the head of Charles the First, and when the Royalists came into power they snatched the Protector's coffin from its tomb in Westminster Abbey, hung his moldering body at Tyburn, flung it in a hole under the gallows, and stuck his head on a pole in Westminster Hall in London. Napoleon, after Waterloo, narrowly escaped death at the hands of his captors. The Duke of Wellington voted for his execution. Admiral Cervera, while a prisoner of war, was offered a mansion in the United States for his personal safety and as an inducement to become a citizen of the land of the free and the home of the brave! Two centuries ago pirates swarmed the seas to prey on the merchant marines of the nations. When belated Spain threatened to fit out vessels for privateering and the destruction of our commerce, civilization frowned it down. On our side the late war was the most humane and generous in the history of the planet. Such magnanimous treatment of a captured foe would have been impossible a hundred years ago. The next step will be disarmament and international arbitration as the method of settling disputes between civilized nations. Slavery is gone. Polygamy is going. The saloon is doomed. The agitation for the purification of politics is spreading. Temperance sentiment is growing. The kingdom of God and its righteousness is increasingly the theme of the pulpit. Applied Christianity is the goal toward which we are forging. The kingdoms of this world are destined to become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

Hour of Prayer.

OUR GREAT DELIVERER.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Sept. 28, 1898.)

He shall deliver thee in six troubles;
Yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee.
—Job 5:19.

Trouble is the common heritage of man. As is stated in the same connection from which the above is taken:

"Man is born unto trouble
As the sparks fly upward."

From the universality of trouble we are justified in inferring that it has a legitimate and necessary place in the development of character. It is certain that our troubles and afflictions accomplish more toward the uplifting of men than prosperity. It may be hard for us to understand the philosophy of this, but experience and observation confirm it.

The troubles that afflict us in this life are to be considered as a part of the divine discipline by which we are to be trained for higher living. They serve to remind us of our limitations, our weaknesses and our dependence upon God. Their tendency, too, is to keep us humble and to save us from haughtiness and pride. They serve to mellow the heart and to bring us into closer sympathy with all forms of human suffering. If, in spite of all the troubles that afflict men, many of them are still proud and self-sufficient, and forgetful of God, we can imagine what would be the condition of men if they enjoyed a continual line of prosperity.

The text we are studying declares that God is with us in these troubles and uses them for our good. It does not promise us freedom from trouble, but that God will deliver us in these troubles.

"He shall deliver thee in six troubles,
Yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee."

Seven is the perfect number, and the meaning is that God will deliver the righteous, or those who put their trust in him, in all their troubles.

There is no friend we prize so highly as the one who comes to us in our trouble and shares it with us and helps us to bear it. Many a minister has made a perpetual welcome for himself in some home which he has visited when the family was shrouded in sorrow, and into which he carried a message of sympathy and of helpfulness. We have many friends, so called, in prosperity, but the true and tried ones are those who stand by us in adversity, and help us to bear our troubles.

It will help us greatly in bearing trouble to know that God is with us and is using the trouble for our good. We need not suppose that He has sent the trouble directly upon us. We may have brought it upon ourselves by our misdoings; but He is in the trouble with us, seeking to make it the occasion of our spiritual profiting. When sorrow overtakes us and our troubles seem to be too great for us to bear, let us remember that He who was in the fiery furnace with the Hebrew children, preserving them from harm, is with us in our troubles, and He will not suffer them to crush us. He will deliver us out of all our troubles.

Our troubles, then, in this view of the case, should always draw us nearer to God instead of driving us away from Him. The man who stays away from the house of God or refrains from his religious duties because of trouble, has not yet learned the true secret of living. Their end and purpose is to bring us into closer fellowship with God, and that is the great end to be sought. Not pleasure, not freedom from trouble, anxiety and care is the end of life, but to learn to walk with God and to find our highest joy in Him. When we come to understand this we can sing understandingly—

"Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee;
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me."

PRAYER.

O, God, our Father, teach us to understand that all thy chastening is in love, and that whom Thou lovest Thou chastenest. When trouble comes upon us, and our way seems dark, help us, we beseech Thee, to trust in Thee, and to be willing to walk by faith where we cannot walk by sight. Help us to remember that Thou dealest with us as with children. And if we are called upon to "walk through the valley and shadow of death," be Thou with us, even there, and may Thy rod and Thy staff comfort us. May all the troubles and afflictions of this life serve to prepare us the better for the life beyond, which shall be undimmed by sorrow and untroubled by sin, forevermore. For Christ's sake, Amen!

OR MACATAWA MUSINGS.

Macatawa Park just now reminds one of Goldsmith's "Deserted Village," though the cause of its desertion is far different from that which drew out the lamentations of the vagrant poet. There is a stillness about its shores, its shaded dells and wooded heights, its hotel and dock, that is in strange contrast with the animation and bustle which characterized the place a few weeks ago. An occasional sail is seen on the horizon, out on Lake Michigan, and a few rowboats yet disturb the placid surface of Black Lake. Nearly all the launches have sought their winter quarters to wait the coming again of bright summer days. Only a few persons now gather nightly at the dock to see friends off on the Chicago boat, for few are left. The September wind seems to moan a sort of melancholy air to-day, as it sways the branches of the forest, which harmonizes well with the dirge of the waves that are beating on the shore. To add to the sombreness of the scene, the dark clouds have been weeping copious showers all morning, as if in sympathy with the sorrow of the beautiful Park, lamenting its departing guests. But the fire burns brightly on the hearth, and with papers, magazines and books, life is tolerable yet at Edgewood-on-the-Lake. But the end thereof, for the present season, is near.

The Missouri brotherhood of Disciples will soon be sending its representatives to Nevada in annual convention. It is important for the churches to remember that these state conventions are their conventions, made up of their delegates, to consider their work. This is the theory. Too often the churches fail to send any delegates, and quite as often they fail to feel the weight of obligation resting on them to join with their sister churches in the work of evangelizing the state and in building up all our interests. Missouri has a large membership, and it is natural that our brethren in other states should expect that the work in that state should be commensurate with our numbers. Let there be a full representation at Nevada, one of the most beautiful towns in one of the greatest states of the Union. We have read the program through carefully, and cannot well see how anybody in the state who can attend will be willing to miss the rich things which it provides. Hon. Champ Clark's address and Dean Willett's lectures would of themselves pay any one to cross the state to hear. But these are only a sample of what we are to have. Let us make it a great rally and a fit prelude to the National Convention at Chattanooga.

Speaking of the National Convention at Chattanooga, that ought to be made a notable gathering of our forces. We will meet on historic ground, and we can make it a historic convention. And yet, not we, as Paul would say, but Jesus Christ, acting in us and through us by the Holy Spirit, may make it a convention long to be remembered if we put ourselves in harmony with His purpose and seek His presence and aid. Many of the delegates who go there, perhaps all of them, will wish to visit Lookout Mountain. Why not hold a prayer-meeting up there, and in another "battle above the clouds," with the invisible forces of Satan, and under the leadership of Jesus Christ win a decisive victory over our indifference, our half-heartedness, our unbelief, and give ourselves anew and more unreservedly to the carrying out of His divine will on earth, even as it is done in heaven? This would make the convention of '98 a Lookout Convention, in which we should get a clearer vision of God, of the world's needs, and of our obligations and responsibilities as religious reformers and coworkers with all who are seeking to bring this world into subjection to Christ. If each man or woman of faith among us will pray that our convention in Chattanooga may be marked by such results as these, it will assuredly be a historic convention.

R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Ky., has favored us with some of his "Anti-Mormon tracts." We have just read No. 1, entitled, "Was Joe Smith a Prophet?" It is needless to say that Neal handles this Mormon pretender without gloves, and on the very basis on which his followers ground his claim to be a prophet of God he is shown to be a willful deceiver and falsifier. It is said that there are fifteen hundred Mormon evangelists now in the field proselyting for Mormonism and deceiving ignorant people. This makes it important that such tracts as those which Bro. Neal is supplying should be scattered broadcast in communities infected by Mormon teaching. Bro. Neal is doing a most useful work in this line, and should receive the co-operation of all who would protect the people from the monstrous deception of Mormonism.

A lady writing from Kansas City wishes us to state, in this department, what is the proper pronunciation of the name of this Park, which she says she has heard pronounced in three different ways. We have never seen the name in a pronouncing dictionary, and do not pretend to speak authoritatively, but the best usage at present places the accent on the last syllable — Mac-a-ta-wah. It is an Indian name, of course. The place is said to have been discovered by Mr. Hoyt G. Post, now of Grand Rapids, in 1848. On a September morning of that year Mr. Post made his way down from Holland over Black Lake, in a canoe, and found the place now known as Macatawa Park, inhabited by a tribe of Ottawa Indians. The noble red man gave a cordial welcome to Mr. Post, who proved to be the forerunner of an increasing number of white population that have since made this place their summer resort. The Indians have gone, but they have left the lake, the sandhills, the noble forest trees, the deep, dark canons and a number of their beautiful names. It would surprise one of these ancient survivors if he should revisit Macatawa after fifty years and see the changes which the white man has made in this beautiful peninsula, nestling here between the two lakes. No doubt another fifty years will witness changes equally as great, transforming into a great and popular religious resort a place that was once the home and hunting grounds of the red men of the forest.

This will be our last Musing at Macatawa for the present year. By the time this reaches our readers Edgewood-on-the-Lake will have put on its winter blinds, and will be as quiet and lonely as the other cottages that now surround it, whose inmates have gone. It has been a pleasant, busy and fleeting summer, whose shining days have sped by all too swiftly. We have not accomplished all we had hoped, in the way of reading and meditation, but who ever does? It is the ideal that we aim at, and the ideal is never realized. But the summer has not passed with us in vain. Its opportunities have not been entirely neglected, and its lessons, we trust, will never be wholly forgotten. We have tried to share whatever enjoyment we could get out of the busy days, with our readers, and it is no small gratification to be assured by many that these Musings have helped to lighten the labor, relieve the monotony and scatter some sunshine in the lives of those who have not been permitted to enjoy a summer outing. This has been our aim, and if it has been accomplished we are satisfied. For the present, fair Macatawa, good-bye!

A day's bass fishing in a clear, rollicking stream, flowing through romantic scenery, in company with Z. T. Sweeney, is a thing to be remembered. Such a pleasure was ours recently. The ex-consul general wrote us to meet him at Grand Rapids on a certain day for a little fishing expedition. Although we have good fishing at Macatawa, his letter promised something different, and we went, accompanied by a junior member of the Edgewood household who is as fond of fishing as his sire. We went to Alaska, not our extreme Northwestern possession, but a small place on Thorn Apple Creek, about ten miles by water above the village of Cascade, on the same stream. Mr. Johnston, proprietor of the Eagle Hotel, Grand Rapids, kindly drove us to Cascade in his carriage, leaving at 5 A. M. after a good breakfast. If he had not been a staunch prohibitionist, running a first-class, strictly temperate hotel, he would not have inconvenienced himself so much to accommodate us. The two boats which were to be used by ourselves and our guide, C. F. Hall, the fish-raiser, were hauled to Alaska, and there we embarked and fished downstream as the boats floated along, and when we reached a favorite bass resort we anchored, and did business as long as it seemed profitable, and then moved on. Our guide knew every rock and log and deep hole where bass are accustomed to hide, and as Bro. Sweeney had been down the same stream a few times before, he had caught on to this valuable information. So we put him in a boat to himself to pole his own canoe, for paddles are not used on Thorn Apple. We reached the hotel at Cascade Springs about 7 P. M., with thirty small-mouthed or tiger bass. This was a capital day's sport, and after a good night's rest at the hotel it was resumed in the morning, and closed at noon in order to make the afternoon train at Grand Rapids, ten miles away. Sweeney easily had the honors of the day, but then he is a fish commisioner and is expected to excel in such sport. We were delighted with the romantic location of Cascade Springs on the bank of Thorn Apple Creek, with its elegant hotel and handsome cottages on the grassy slope, amid magnificent forest trees. It is no wonder that Bro. S. is bartering for the rent of a cottage there for next summer. Mr. Holt's trout ponds, with the speckled beauties darting hither and thither, is an interesting feature of the place. It was a most delightful little excursion, and for it we are indebted to Bro. Sweeney, whose guests we were on the trip, and a more agreeable companion it would be difficult to find.

Questions and Answers.

1. Why was Mary forbidden to touch Jesus, he having not yet ascended, while Thomas was commanded to touch him?

2. We are all God's children by creation. Yet to enjoy his salvation we must become his by adoption. Question: Is adoption to be considered a stronger relation between a parent and child than the relation of creation?

3. Is the term "adoption," as used by the apostle, the same as is used by us to-day in the legal transaction of taking a child into our family? M. W. Yocom.

1. We do not know. We can only conjecture. The motive for asking Thomas to handle him is clear enough. Thomas was skeptical about the reality of the resurrection and had declared he would not believe it without this tangible proof. Jesus met him on this ground and asked him to make the examination. Mary needed no such proof. She was in the act, not of testing the reality of Jesus' resurrection, but of worshiping him, and perhaps lingering in his presence, when there was urgent need of swift feet to carry the glad news to those who had not heard it. So intent was he on making known his resurrection, that he had not yet ascended to his Father, but was still tarrying on earth in such form as would satisfy his disciples that he had risen from the dead; and Mary must forego clinging to him, as he was foregoing ascending at once to his Father, until it was known to all his friends that he had indeed risen. This seems to be the meaning of the passage referred to in John 20:17.

2. The term "creation" does not express all of God's relation to men. He created the sea and the dry land, but they are not His children. He endowed man with His own nature, making him in His own spiritual likeness. This is the ground of the universal Fatherhood of God. "Adoption" is a legal term used by Paul to express the sinner's change in relationship to God in conversion. In its use by him it stands for the recovery of man from the power of sin and his restoration to God, in an ethical sense, by which God owns him and gives him the Spirit of adoption. The term "adoption," therefore, in this sense, stands for more, religiously, than creation and endowment, but it is based on the fact of man's creation in God's image. One is capacity for fellowship with God, the other is the actual entrance into such fellowship.

3. The Roman law of adoption, on which Paul no doubt based his use of the term, was probably different in some of its features from the law of our time, but the essential fact covered by the term must be the same—a change of relationship in which some one accepts a child—not his own—as his child, to be treated as such, and the child is held to obedience to him by virtue of this relationship. There are legal aspects, of course, which do not apply to the moral and spiritual change in man, and the likeness should not be pressed too far.

What, then, is the difference between the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and other leading brethren touchiny the method of observing the Lord's supper? H.

None that we know of. Our position is that concerning details, such as whether thanks may be offered for the bread and wine both, before the congregation is served with either, or whether the distribution of the loaf should precede thanks for the cup, there is no law binding us to uniformity, and that the ordinance is rightly observed either way if the right spirit be present. No man entitled to be known as a leader among us would call in question this statement, we think, though many may feel, as we do, a preference for the customary method. We have never seen any gain in the other method, unless it be a few minutes of time, and this might be better gained, as a rule, by curtailing the sermon. But let us never transfer the emphasis from the spirit in which we commemorate the death of Jesus to the matter of method or of detail.

To decide a dispute would the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST please give its opinion on this question: Are the Disciples of Christ a denomination? W. D. Trumbull.
Hartford, O.

That depends on how much we put into the word "denomination." Circumstances have compelled us to assume a separate and distinct organization and place among the religious forces of Christendom, and this is all that the average man means by denomination. But as our religious movement was conceived in the conviction that the division of Christendom into sects or denominations is contrary to the genius of Christianity and to the express teaching of Christ and his apostles, and as its formative or creative principle is the rejection of what is purely denominational in its character, and the acceptance of what is universally received among Christians, as constituting the common basis of fellowship, it would seem that our position among religious bodies is a unique one. To the extent that we have succeeded in finding a basis of fellowship on which all who accept Christ may be one, without sacrifice of truth or conscience, our movement is undenominational. We believe our position as understood and advocated by our representative men is catholic and undenominational; though it must be confessed that we have not all been true, at all times, to our broad, undenominational position.

PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY.

H. W. B. MYRICK.

Sometime ago I heard the president of one of our colleges use the above expression. I began to reflect somewhat. Why should we say "primitive Christianity?" Are there different kinds of Christianity? What is primitive Christianity?

If we consider the phrase etymologically we discover that it simply means Christianity as at first, as at the beginning. We get back to the original. As a religious people we have been pleading for a return to primative Christianity. And now, after three-fourths of a century, and after our movement in this direction is becoming popular, others are embracing the idea and voicing the same demand. A new watchword has been coined and we now hear leaders crying, "Back to Christ!" But no matter; back to Christ or primitive Christianity, the thought and the the purpose are the same. It is a clarion call to the scattered and divided hosts of God to return to their "first love," to rally around one common standard, to sink petty differences and bury unfounded animosities. It is the mighty, thrilling call to Christian union born of the needs and apprehensions of the closing years of the nineteenth century, the problems of sin, the peril of avarice, the appalling menace of the liquor traffic, the arrogance of infidelity, the cool indifference of multitudes of well-to-do people—all of these causes of defeat and humiliation confront a divided church. While we repair our sectarian fences, the devil sows tares in our most fertile fields. While we extend our denominational borders deyond some little enclosure, Satan pre-empts a whole territory. God's people are conducting a guerrilla warfare instead of a compact, well-drilled army of regulars, who ought to be defeating sin on a thousand battlefields.

The remedy for this evil condition is to go back indeed to Christ, to repossess primitive Christianity. Union upon any other hypothesis is impossible. No modern "basis," however earnest men may be in urging it, can be accepted by all parties. We must be primitive. And therein lies a great big, tremendous truth. I actually gasped with delight when I saw that truth in its relation to some fundamental problems.

Observe, we never talk of going back to primitive agriculture, to the wooden plow and the reaphook. We never insist upon returning to primitive methods of locomotion, to exchanging locomotive engines for oxen, and palace cars for rude and creaking coaches. We are not asking for primitive methods anywhere save in New Testament Christianity.

And herein we exalt the Word. All other affairs are the inventions of men, the product of human wisdom, but Christianity is a revelation from God. Peter said, "We have preached the gospel to you with the the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven." Paul said, "I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Christianity, therefore, is a revelation from heaven, perfect in all of its appointments, and final as to both its form and substance. It needs no elimination, addition or adaptation. It came forth from God, perfect in every quality which the instrument of man's salvation needed. Teaching, warning, comfort, promise—every element of spiritual culture and right-living—are therein contained, "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work" (2 Tim. 3:16).

Dr. Lyman Abbott, and other good men as well, enamored of a "philosophy falsely so called," tells us that Christianity is an evolution. It is a mistake. Evolution is the very farthest removed from that which is primitive. Evolution goes forward, not "back to Christ" any more than back to the monad or to primitive star-dust. Our latest rallying-cry, "Back to Christ," is a contradiction of the assumption of modern critics, that Christianity is a development, and we say to the critic, who seeks to enlarge upon the work of Paul or Jusus, "Out of thine own mouth will I condemn thee."

No: agriculture, transportation and other temporal and material affairs are the product of human wisdom, and here we seek the latest invention as most likely the best. But Christianity is of God, a revelation, not of human devising, and here we seek not the latest speculation of man, but the earliest, even primitive things of Christ and his apostles.

Brethren, our plea for a return to primitive Christianity is the grandest imaginable. Let us be true to the primitive ideal, both in theory and practice.

CAN I LOVE MY ENEMIES?

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

I.

The most serious of all forms of scepticism is that which relates to character. To disbelieve in high ideals, or to believe them impossible of attainment, is a grave unbelief. The one is moral blindness; the other is moral despair.

There is nothing in Christianity more vitally central than Christ's doctrine of love. Obscure this, and you blot out the sun. And yet it is precisely at this point that there is no small degree of scepticism, even among Christians. This scepticism takes the form, not of the denial of the excellency of this high attribute of character, but of the possibility of its attainment. There are few, even of the world, who would deny that Christ's teachings regarding love, faithfully carried into effect, would completely solve the most pressing problems of our national life; yet any effort seriously to apply them to this object would be regarded as chimerical, and the advocate of any such attempt would be considered a dreamer who had lost his hold on the practical. Some excuse for this may be found in the fact that so large a part of the body politic owns no allegiance to Christianity. But it is quite otherwise with Christians themselves. No such obstacle prevents the full realization of Christ's design with them. Yet we find the scepticism here also. "Can I love my enemies?" The answer is usually "no." Such is the reply the human heart is now making to Christ's demand. Resentment may be stifled; the fiery word may be restrained; the hand that would strike may be stayed; and, even from a sense of duty, or through love to another, deeds of love may be bestowed on the offender—but we cannot love him. Grass may be made to grow over the crater, but the volcano still burns beneath. The most we can hope to attain in this matter is a holy hypocrisy—the wearing of the guise of love, while the heart is ashes.

Is this the answer of the church to Christ's highest lesson, after nineteen centuries of schooling under his teaching? Some very thoughtful matter in our religious journals in the last five years has set forth this view.

Is this what Christ means when he bids us love our enemies? Would he have us assume the ways of love without loving them? When he instructs us to pray for them, does he mean a perfunctory prayer?

The answer is not far to seek. We are to love our enemies that we may "be the children" of our Father who is in heaven; that is, that we may be like him. Is God's love towards the evil but a chained animosity, held in check from a sense of right? We learn that he not only sends his rain and sunshine on the evil and the good alike, but that he "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son" that he might save it and bestow upon it the blessings of eternal life. This is not the semblance of love, but love itself; not love's deed, but love's holy passion. We have here love and love's deed standing in the contrast of cause and effect. There are in this passage two distinct statements: (1) that God loved, and (2) that he did love's work. We cannot make them mean the same thing. Take love out of this passage, and you evacuate its meaning. God's love-like deeds to a wicked world sprang from a father's heart, from a holy yearning to save and bless. Take the tender father-love out of Christianity, and it lies a corpse and powerless evermore to move the human heart. The world has been taking the love-talk of the gospel these nineteen hundred years in earnest. Has it been mistaken? If so, blessed mistake! If God's love to the wicked be a tender father-love, ours to our enemies must be a yearning brother-love, or we cannot be like him.

Christ was a revelation of God's character. Did he love his enemies? or simply perform some love-like deeds in their behalf? Listen: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto thee! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" How like David's cry over Absalom is this! It is love's bitter agony. There is nothing hollow here. The chalice is full and flows over with the waters of the heart. David's wail was over a wicked and murderous enemy; Christ's over a perverse and persecuting people. This Jerusalem had murder in its heart. This piteous cry was wrung from love's bleeding heart.

"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." What mean these words? Is the sufferer instructing God? Cannot God be trusted to do right? They have no meaning but of the heart. It is a love-cry, a heavenward yearning for the bloody throng about him. Jesus loved his enemies.

"And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Was Stephen acting? or was he in earnest? Was not this last loud cry upon earth from the heart? He has caught the holy passion from the Master, which has lit the cross through all ages.

"I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience bearing witness with me in the Holy Spirit, that I have great sorrow and unceasing pain in my heart. For I could wish that I myself were anathema from Christ for my brethren's sake, my kinsmen according to the flesh" (Rom. 9:1-3). Who can doubt that this was real? These are solemn, awful words. Paul has looked within, and this is what he has found in his heart—a brooding sorrow, a painful yearning of love for his deadly enemies, who plotted for his life and at last compassed his martyrdom. Few of even the sublimest human characters have ever been able to utter such words as these—to make a sacrifice so appalling. Paul loved these bitter enemies with an overmastering, yearning sorrow.

The primitive church took these teachings of Christ without discount, and they did not find them untrue to the possibilities of human experience.

But there is one thing which we have yet to notice regarding them: this love of enemies is a distinctive mark of the Christian character, and is the only one to which Christ here attaches any reward. "If ye love them that love you, what reward have ye?" (Matt. 5:46.) The responsive love to those who love us and treat us well, lies at the level of the worldly character ("do not even the Gentiles so?") and of even the most rapacious of mankind. Even the publican loved in this way (v. 46). We may go further, and say that this species of love belongs also to the brute creation, and that the capacity for it is possessed by even the most ferocious animals. You can win the affection of a tiger. This love belongs to the furniture of the animal nature, and is not even distinctively human, much less Christian. There is much in it that is beautiful, and its charms may easily lead us to give to it a higher rank in the estimate of character than it deserves. It is not that distinctively human love of which Christ speaks—the missing virtue for the lack of which the world still lies bleeding.

This question of the love of enemies is a very serious matter. It is a plummet dropped into character to determine whether it be Christian. If modern unbelief can show that such a love is impossible, it will drive its dagger through the heart of Christianity, and there will be little else left worth contending for.

If Christ was mistaken here, where else can we trust him? If we can love our enemies it is time we knew it, and were fulfilling this important part of the Sermon on the Mount. To vindicate Christ's law of love in its practicability, as well as in its excellency, is a task second in importance to no other. On this subject we shall endeavor to present a few thoughts in succeeding articles.

CIVILIZATION AND RELIGION.

SHERMAN HILL.

Civilization represents, primarily, man's conception of and relation to man, religion his conception of and relation to God.

Religion is the higher attribute, civilization the lower. They are to each other as governor and governed, as tree and fruit, as cause and effect.

They are always in an exact ratio to each other.

A perfect religion would be a perfect conception of and relation to God. A perfect civilization would be a perfect conception of and relation to man.

A perfect conception of and relation to God would result in the perfect development of the individual and the thorough organization of individuals religiously.

A perfect conception of and relation to man would result in the perfect development of the individual and the thorough organization of individuals socially for man, religiously or socially, is as individualistic as socialistic.

The most prominent ancient representatives of the foregoing were Greece and China. No nations have ever attained to such distinctively individualistic and socialistic eminence as those, and all history presents no sadder pictures of the failures of human efforts.

In brilliant individual development the ancient Greeks are the rivals of all time. There was at one time in Athens not less than twenty men contemporaneous with Socrates and Pericles who have come down to us as masters in almost as many departments of thought.

Greece's individual brilliancy dazzles us still, but her society was chaotic; she had no social organization. Her civilization as seen from her partial development was marvelous, but from a point of real and entire civilization it was no civilization; it was but partial, hence meteoric. Greece's religion was in exact keeping with her civilization. Morality was astonishingly low. When her individual development was most marked there were but thirty thousand people in Athens, and there were as many gods in Greece.

Before Greece was, China was a powerful nation. She has for centuries been the same impregnable, lethargic monster. In Greece the individual counted for all, and society for nothing. Men were as individualistic as Ibsen would have them be. In China society counts for all and the individual far nothing. Men were as socialistic as Tolstoi would have them be. But in all her history China has not produced a great man. Individual development is as wholly lacking in China as social organization was in Greece. China's stupified solidity is to be attributed to her social organization.

A comparison of China's civilization and religion reveals a striking harmony; both are old, non-progressive, hopeless and socialistic. The more modern nations bear unmistakable testimony to the same truth. Mexico, Central America and South America have a civilization and religion that are in exact accord. A study of European nations exhibits the same truth. The backward social conditions of Spain, Italy, Austria and Russia are in exact keeping with their crude religion. The more advanced social positions of France, Germany and Scandinavia are accompanied by a correspondingly higher type of religion. But the highest type of civilization of our time is Anglo-Saxon, as exhibited in Great Britain and America. In these nations the development of the individual and the organization of society are in the most harmonious accord, thus far exemplified by the race, and are far in advance of any contemporaneous nation. Their religion is likewise the highest type yet exhibited. Under no system of religious faith has the individual been so perfectly developed and individuals so thoroughly organized as in the Christianity of the Anglo-Saxons. Catholicism exhibits a strong organization of individuals, but a shameful lack of individual development. Protestantism represents a marked individual development and a strong and growing organization of individuals. Men are first of all to be Christianized. As they are Christianized they will be civilized. This is abundantly demonstrated from the indisputably universal facts that no people's civilization has ever been in advance of its religion, but always the reverse, from the innumerable examples of individuals and peoples who have been Christianized and always accordingly civilized, and that the spiritual or religious nature is the antecedent and not the consequent, the cause and not the effect, the higher and governing and producing nature.

Shall we heed the language of God thus definitely woven into the warp and woof of the entire existence of the race, and so indelibly graven in the nature of every individual?

> Let us Christianize the nations,
> Change the hearts of erring men,
> Purify the source of human actions
> That the waiting hearts of men
> May see the glad fruitions
> For which the Father fashioned them.

The Outline Bible Club Course, of the American Institute of Sacred Literature, enters upon its sixth year with the first of October. The subject for the year is one of peculiar interest, namely, the Foreshadowings of the Christ.

The topic will at once suggest to the average mind a few isolated passages from the Old Testament prophets, such as Genesis 3:14, 15, the child-prophecies of Isaiah, and the 53rd chapter of Isaiah. The course as it is prepared by the American Institute, however, is a very different thing from the study of such individual sections, though including them also. Beginning with Genesis the whole field of Old Testament history and prophecy from Genesis to Malachi is covered in outline. At the same time all the material is selected and arranged so as to bring out the first beginnings and the continual growth of the whole Messianic idea as revealed step by step in the history of Israel. Every prophecy appears in its own peculiar historical environment. Such an addition of life and color gives new and fresh conceptions to the minds of those long familiar with the Scripture passages, and bring to the new student a real gratification of the historical as well as the religious sense.

The Institute has thousands of students from the Young People's Societies of every denomination, from churches, schools and isolated homes. The plan adapts itself to either club or individual study. It requires so little time (fifteen minutes a day) that no one who is interested need hesitate to enter upon the work. All Christians read some portion of the Bible every day. (This should be true if not.) Why not make this reading systematic by adopting some well-constructed plan? We would advise all who wish such help to address the American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill.

Current Religious Thought

An apologetic article on "Spain and the Catholic Church," by Henry A. Stinson, D. D., in a recent number of the Independent, concludes with the following exceedingly liberal statements:

I hold no brief for the Catholic Church, and I am sufficiently heavy-hearted over the burden which religious work in the city lays upon us all; but we must all bear witness to the success with which these, our Catholic neighbors, retain a hold upon their own people, to the immense audiences they secure, to the extent to which they exert oversight and care of their children, to their attitude towards divorce and the maintenance of the family, and to the revival now among them of the pulpit and the purely spiritual function of the church.

Whatever its errors in the past, and whatever its limitations to-day, both from its traditions and what we must regard as its erroneous doctrines, it is, nevertheless, a great Christian church, almost, indeed, the greatest. We cannot, as Christians, but believe that God is in his own time and way to revive it and purify it and set its candlestick in the place which will reveal his own long-suffering, love and power. But whatever may be its ultimate destiny, it certainly is to-day one of the very greatest forces on the earth available for the Christianizing and civilizing of the world and for hastening the day we all are laboring and praying for, the day of the emancipation of all men and the bringing in of the triumphant kingdom of Jesus Christ. We Protestant Christians may be perfectly true to our convictions and true to our history, and at the same time reach out our hand to these our Christian fellow-citizens with an unreserved and grateful confidence that God is doing his work through them; and they are true to their trust no less than we, with all humility, are ourselves. If the exigencies of the war with Spain shall have this as their result to help us to show charity in our judgments, and to unite us all as Christians in hastening to do our best for the long-deferred redemption of Cuba, they will not be endured in vain.

In an article in the Minnesota Issue, on "The Duty of the Pulpit Against the Liquor Traffic," by C. H. Payne, LL. D., the following stupendous facts and weighty suggestions appear:

1. The first link in the chain is the incontrovertible fact that the liquor traffic is the greatest curse of Christendom and a stupendous obstacle in the way of the Christian Church.

2. Link second: This greatest enemy of man and deadly foe of Christ's kingdom will only be conquered by the agency of the Christian church. It is vain to expect the devil to strike down his strongest ally. It is useless to hope that the world will undertake the overthrow of a moral evil that the church and the pulpit hesitate to attack. It reflects honor on the church to say that the world expects and awaits its leadership in this as in all other moral reforms, and therefore this foe will go down only before the assault of the church. There is no flaw in this link.

3. A third link in the chain invites our scrutiny. The church can cope successfully with such a foe as the liquor traffic only when its forces are thoroughly massed. A united foe, a divided church. This one sad but truthful sentence tells the story of our long defeat, tells the story of the heartsickness of our ranks and the hopelessness of our cause, if we will not learn a higher wisdom and unite for victory. And now let us test the fourth link:

4. The pulpit is the legitimate and divinely ordained agency to mass the forces of the Christian church and to lead them on to victory in this holy crusade against the liquor traffic. It would be stultifying to affirm that the church could and should undertake any work in which the pulpit might not properly act its part of helper and leader. Its voice must ring out clear and strong and unequivocal, the rallying cry calling the forces of Christ to battle. To deny this function and this duty to the pulpit is to affirm that the pulpit must be dumb in presence of society's greatest curse; must be helpless in presence of man's greatest need; must be the slave of custom rather than its liberator. If it be said that the pulpit should preach temperance to the individual, but leave unrebuked the traffic; reform the drunkard, but spare the drunkard-maker, then you ask the pulpit to belittle its own work in the eyes of all manly men by openly confessing its puerility and pusillanimity. You ask the pulpit to rescue the sufferers from incendiary fires, but be careful to speak no word against the incendiaries themselves; to bury the slaughtered victims of drink, but be silent concerning the murderous traffic and the respectable power that fosters and legalizes it. If the pulpit were to listen to this counsel it would invite the wrath of God and the contempt of all true men. It would be shorn of its strength and robbed of its respect. No, it is the plain and palpable duty of the pulpit to discuss and to conserve every interest of society, to antagonize every wrong, to encourage whatever is right. * * * * * * * * *

5. A united pulpit will soon bring a united church; the Christian forces will be massed, and the legalized traffic in intoxicating drink will be overthrown. Scarcely a moment remains to let in the light upon this glowing hope. But light there is, and hope lures us on, and courage summons us to manly endeavor.

A hundred thousand Christian pulpits united in this holy cause will bring in this millennial morn. Defections in the pew and dismissals from the pulpit may here and there occur; but when the new incumbent of the pulpit gives the same "certain sound" to the trumpet as did his dismissed predecessor the contest will quickly cease, the forces will be united, and the long-looked-for victory will have been won.

Our chain is complete. Its five links binding the hundred thousand pulpits and the many-millioned membership of Christ's church in this goodly land into a blessed unity of purpose and endeavor to destroy this ravager of human hearts and happy homes will also bind the gloomy present to a golden future, throwing a bridge of hope across the dark chasm and bidding the emancipated millions of a land redeemed from the curse of strong drink pass over to a "Paradise regained."

Prof. J. T. Bergen, in an article in the Christian Intelligencer, Aug. 31st, probably rightly holds that the naval battles of Manila and Santiago should not be classed with the miracles of the Bible. He says:

God has been our leader, our inspiration in this war; but its battles cannot be called miracles. Compare the destruction of Cervera's squadron with the destruction of the walls of Jericho. What efficient human or natural cause was there to destroy those walls? There was none. By what law did they come down? Only by the immediate hand of God. And Joshua was writing Scripture.

Our second inquiry is to the safety of holding such views as Dr. Abbott seems to maintain when he says: "If such victories had been recorded in the history of the Jews, they would have been regarded as miracles, as interpositions of God to defend his people, and they would have been rejected to-day by those who do not believe in miracles as improbable and impossible, and as pure inventions."

We have reason to believe that Dr. Abbott, with many others of his way of thinking about the Bible, accepts its historical statements as fairly accurate. But they class these events with all the wonderful occurrences of history which have been for good. Now, what is the result of this? It expands and generalizes the miraculous until its miraculousness disappears. So that they who regard these recent events as miracles and class them with the wonderful events of biblical history, need not regard those ancient events as attesting the infallibility of the records accompanying them, nor the miracles of Jesus as proving that he was the Son of God. This is dangerous to the extreme. It lowers the miraculous. It deadens the nerve of the great historical argument for Christianity, for it destroys the uniqueness of the biblical miracles.

In a paper on "The Moral Life a Work of Art," by Associate Prof. W. D. MacClintock, appearing by installments in the University Record, of Chicago, is this very beautiful statement of the value of the equipoise of self-knowledge and self-control. Prof. MacClintock says:

The world presents no more beautiful object than a ready, experienced, refined moral nature. The man who has assisted many other men to rise; he who has forgiven much; she who has won a thousand patiences; the courtesy that is never off guard; the gentleness that desires no vacation; the truth-telling that has become entirely instinctive—with what security, swiftness, beauty, such a nature comes among us! But we all know that it is virtue in season and out of season—always abounding in the work of the Lord.

The problem of the relation of spontaneity and self-consciousness seems much the same for both artists and lovers of virtue. They must know themselves, their tools, environment; they must definitely plan to create the perfect thing; yet they must be free, happy, creative, without conceit or self-seeking. Both pass through a stage of development when their self-consciousness, their analysis, their purposing alienate or destroy their spontaneity. It would be disastrous if men were always aware of their feelings, and did their good deeds in order to increase their virtues. If choice must be made one should by all means choose to be instinctive and follow his good impulses without knowing why or how. But our generation of mental analysis has taught us that self-consciousness and spontaneity are not finally antagonistic, that the notion of mere spontaneous greatness or unconscious genius is a myth. We need to know the relations, the time and place, the merit and limitations of each. In moments of activity we must act, and with all the joy and spontaneity possible. If the emotions and purposes are wholesome they will carry us over all criticism, self-knowledge and extrinsic ends. After this we pause and contemplate and learn. In the perfected soul one can be good and know it, self-controlled and understand the elements and laws of that experience. If it were not so we should always be children in virtue, with the child's uncertainty, changeableness and want of discrimination.

Perhaps at no point has the artist more to teach us than in his love of beauty for itself. He, like other men, must earn a living, must do good in the world, must win his fame. But at the moment of creation he loses sight of all these ends, and he loves his work for its own sake and loves the thing he makes. The philosophers tell us that the values of art are intrinsic and immediate.

The proposition to introduce the public school system of the United States into Cuba seriously disturbs the intellectual equilibrium of the Church Progress, this city, and in all probability that also of all other good Roman Catholic journals. Concerning this suggestion, among other things equally noisy, the Church Progress says:

The impudent preachers who gabble about the separation of church and state are always the worst meddlers in political affairs. They have always manipulated the whole machinery of government, both general and local, in the interests of heresy and separatism, so far as they have been able, by any hook or crook, to get possession of it. They have always made it a special point to control the Indian Office, for the purpose of depriving the Indians of their religious liberty. This man Morgan was one of the most notorious of the officials who have prostituted the governmental authority to sectarian ends. When he talks about "education for the common people" of Cuba he refers to the stupid, Godless, impractical public school education which teaches everything that is useless and false, and neglects almost everything that is calculated to train up efficient, teachable, intelligent, virtuous and well-bred members of the civil and religious commonwealths. When he says that without it "there is little hope for Cuba," he means little hope for the perversion of the Cuban people to the ridiculous and degrading superstitions of miserable little sects of the Baptist stripe.

We know that the introduction of religious liberty and our public school system into Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines hurts, but it can't be helped.

Ministerial Association of the Disciples of Christ in Eastern Ohio.

The thirty-fifth annual meeting of the "Ministerial Association of the Disciples of Christ in Eastern Ohio" was held September 6-8, 1898, with the church at Painesville, Ohio. The meetings were presided over by Prof. H. McDiarmid, of Hiram, and the details of business were carefully considered by S. H. Bartlett, the secretary.

A good program was prepared, of which the essential features were the address of the president on "The Resurrection;" an address by Pres. E. V. Zollars on "The Status of Education among the Disciples of Christ;" three addresses by Burris A. Jenkins, of Indianapolis, on "Paul and the Thirteen," "Paul's Literary Style" and "Paul's First Epistle — Thessalonians;" a symposium on "The Pastor and His Work," conducted by M. J. Grable, of Cleveland, in which the following persons took part: 1. "The Apportionment of Time," W. J. Cadman, Cleveland, O.; 2. "Duties Outside of the Parish," A. M. Chamberlain, Alliance, O.; 3. "The Pastor and the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Society," J. H. Mohorter, Cleveland, O.; 4. "Pastoral Visiting," H. N. Allen, Geneva, O.; two addresses by W. J. Lhamon, of Allegheny City, Pa., on "The Mystery, the History and the Pauline Character of the Hebrew Letter, and "The Christology of the Hebrew Letter;" an address by Errett Gates, of Chicago, on "Some Neglected Elements in the Restoration of Primitive Christianity;" "Social Settlements in Cities," by George Bellamy, of the "Hiram House," Cleveland, O.; "The Best Length for a Pastorate," by R. W. Sellers, of Ashtabula, O.; "The Responsibility of the Church for Business Men," and the temperance question was presented by Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, of Cleveland, O., "The Temperance Situation for '98 and '99."

Besides these addresses and papers F. M. Green read a historical paper in which the history of the Association was presented as far as possible from its organization in 1863 to the present time. Only four of the original members of the Association are now living, so far as known—H. W. Everest, Robert Moffet, J. H. Jones and F. M. Green.

From the beginning there have been enrolled in its membership 363 persons. Nearly all of these were preachers. Nearly 100 have died, and a large number of their names have been recorded with appropriate and appreciative words in the annual records. Less than five have proved themselves, on account of immoral and unchristian conduct, absolutely unworthy of membership. A very few have become dissatisfied with their church relationship, and have joined other religious bodies.

The most of the lectures and addresses or papers were passed as unexceptionable in matter. Some of the positions taken by the speakers on the larger topics were keenly criticised, but all in all not much was said that was worthy of martyrdom.

Orrin Gates and Lathrop Cowley represented the older generation of Western Reserve preachers; Robert Moffet and W. L. Hayden a generation which succeeded them; J. L. Darsie, J. Z. Tyler and H. N. Allen a still later generation; S. H. Bartlett, A. M. Chamberlain and R. W. Sellers a generation still younger.

The church in Painesville took good care of the visitors from first to last.

The first meeting of the Association was held in Alliance, Ohio, and the next meeting will be held there. The sentiment seemed to prevail that it would not only be pleasant, but in every way fitting to begin the second period of 35 years where the first meeting was held.

The Association elected officers as follows: President, F. M. Green, Kent, O.; vice-president, E. B. Wakefield, Hiram, O.; corresponding secretary, S. H. Bartlett, Painesville, O.

It is not the purpose of this notice of the meeting to put any comparative estimate on the various parts of the program. Each in his place did well, and the Association was greatly pleased with their presence and their work.

We hope to make next year a great year in the history of the Association. We would be glad if every living member of the Association could be present. [F. M. GREEN.

—Church Extension, State Convention, Forefathers' Day, college openings and the Bethany C. E. Reading Course are some of the present urgent interests of the churches of Christ treated in this paper.

—Our readers will discover that quite a number of pulpits are to be vacated in the near future.

—The cool weather brings a marked increase of reports from the evangelistic field. The indications are that the churches generally are planning for a protracted meeting. Let them also plan for a protracted spiritual growth.

—At the preachers' meeting in this office on Monday, Sept. 12th, a number of preachers reported excellent prayer-meetings and two or three reported what was said to be the best prayer-meeting in the history of their respective churches. A good prayer-meeting is a good sign of spiritual life in the church.

—The views of Lookout Mountain, appearing on our first page from week to week, afford the reader some idea of the magnificent scenery surrounding the historic city in which our General Convention will assemble next month. Lookout Mountain, with all of its sacred spots, lofty suggestions and holy inspirations will certainly lend more than a charm to the convention delegates. Such a convention in the vicinity of such surroundings ought to touch the loftiest peaks of communion with God, and the broadest conceptions of his will on earth. Surely, October 13-21 will mark an epoch in our onward movement toward the redemption of the world from sin.

—The Church Extension reports on another page will bear close reading. There are many encouraging things in it. The churches are doing well in their aim to reach their proportion of the $20,000 sought from collections this year for Church Extension. Take the collection for Church Extension next Sunday and take it thoroughly, and on Monday remit to G. W. Muckley Cor. Sec., 600 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo., so that it will reach the board before the books close. They close at noon on the 30th.

—The Observer, a weekly religious journal of this city, devoted to the interests of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, has just entered upon the seventh year under its present editorial management. On all living ethical and religious topics it has come to be considered as one of the most pronounced papers among our large list of valued exchanges. We seldom miss reading its strong and vigorous editorials and are glad to know that its present fearless, independent policy is not to be abandoned. It has avoided partisanship in politics, boldly rebuking sin wherever found, and is a fearless exponent of religious liberty, not sparing even the errors of the church for which it stands. There is room for a few more papers of this kind in the religious world. The Observer is pitched upon a high intellectual, moral and spiritual tone under its present editorial management and for its increased influence and prosperity the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST sincerely prays.

—The surprising revelation that the British and Egyptian troops in the Soudan have been killing all of their wounded enemies after each battle will be hard to reconcile with the claims of a Christian nation and civilized warfare. At this distance we may not know the exigencies of the situation necessitating such a brutal and seemingly inhumane method, but it will be found difficult to square such conduct with the golden rule and other of Christ's sayings. When General Sherman said, "War is hell," he might have added, And hell is beyond refinement.

—The Christian, Sedalia, Mo., for September, contains the farewell sermon of J. S. Myers. The removal of Bro. Myers from Sedalia to Philadelphia leaves the Christian in charge of F. L. Cook as editor and proprietor, and it is in no way impaired by the change. It is still as neat and newsy as ever.

—"The Popular Science News says that a saloonkeeper in England advertised his beer as liquid bread. A member of the English Parliament bought a quart and paid a chemist fifteen dollars to examine it. Two per cent., about a thimbleful, was really food. Five per cent. was alcohol, and the remaining 93 per cent. water. He was arrested under the food act." In our judgment all the rest of his profession ought to be arrested under the FRAUD act.

—We are sorry to learn through Bro. J. Z. Tyler, of Cleveland, Ohio, that the enlistment of Endeavor Societies for the second year's reading course has not been as large as the merits of the work demand nor as its efficient managers had expected. It may be, however, that they are waiting until October to consider the matter. This work ought to be attended to at once and the supplies secured so as to begin actual work by Oct. 1st. Societies should not delay in the matter. Churches and Bible-schools can join in the work and would find it very helpful to do so. At all events all who are contemplating the course for the second year should send at once for further information, if needed, and for supplies. Address J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, Ohio.

—The Christian Tribune, of Baltimore, Md., has been changed to a sixteen-page weekly, the size of Our Young Folks, and will hereafter appear from the press of the Christian Publishing Co., of this city. By this new arrangement the editor, Peter Ainslie, will be relieved of the business management and devote his attention more exclusively to its editorial demands. It is the ambition of Bro. Ainslie to greatly enlarge the influence and usefulness of the Tribune, and the steps taken and changes made will, it is hoped, open the way to that end. We are glad to have so companionable a journal as the Tribune at our side, in the same building, and of course wish it the greatest success in the Lord's field and work.

—In this paper will be found an article by J. Fraise Richard, President Normal College, Washington, D. C., containing a unique yet what seems to us to be a valuable suggestion as to the use of newspapers in our national library. As much as newspapers and other periodicals are read there is a tremendous waste of valuable knowledge for lack of systematic, practical method for classifying and preserving the same. Preachers with a little care could add many valuable volumes to their libraries by a little painstaking along the line suggested, and others could utilize them to their profit. We hope the plan will be adopted by the librarian at Washington as suggested, and in fact by all librarians, as far as possible.

—An eight-page circular has been issued by the Army and Navy Commission giving an outline of the good influences which have been brought to bear upon the soldiers in the various camps and the good results which have followed. This has been one of the most Christianly works of the Christian people of the United States during the year and they should see that it is maintained as long as the army exists. It means better soldiers, better manhood and a better nation. Pray for its success and send a contribution to Dwight L. Moody, East Northfield, Mass., for its support.

—Cards announcing the marriage of Miss Mary Katharine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Atkinson, to Mr. Charles Edward Howe, at the Christian church, Wabash, Ind., September 28th, at 6:30, have been received at this office. Friends will be received at their home 46 Manchester Ave., Wabash, Ind., after Oct. 20th. All the parties named have the congratulations and well wishes of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

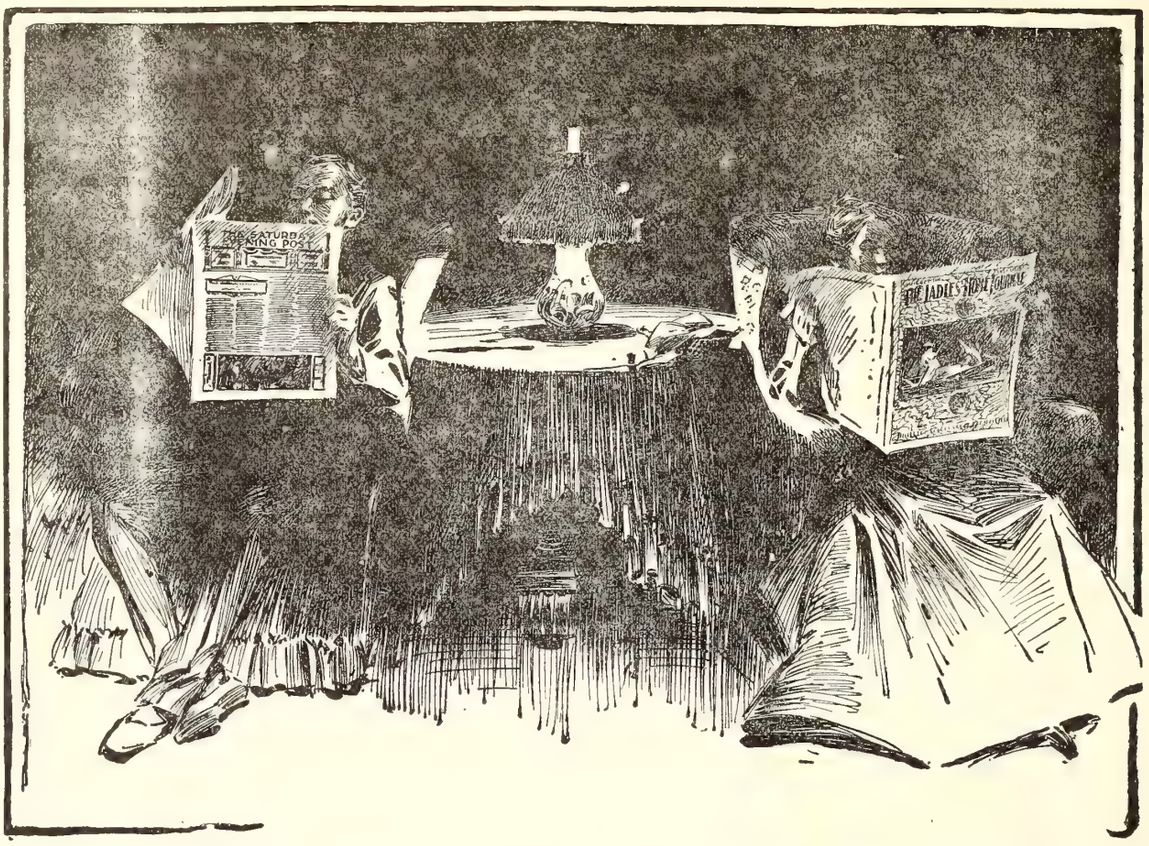
Clergyman's Statement

Nerve Strength Gained by Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

BRIGHTON, IOWA.—Rev. Bernard M. Shulick of this place, owing to weakness of the nerves, was for a time unable to attend to his duties. He makes this statement: "I have suffered for a long time from weak nerves. After I had taken a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla I became quite well again. The weakness of the nerves has now wholly disappeared and I am able to attend to my duties again. I am therefore grateful to Hood's Sarsaparilla and I recommend it to everyone who suffers from weak nerves."

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.



Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

—The Baptist News says that it is willing to call us "Disciples," just this and nothing more, but not Disciples of Christ. To the last name it objects because of the "pre-eminence" it seems to imply. There is no pre-eminence in Christianity from which we as a people are lawfully excluded to our knowledge, even to the pre-eminence of wearing a name that relates to Christ. But in this implied relationship and other Christian graces, we are not exclusivists. The term Disciples of Christ signifies our leader, a fact which we are sorry to learn the Baptist News is yet unwilling to recognize. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST does not ask that the people for whom it stands be recognized as the only Christians or only disciples of Christ in the land, but it does object to hearing them called "Disciples of Alexander Campbell," for historic and spiritual reasons. The Disciples of Christ have never recognized Alexander Campbell as the founder of their faith nor of the religious system to which they are committed. As congregations we claim to be "churches of Christ," and as members of his body we claim to be "his disciples." The name "Disciples of Christ" is, therefore, expressive of the relation we claim to sustain to him, and it is sufficiently distinctive for all practical purposes in the present divided state of the religious world without subjecting us to the charge of inconsistency upon the one hand or of arrogant exclusive claims upon the other; and we feel that our claims merit the respect and courtesy of all who claim to be equally related to him.

—We are requested to say that the State Convention, of Tennessee, will be held with the Highland Park Church, Chattanooga, October 10-13. The change from Memphis was made necessary by the quarantine in that city. All those who desire to attend the General Convention can come to the State Convention two days before and remain over. The rates granted by the railroads will hold for both conventions.

—A correspondent from Arapahoe, Neb., sends us the following testimonial:

One of the greatest helps to the minister, in his work of preaching to the people, is a good religious paper in each family belonging to the church. For 24 years I have done what I could to circulate Christian papers, especially the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I have given it the preference for the reason that as an all-around family paper I believe it to be superior to any other for all purposes for the family. In its present form, in my judgment, it is greatly improved. C. P. E.

Elsewhere in this paper will be found a note from J. Z. Tyler, National Superintendent of Christian Endeavor, to the preachers asking them to call the attention of their Endeavor Societies to the importance of the Bethany Reading Course. Many Societies can thus be persuaded to undertake this good work which would otherwise neglect it. The time for beginning the second year's course is at hand and the matter should not be neglected. The success of the Bethany Reading Course means much for the strength and influence of the church and for every good work which it has in hand, besides the personal culture and spiritual advancement of the reader. Every preacher should, therefore, urge his Endeavor Society to take the course.

—The Union Signal says: "A brewer of Milwaukee has received orders for 60,000 car loads of beer to be shipped to the Philippines." Is this the commencement of the new civilization proposed for these islands? Behold, how alert the Devil and his agents! By and by the world will be wondering what is the matter with the Philippine Islands. Behold, "while men slept his enemies came and sowed tares among the wheat and went their way."

—With this number we begin the publication of a series of articles from the discerning, analytical pen of N. J. Aylesworth, Auburn, N. Y., on the involved and almost universal question, "Can I Love My Enemies?" We feel assured that the name of the author and the personal nature of the theme will insure for these thoughtful articles a wide and careful reading.

—"We must get out of the disease and then God will take the disease out of us," is a remark to which the Christian and Missionary Alliance attaches much significance, and if true, as the Alliance argues, takes away the major part of the mystery of "divine healing." There is, then, after all, two sides to this question of "divine healing," and on the human side something more than prayer is essential to his blessing. In commenting on the importance of the above remark the Alliance says: "Beloved, get out of your sickness, get out of your physical consciousness, get out of the atmosphere of your morbidness and misery, and God will soon cause your face to shine with the wealth of his countenance and your life to spring with the fullness of your strength." This being done the way is then clear for nature to do the rest without the use of miraculous power.

—I. N. Crutcher, of Whitesboro, Texas, says:

DEAR BROTHER:—The article, "Conversion of Europe," of issue of Sept. 8th, is worth the price of the paper for a year. I write this from a sick bed, so "excuse writing." The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST improves with each issue.

—Remember that F. M. Call, business manager of the Christian Publishing Co., this city, has arranged for special coaches from St. Louis to Chattanooga and return, in which the fare for the round trip will not exceed one-way fare for a half-fare rate. All who expect to avail themselves of this rate in these special coaches should send their names to him at once. The conveniences and comforts of special coaches will be quite a factor in your trip to Chattanooga and return. Other particulars will be given in our next issue.

—The Practical Christian, a well-edited, neely printed, newsy paper, edited by J. C. Mason, Houston, Texas, now comes to us twice per month instead of monthly as before. We take this as an evidence of growing prosperity in the history of the Practical Christian.

—The Mt. Cabanne Bible Club will celebrate its third anniversary on Tuesday evening, Sept. 27th with appropriate services. Certificates setting forth work of the club for the year will be given to each member of the club. These certificates will contain a picture of F. M. Call, the third president of the club, and also of Mrs. H. S. Meador, who was one of its most devoted members and its first to fall asleep in Christ. This organization will complete its Bible course in one more year.

—A brother from Hyndman, Pa., writes:

GENTLEMEN:—I wish to express my appreciation of your most excellent paper. I especially approve of the article, "A Word to Parents and Teachers," of Aug. 18th. I can say with Josiah Strong that this is the need of the day. Push it along, and my prayers go with you.

—A singular freak of human nature and one that argues strongly in favor of the need of regeneration appears in the following statement from the Peculiar People, a Christian monthly devoted to Jewish interests. This journal says:

It is a singular fact, that all the enlightenment and freedom of modern Jews, and all the benefits they enjoy under such a Christian government as that of England, for instance, has not taught them toleration for those of their brethren who join the Christian Church. It is often asserted by them that they do not persecute converts; but this only means that there is not, as a rule, an organized persecution. For every missionary knows and every Christian Jew painfully feels that converts are ruthlessly cut off from intercourse with family and friends, often separated from their wives and children, deprived of their property, shunned, hated, and in some instances, where local circumstances allow it, imprisoned on false charges and beaten. It is a strange and sorrowful spectacle; Jews persecuted by Christians because they are Jews, and, on the other hand, Jews persecuting converts because they are Christians.

PERSONAL MENTION.

C. B. Scott, one of the trustees of Bethany College, and the father of Orien E. Scott, of this city, has been visiting his son here for a few days and forming the acquaintance of our people in this city. He favored this office with a pleasant call while in the city.

We are sorry to learn of the sickness of C. S. Medbury, of Angola, Ind., and hope that he is well-nigh recovered ere this writing.

J. H. Lawson, of White Right, Tex., in company with Bro. Atkinson, of the Fourth Church, of this city, and Miss Susie and Miss Ollie Threkeld, of Mexico, Mo., called at this office on day last week. They were on their way to Licking, Mo., where they were to begin a protracted meeting on last Saturday. The Threkeld sisters are vocal music teachers and will have charge of the song services during the meeting.

Rev. Charles Campbell, of Sanford, Florida, would like to have the address of C. J. Hayes, the singing evangelist.

J. M. Rudy, of Quincy, Ill., has received a unanimous call from the church at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and will accept. The Cedar Rapids church sent a committee to ascertain the standing and influence of Bro. Rudy as a preacher and it was their favorable report that led to his enthusiastic call to Cedar Rapids. Bro. Rudy is an energetic and faithful minister, and the church at Quincy will reluctantly consent to his removal from their presence.

A. B. Moore, State Evangelist of Minnesota, informs us that two young preachers who could live on a salary of four or five hundred dollars each could be located with two country churches in that state. Bro. Moore's address is at Austin, Minn. We are sorry to learn that the wife of Bro. Moore has been quite sick. She has gone to her people in Ohio, where she hopes soon to regain her health.

A. P. Cobb is assisting W. L. Ennefer in a meeting at Blue Mound, Ill., with fine prospects. One addition Sunday night.

Bro. W. L. Ennefer will close his second year's work at Blue Mound, Oct. 9th. He is open for engagements elsewhere.

E. E. Pierce, of Fields, Ohio, will close his work there Oct. 1st, and solicits correspondence from churches contemplating a protracted meeting or wanting a pastor, in which work he has had eight years experience.

During the summer months, Singing Evangelist J. E. Hawes has been working with the Anti-Saloon League. But from now on through the winter season he is open to engagements in the evangelistic field. Write him at Ada, Ohio.

C. P. Evans, Arapahoe, Neb., is ready to make engagements either for regular work or protracted meetings.

F. M. Anderson, pastor of the church at Danville, Virginia, who has been visiting his old home and friends at Steelville, Mo., called at this office on last Monday, on his way back to Virginia. Bro. Anderson is deeply impressed with the need for more workers and work in Crawford and adjoining counties, and hopes that the state board will soon be able to send pastors and teachers into that field. We presume the wants of Southwest and Southeast Missouri will be properly emphasized at the Nevada convention next week.

Seeing that J. G. Waggoner, of Eureka, Ill., is determined in his purpose of closing his work for the church there, the church has officially expressed its high appreciation of his continued ministry of eleven years there and its sincere commendation of his whole-hearted, faithful services wherever his lot may be cast, in a strongly written resolution.

J. T. Ogle will address the Missouri State Convention on Church Extension, instead of George Darsie, as announced in the program.

J. N. Murphy, of Windsor, Mo., writes us that he has recovered his health and that of his family, and he is now permitted to engage his whole time in ministerial work.

Thos. J. Thompson writes that he has decided to close his work at Lathrop, Mo., Jan. 1st, 1898. That means, of course, that Lathrop will want another preacher and that Bro. Thompson will become available for another field or church.

On account of poor health M. R. Shanks has declined a call for another year, so the Church of Christ at Monticello, Iowa, is now ready to engage another man.

John L. Stine, of Reserve, Kan., writes that he will be at liberty to hold one protracted meeting beginning about the first of November, and prefers to hold that meeting with some weak church.

J. T. McDowell has changed his address from Magnolia, Ia., to 6643 Lyric Street, East Pittsburg, Pa. He says that he will be in the East for several months.

B. H. Hayden has changed his address from Chicago to West Madison Ave. Church, Cleveland, Ohio, and of course wants the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to follow him.

C. G. Blakeslee, pastor of the church at Roseville, Ill., has resigned and is now ready for another field. He was at Roseville three years, and reports the church "in excellent condition." The church gave him a farewell social last week, leaving a handsome purse of silver and other evidences of their esteem for him and for his services.

J. G. Slick has removed from Amboy to Litchfield, Minn., and says, "Don't let me miss a number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST." He is pleased with the outlook in his new field.

From the Herald, Quincy, Ill., we learn that H. L. Stine, of Paris, Mo., is likely to be the successor of J. M. Rudy, who has been called to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, already mentioned in this column. Bro. Rudy goes into a good field, with a strong church, large house and favorable surroundings for a fine work. Bro. Stine will also find himself strongly supported at Quincy, Ill.

P. B. Hall, of Charlottesville, Va., would like engagement to preach for some church in the middle states. Remember the address.

W. E. Garrison, the only member of our editorial staff who went abroad this year, having returned resumes his regular work again on this paper. He will also be engaged in teaching in the Bible department of Butler University, Irvington, Ind., this year, and to this work he went direct from Macatawa, Mich., without calling at this office. We are pleased to note that after a fine trip he is in fine health and enters upon his manifold duties with renewed energies.

On last Sunday evening Geo. F. Hall, of Decatur, Ill., delivered a temperance sermon or lecture to a large audience in the tabernacle at Decatur.

W. H. Williams, having preached for the church at Elmore, O., for nine years, has resigned and removed to Prairie Depot, O.

There is an opening at Hyndman, Pa., for a music teacher. Address, Herbert Carpenter.

Evangelist J. V. Coombs, with Singer A. O. Hunsaker, is in a meeting with J. H. Jones at Garden City, Mo.

E. S. Conner, after five years of service for the church at Noblesville, Ind., resigned. During his work there the church built a $16,650 house and its membership has been more than doubled. The church board officially says that "his work has been characterized by energy, earnestness, ability and discretion. Under his labors the church has grown in spirituality, liberality and good works, and now occupies a stronger position and has a greater influence than before." While Bro. Conner has thus prospered the church at Noblesville he desires a change and becomes available as a good man for some of our stronger churches. Of course, he will not have to search long for another field. Such men are soon picked up by churches in search of efficient preachers and pastors.

C. H. Plattenburg has removed from Ashland, Ohio, to Uniontown, Pa. His congregation at Ashland were sorry to lose him, but the larger field opened for him at Uniontown overruled their wishes. During his three years at Ashland nearly 200 members were added to the church, and the church debt paid.

F. S. Pettit, who went from Chillicothe, Mo., to Alcott, Col., some time ago, for the recovery of his health, writes that he is improving but that it will be several months before he will be able to do regular work again. He has resigned his pastorate at Chillicothe and will remain in Colorado for a season. Bro. Assiter is his successor at Chillicothe.

Correspondence.

Wheeling through England.

X.

It had long ago been decided that London should be the terminus of this bicycle trip, and Friday noon had been fixed upon as the last possible moment for reaching that goal. Leaving Edinburgh with four hundred and forty miles to go and four days and a half in which to do it, this final section of the tour necessarily degenerated into something of a race against time. But if one must hurry, this was the best place in England to do it, for the roads are level and, although it is an interesting ride, there are comparatively few points of picturesque or historic interest which absolutely demand that the traveler shall linger long in contemplation. Perhaps the most attractive spot on the route is that bit of Scottish borderland which contains, within a few miles, the galaxy of Abbottsford, Melrose and Dryburgh Abbey. The present proprietors of Walter Scott's home, Abbottsford, have devised a most ingenious system for exhibiting to the visitor just those few rooms which they care to exhibit and shooting him out again into the road, admiring but dissatisfied. But at Melrose one may pause and muse and meditate to his heart's content upon the most beautiful ruin in Scotland. There is something peculiarly satisfying about a good ruin, especially one like Melrose, whose every stone is a monument to the patient labor and artistic skill of those who carved and placed it. In elaborate buildings of more modern date one cannot but doubt occasionally whether the result, beautiful as it may be, is worth its cost of toil. There are cathedrals which, by their grandeur and magnificence, suggest that there has been a vast waste of both capital and labor, a terrible misapplication of resources. This is particularly true of new cathedrals. But it is different with a ruin. Here, in the nature of the case, one is forbidden to query whether it is worth its cost. The process of construction is here lost sight of in the distance, and there remains only the product, exquisite even in decay.

The line between Scotland and England (the river Tweed at this point) was again crossed without the traditional rain, but a worse thing befell me within a mile after crossing the line—a broken crank. This would have been bad at any time, but it was really serious when the schedule for these few remaining days demanded an average of a hundred miles a day. A telegram to London summoned the extra part to meet me next morning at Morpeth, forty miles from the scene of the accident. The rest of the afternoon was spent in the interesting exercise of learning how to ride against the wind and over an undulating road, with one pedal and the stump of a crank. It is possible, but not pleasant. No one who has not tried it will appreciate the thrill of delight which I received on finding the new crank at Morpeth next morning. Perhaps it will also be hard fully to appreciate the bitterness of the disappointment on finding that the new crank was of the wrong pattern, and therefore useless. It meant another day of riding with one leg. But this day's ride was broken by long stops at Newcastle-on-Tyne and Durban. Of the many English cathedrals visited on this tour some produced such an impression as Durham, standing with a Norman castle at its side, on a commanding height, overlooking the river and town. A satisfactory repair of the crippled wheel was effected at Durham, and there seemed to be still a chance of reaching London on time, stopping to see a few more cathedrals on the way besides.

But alas for the vanity of human wishes! Two hours out of Durham, and making lively time before a friendly breeze, there came a sickening crash. It might have been a broken leg, but as it happened it was nothing worse than the breaking off of a pedal. London seemed very far away, and it was not altogether easy to take a hopeful view of the case. There was no chance of getting a repair, but the days preceding had afforded some experience in the art of riding with one leg, and in that lay the only hope. I have a deep-seated aversion to the idea of finishing a bicycle trip on the train. The outcome of the matter was that the remaining two hundred and sixty miles, including two "century runs," were ridden with only one pedal, and London was reached on schedule time, before noon on Friday. But there were interesting points to be visited before London was reached. For the lover of cathedrals no part of England can offer attractions equal to those of the strip from Durham to London. The cathedrals of Durham, York, Peterboro, Lincoln and Ely, not to mention St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey in London, will furnish to the student of ecclesiastical architecture abundant food for thought.

In the midst of these splendid monuments of the religious establishment, it is pleasing to find a spot where the mind can dwell upon the heroes of Independency and the early champions of religious liberty. It is not many miles from York—the seat of the archbishop of the North—to Scrooby, the English home of our Pilgrim Fathers before their migration to Holland and then to New England. The cathedral at York is, in its proportions at least, the most imposing of Anglican temples; at Scrooby the oaken beams of the low building in which the little band of Independents worshiped now form the roof of a stable. Scrooby is not much frequented by sightseers, although the present occupant of the manor house, as he showed through the ancient edifice by candlelight, assured me that they had a great many visitors—that, in fact, somebody came almost every week in summertime. I spent a night in Scrooby, and employed most of the evening in trying to discover whether any of the villagers were familiar with the names or the deeds of their eminent fellow-townsmen of two centuries and a half ago. Not a man could be found, except at the manor house, who had ever heard of the Pilgrims. I inquired particularly about William Brewster, but none of them could remember that any family of Brewsters had ever lived in the community. If it be not too harsh a thing to say on observation limited to a single night, I would characterize the Nottinghamshire peasants of the locality of Scrooby as an unusually dull and insensible set, little likely to be roused to deeds of heroism. Perhaps the stock has degenerated in these latter days; or perhaps, as I prefer to believe, the Pilgrims in Scrooby, before they began their pilgrimage, were men of this same sort—heavy and stolid, and what a passing stranger (like myself) might have called stupid. If so, it shows how the touch of divine fire and the possession of a divine truth may make heroes out of peasants.

It was a comfort to be assured by the guidebooks that Cambridge is inferior to Oxford in interest and beauty, for the stop there must be short, too short to admit of more than a hasty outside view of the principal colleges. One twilight and two moonlight hours gave me all the impression of Cambridge which I was permitted to get. Next morning an easy fifty-mile run brought me into London and completed a ride of three thousand and eighteen miles in sixty-six days. A few days remain for seeing London, but the bicycle trip is at an end. At the end of the tour I find several beliefs confirmed, most notably the conviction that, in such a country as England, the bicycle is the best means of vacation travel yet devised. The pride which I took in my bicyle when it was new, perfect in enamel and nickel-plate, but yet untried, has given place to a genuine affection, now that it is known to be sound within, though scratched and scarred without. No accidents have befallen my Sterling, except such as were due to circumstances over which neither it nor I had control. The end of the whole matter is that, to those who are contemplating a bicycle trip in England, I would reiterate the advice which I offered in the article preliminary to this series: "Go."

W. E. Garrison.

London.

A Bit of Dixie.

East Tennessee is proverbially a land of picturesqueness. Writers have often likened it to "the Switzerland of the South." Pen and easel alike pay just tribute to this "land of the skies." Like Cæsar, "I came, I saw," but unlike him, I am conquered—Tennessee has captivated me; at her feet I bow in reverence. God has been good to her!

Prairie-born, my first real mountain view was of that historic landmark, Lookout Mountain, as the Chattanooga, St. Louis and Southern car swept into the Tennessee River Valley.

Forgetting its historical associations—and it has many, including the famous "Battle of the Clouds" in which Grant, Sherman and Hooker largely figured—Lookout yet deserves and demands more than a passing mention. From its peak six states may be seen; while spread out beneath in panoramic fashion may be seen old Missionary Ridge on which Chickamauga National Military Park is located, where so recently thousands of "blue" boys in blue were stationed; the graceful, glistening windings of the Tennessee, as it rounds Moccasin Bend; a bird's-eye view, or more strictly speaking, a roof view of Chattanooga, spire melting into turret and steeple into cupola; and, in the dim distance, the pale purple outlines of far-away mountain ranges.

Don't miss coming to the convention at Chattanooga! You will miss a treat if you do. Come and see where Gov. Bob Taylor breathed inspiration for that breezy Nashville Endeavor address. Come and see where "Old Hickory" started on the bottom rung to clime at last into the President's exalted chair. Come and see where James K. Polk and Andrew Johnson followed suit with the same happy result. Come and see a typical Southern state.

Perhaps it is patriotism makes Gov. Taylor believe "the sky is bluer, the rivers clearer, the grass greener," etc., in his native state than elsewhere; but, nevertheless, so or not so, Tennessee possesses a matchless climate. But Bob may not be so far off after all, for a friend of mine from Indiana once said, "The stars seem to shine brighter down here than up in Hoosierdom."

A bit of Tennessee history might not be out of place. It was the sixteenth state admitted, so did not miss much of being one of the thirteen original. The spring of 1796 chronicled its advent and thus added a bright star to the the blue depths of Old Glory's folds. It was named Tennessee from the Indian "Tenassee," meaning "river of the big bend." It was first settled at Watauga in 1769 by English settlers.

The area of the state is 42,050 sq. mi. Its population in 1890 was one million seven hundred and sixty-seven thousand. Memphis, Nashville and Chattanooga are its metropolises.

In many respects the state, in sections, is an oddity. Progress evidently ossified somewhere back in the time when this country was in its teens. The same old rough-hewn log cabin with stick and mud chimney that proved a domicile to the early pioneer still shelters his great-grandsons. Youngsters go hunting rabbits with muskets that would easily be mistaken in the dark for old-time "blunderbuses;" the "whirr" of an occasional octogenarian spinning-wheel startles you; while flails, cradles and numerous other such farming implements proclaim the fact that they have not forsaken the "path of their fathers" for such new fangled innovations as threshers and mowing machines. One instinctively looks for the ancient, primeval wooden plow, but lo and behold! you are informed that they gave that up several years ago!

Tennessee has its share of 'possums and "'possum fruit," persimmons. Tobacco and cotton are also found, although Tennessee is pre-eminently a marble state, some of her granite slabs bearing equal honor with Egyptian marble in gracing the rotunda of the Congressional Library at Washington, D. C.

Fearing that I have already said "right smart" too much, allow me to make my bow.

Los Angeles Letter.

Mrs. Smither and I have just returned from an extended visit in the East. During our sojourn we passed through and to a limited extent visited the following cities: San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, St. Paul, Minnesota, Chicago, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Chautauqua, Cincinnati, Frankfort, Louisville, St. Louis and Kansas City. Our most extended visits were at Bethany Park, Ind., Chautauqua Assembly, N. Y., and in Central Kentucky. It may be that some of the impressions of my trip might be of interest to the reader. This country seems greater, larger to me than ever before. One must repeatedly cross this continent by the various lines of railroad to get any adequate conception of its size. I have made my ninth trip across this continent and it seems farther than ever before. It is a country with immense resources. The tremendous crops of this year would seem sufficient to feed the world. Surely, we have the physical basis for a magnificent empire. The commercial and financial activities of the country seem to me more vigorous than for many years. I heard no complaints in Eastern states of hard times. This was a striking change from my visit East ten years ago. I found the religious conditions among the Disciples of Christ encouraging. Our work in the cities is constantly growing. Many fine buildings have been erected in the last few years. Our pastorates are growing longer. Better educated men are entering the ministry. The missionary spirit is growing. Our people are coming to wider views of truth and deeper spiritual life. Signs of religious healthfulness may be seen everywhere. We take courage and press onward.

I have just completed the eighth year of my pastorate with the First Church in this city and have entered upon my ninth year of service for this splendid church. Within those eight years great changes have taken place in this city and church. Then Los Angeles had 50,000 inhabitants, now we have at least 115,000. Then our church worshiped in one of the very poorest, if not indeed the poorest church structure in the city, now we are located on one of the choicest corners of the city and are occupying one of the most magnificent church houses in this city and the finest among the Disciples on the Pacific Slope, or even west of Denver. Then the First Church had comparatively little influence on the religious life of this city, now it stands in the very lead. Within that time there has been received into membership nearly 800 persons, and the actual though not the enrolled membership of the church is about doubled, notwithstanding the fact that we have given out about ten hundred members to aid in establishing the other churches in Los Angeles. I am now the patriarch of the Los Angeles pulpit. No other pastor in this city has occupied the same pulpit as long as I have that of the First Church.

It is to be hoped that all our churches will specially emphasize our September offering for Church Extension. This work lies at the very basis of the success of our Home Missionary work in America. My recent trip East has emphasized afresh in my mind the importance of planting our great cause in the magnificent cities of this country. There can be no greater aid to this than a large Church Extension Fund.

A. C. SMITHER.

Los Angeles, Cal.

At Fontainebleau.

Two hours from Paris. A ride through gardens and harvest fields. Bountiful harvests, primitive methods, silent fields! The click of the mower and binder are never heard; but they are not odorless. All that poetry about "sweet fields" needs revision in countries where the price of fertility is excessive fertilization.

Forest of Fontainebleau! What a transition from the boulevards of Paris! It is not large. A soldier could march around it between sunrise and sunset. But it is most beautiful in France. It has no elevated places, no mountains, though it has some hills with beautiful prospects. The Tower of Denecourt in the north part, the Rocks and Gorge of Franchard, the Gorge of Apremont in the west part, and certain localities in the south, are constantly visited; yet the most ravishingly beautiful places are far aside from these popular centers which are more curious than artistic and natural. He who penetrates a foot into the remote sections will find himself in the midst of trees, beech, oak and birch, worthy of the name. They have been carefully watched over. Nature and the forester have accomplished wonders in these quiet nooks. Compared with the Black Forest of Southern Germany, Fontainebleau would suffer greatly. The comparison would be ruinous indeed.

Fontainebleau has its temple, its cult, its idol, its idolatry as well as its oaks and beeches. Its temple is one of those chapels which one sees by the score and by the hundred in Tyrol, where roadside idolatry is equal to that of Spain, India or China. The forest of Fontainebleau has but one such roadside chapel, but that one is interesting. It stands on the broad Route of Mulun, just at the entrance of the street which leads through the town to the palace of the kings of France, in a certain sense also a temple sacred to the memory of the gods dethroned, and where the stranger goes up to worship. The pilgrimage continues all summer.

But the chapel proper. Large enough to accommodate two or three persons in a kneeling posture. A marble altar some twelve inches high, within doubtléss a consecrated wafer. But you do not kneel there. A great door excludes the intruder while allowing him to see the object, or the medium, if you will, of his devotion. (Object and medium are probably terms unknown to peasants.) Above, a statue of the Virgin. Nor is it a work of art. A Greek portal. Before this a Greek porch, open, supported by pillars on the sides. Fifty persons might kneel beneath it. The ceiling is adorned with a large painting. A mighty oak fills the field. A steed, frightened, is in the act of stopping. The rider, a cavalier of the 17th century, is prone on the ground on his back with one foot in the stirrup. Mary appears in the lower branches of the tree with a child in her arms. It is the babe of Bethlehem.

On either side of the Greek portal, he who runs may read, if he can read French, a large poster, blue, printed, official, stamped, protected beneath a trellis of wire, giving the "Origin of the Chapel of Notre-Dame-de-Bon-Secours," of which Bædeker takes no notice. I made on the spot a translation, which proves too long to forward to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I cannot resist inserting a few passages:

"In 1661, toward the end of November, M. d'Aberon was returning to the court of Louis XIV., when his horse threw him and dragged him downhill to this point. Without doubt he was about to suffer a most cruel and tragic death. With an extraordinary devotion toward the Mother of God, the pious cavalier raised his eyes supplicatingly to heaven and called upon the august Mary to succor him. Immediately the horse stopped, still trembling with fright. M. d'Aberon could not find a single wound, though he had been dragged over stones.

"In gratitude, M. d'Auberon caused an image of the Virgin to be blessed, etc., May 3, 1662. The same day, M. Durand, pastor, carried the image in procession and fixed it on an oak where the horse had been miraculously stopped. An authentic recitation of the facts on parchment in Latin accompanied the image, etc.

"M. Grenet, a later priest, built an oratory on the spot where the oak fell with age and time. A painting adorned the front.

"The revolution of '93 did not spare this edifice, so highly venerated by the districts about, etc.

"In the calm which followed those mournful days, M. Philippeaux, archpriest of F. and honorary canon of Meaux, conceived the idea of rebuilding the ancient chapel. M. Hurtault, the king's architect and member of the Institute (highest dignity conferred in France), drew the plan and directed the work. M. Blondel, an excellent painter, volunteered to reproduce the miraculous event.

"Such is the monument dedicated by the priest of F. Sept. 30, 1821, in the midst of all the civil and military authorities in grand uniform * * * * !"

Another passage relates the organization of the now widely known cult under the name of "Notre-Dame-de-Bon-Secours," which received a special supply of indulgences from the Pope July 2, 1820.

A prayer to the Virgin closes the historical sketch. Solomon's temple was not able to set more dignitaries in motion than this niche by the roadside, one of a system of roadside oratories dedicated to the saints, especially Joseph and Mary, and to be met with wherever the red cap of a cardinal is in authority. The statues sometimes remind one vividly of the heathen gods in the oriental departments of the museums, so terrible is the art and handicraft displayed. The Greeks had idols, but they were works of art. In Italy the Christians have not lacked in works of art, whether in painting or sculpture, but the roadside idols, especially in Tyrol, are excelled in ugliness only by those of the Orient.

In the presence of such "authentic miracles" one cannot help recalling the misfortunes of the poet Gringoire, in Victor Hugo's "Notre-Dame de Paris." It so happened that this renowned verse-maker was knocked down in a street incident one night in the year 1482, and fell in a gutter near a statue of the Virgin. It came to pass also that a merchant round the corner died. The street Arabs got the castaway straw bedd ng of the deceased and threw it down by accident on the half-senseless rhymester. They were going to build a bonfire, for it was winter and the night of the Feast of Fools. Gringoire had the good fortune to regain consciousness, sprang up and fled. The gamins, frightened by the apparition, cried aloud and spread the report that the merchant, or his soul, had come to life and fled from the tick. "All on account of the mere presence of the statue of the Virgin," said the clergy, and they bore away the straw tick with honor to the church of Sainte-Opportune, where it is said to have remained till the year 1759, to the great profit of the Sacristan and for the healing of the multitudes.

Fontainebleau is a town of some 14,000 inhabitants. The chief industry in summer and fall is to welcome the strangers and make them pay more per day than at Paris, an honor of which the city is justly proud.

The palace, or chateau, of Fontainebleau is chiefly interesting on account of being the country seat of the kings and emperors of France since the reign of Francois I. You are shown rapidly through the ancient Chapel of the Trinity, where Louis XV. was married, and where Napoleon III. was baptized in 1810. From here you enter the apartments of Napoleon I. and visit the cabinet where he signed his abdication in 1814. The council chamber and throne room are elaborately furnished and decorated. From here you pass into the boudoir of Marie Antoinette, which contains some rare vases in ivory. The library or gallery of Diana has 30,000 volumes. The gallery of Francois I. is remarkable for its decorations and for a jewel casket in porcelain. A certain suite of chambers were occupied by the Pope as prisoner from 1812 to 1814. But the great historical personages who have passed through these buildings from century to century is that which makes them the object of so much attention. It was here that Louis IV. signed the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685; it was here that Napoleon I. divorced Josephine in 1809; it was in the Court of Farewells that he took leave of the grenadiers of the guard in 1814; here that he reviewed them on his return from exile, 1815. The guide gives you no time for musing and no time to examine closely a decoration, a tapestry or a painting.

If you leave for Paris by a late train, the last thing you do is to eat your supper on the sidewalk, a terrace or veranda, and then walk through the park to the station. You will sometimes chance to hear a bit of conversation. This evening a well-dressed American, who loved red wine, was engaged in a chat with the restaurant keeper. Perhaps it was the wine, the heat; perhaps a package of important letters had been returned from the last stopping-place to the states, or perhaps he had been reading a Paris editorial on the war. No matter, he was out of humor. He had the appearance of a man who delights in the naked truth, and who was not in the habit of sugar-coating his opinions.

"How do you find our little city?" asked the restaurateur.

"Forest magnificent, palace rich in historical souvenirs. The town? It's a convent," was the laconic reply.

"Your pardon, Monsieur, your pardon a thousand times; but have the goodness to explain."

"Not difficult. I say the town is a convent. Walls, walls everywhere. Your streets are but corridors, with stone walls and iron doors through which you enter into your homes like a monk into his cell. One might think the town was full of nuns and priests, like Manila."

"But Monsieur surely noticed that many have lowered their walls to three feet—"

"Have substituted a system of iron pickets of the height of the parts removed. Iron spears as large as pitchfork handles and as long. Would do excellently for a state's prison. Look like the spears of the middle ages, only these are not so heavy. But they are better than non-transparent stone. The homeless stranger can at least admire the pretty little gardens before the doors."

"Our pretty little gardens!" exclaimed the restaurateur, with a gesture of delight. "To protect them and to have security for life, property and privacy, the walls are necessary."

"Some of your generous citizens seem to have had an attack of penitence. They have trained vines and ivy over the spears in order to regain their precious privacy. Streets are deserted enough most of the time, are they not? Do you think your homes would be vandalized and your roses stolen by the strangers who come in summer? Are your cottages all government mints? Do they contain plans and specifications of the fortifications of France? The castles of the fourteenth century were not better walled in than your—rosebeds."

"But the security of life when one is asleep? Our children? It would be too much like the insecurity of American towns if we had no walls and iron gates. They say one is not safe there neither by day nor night."

"Which is a European falsehood. Go to the deserts of Arizona, where there are more Indians and Mexican half-breeds than palefaces. The people of Phœnix dread nothing but mosquitoes. They sleep in their yards indifferently, or on their porches. Even the invalids sleep out of doors. Your life is as safe there, and safer, than at Paris."

The face of the restaurateur turned pale at the thought of sleeping out of doors. He regained his natural color in concluding that he had been listening to an American yarn. Having never heard of Arizona, he at once denied its existence. By this revelation of ignorance he raised himself to the level of many school-teachers on the Continent who prate about the inefficiency of American schools. My fellow-countryman was in a predicament. I came to his relief by drawing from my handsack a splendid folding map in color of the United States, probably the first the restaurateur had ever seen, and which had done me good service in the presence of more than one disciple of Thomas. We proceeded at once to give the restaurateur his first lesson in the geography of North America.

When I left for the train my compatriot was still continuing his harangue:

"Not only your houses from each other and from the street, but also your kitchen gardens, with nothing but cabbage on one side and potatoes and beans on the other, are separated by walls of brick and stone. I have no doubt but that there is waste material enough in the useless, senseless walls of your town to add another story to every dwelling-house in the place, and your streets would gain as well in width and beauty; the stranger would feel more at home and less like he was in a convent. But I presume it will take you people eight or ten centuries more to see through such a simple, economic proposition and to appreciate the beauties of a civilization without stone walls and sheet-iron gates. In America we are accustomed to see such things around convents, but not about residences."

Reply to Editor's Criticism.

The editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST mistakes my purpose and overestimates my ambition in characterizing what appears in the last number of that paper under my name as "an effort to abolish mystery." The writer of the paper was not impelled by any such purpose or ambition, but by a simple desire to contribute in a small measure to the removal of the rubbish of mysticism which has so long obstructed the way and impeded the work of the Holy Spirit among men. The editor seems to have read my paper under the influence of super-excited imagination, to have discovered in it "a disposition and tendency to deny everything mysterious and marvelous, and every fact and truth that is above one's comprehension." Not only this, but he construes my declaration, that the Scriptures do not speak of the personality of the Holy Spirit, into a denial of such personality. If one would declare that the Scriptures are silent respecting the personality of God, would that be evidence that such an one did not believe in the existence of God? Every intelligence in the universe is an embodiment, a personality, but some of these possess spirit-bodies, concerning which we have no knowledge, or means for acquiring it; may we not, therefore, believe in the existence of such bodies?

For the enlightenment of Bro. Garrison and my own vindication I will restate what I said on this point: "If it be true that the Holy Spirit occupies, at the same moment of time, millions of other personalities like man, and scattered as they are all over the earth, then it is not true that the Holy Spirit is a personality, of which man has knowledge, or of which he can form an intelligent conception," and then I made the statement, that "respecting the personality of the Holy Spirit," the Scriptures are silent; that man, of himself, possesses no knowledge, and does not even possess capacity to form an intelligent conception," and I stand by this statement and at the same time declare my belief in the personality of the Holy Spirit.

But the subject of this inquiry is not spirit-nature, or spirit-being; of these we cannot form even an intelligent conception. We are looking for him whom Jesus told his disciples he would send to take his place among them. Men and women have become weary hearing of and waiting for an invisible, intangible, incomprehensible Comforter. They want a Comforter who is more tangible than an idea, more comprehensible than a mystery, more reliable than an emotion. They want a Comforter and Advocate to whom they can go as the disciples went to Jesus for instruction, for advice, for sympathy, for help. They want to know where he took up his abode when he came to the earth, assured that where he took up his abode there he abides still.

But to return to the criticism of Bro. Garrison. He objects to the statement, that "man is so constituted that he cannot take cognizance of things except through his senses," etc. Will he kindly give me an instance in which God communicated with man, or that men communicate with others, by manners and means not cognizable by the senses? His simple denial of the statement is not satisfactory. Again, Bro. Garrison "accepts as true what Bro. Carson says about the embodiment of God in the person of Christ and the church," but says, "This in no way disproves the larger movements of the Spirit of God, which are not limited to the methods mentioned." This to me is an extraordinary statement. Paul says that in his effort to save men, through Christ, God "emptied himself," exhausted himself of means and methods. But according to Bro. Garrison, Paul was mistaken. The Spirit is engaged in larger movements now, in which he is not limited to the methods of Christ and the church. Surely, this must be accepted, if at all, in "the mystic spirit" sense. JAMES O. CARSON.

St. Louis, Sept. 6, 1898.

[1. If Bro. Carson will read more carefully our strictures on his article he will discover that we do not attribute to him "a disposition and tendency to deny everything mysterious and marvelous," etc., but we mention that as a characteristic of a certain class of thinkers, and this tendency, we said, was more to be feared than the opposite one which he criticised.

2. To say that the Scriptures are silent concerning the personality of the Holy Spirit is, in our judgment, equivalent to saying that we have no ground for the belief in the personality of the Holy Spirit for, as concerning the nature of the tripersonality of the Godhead, we are shut up to revelation.

3. Bro. C. confuses personality with embodiment, whereas they are entirely distinct conceptions. A person may or may not have a body. In a certain experience of Paul he did not know whether he was in the body or out of the body, but he was conscious during that time of having seen and heard wonderful things which it would not be lawful for him to repeat.

4. If the Scriptures reveal the personality of the Holy Spirit as a fact, then we have "knowledge" of the fact. We are not asked as finite beings, to comprehend the personality of God, whether as Father, Son or Holy Spirit, but we can, as a matter of faith accept revealed facts and truths that transcend the limits of our reason and knowledge. We accept cheerfully Bro. C.'s declaration of belief in the personality of the Holy Spirit, and we have no doubt but that his faith is grounded on the statements of the Holy Scriptures.

5. Bro. C. says, "Men and women have become weary waiting for an invisible, intangible, incomprehensible Comforter." Does he mean by this to assert that the Holy Spirit is a visible, tangible and comprehensible Comforter?

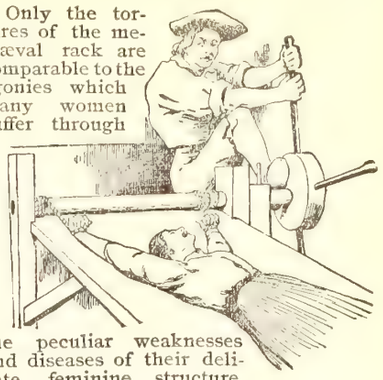
That the Holy Spirit does manifest himself through the church and through individual Christians is a glorious truth; but it would be a strange mistake to identify the Holy Spirit with the body or the individual through which he manifests himself. For ourselves, we would esteem it an infinite misfortune to have the divine Comforter, whom Jesus promised, transformed into a visible, tangible and comprehensible being. That would rob him of his deity, and hence of his ability to meet the manifold needs of men.

6. We do not limit God to the five senses in his efforts to reach, comfort and strengthen his children. This would cut the nerve of prayer? Who pretends to know by what means God will fulfill His promise to hear and answer prayer. Which one of the five senses of the prophets and apostles received divine revelation from God, or inspiration? When Bro. C. prays in the midst of trouble and sorrow, and a great peace steals into his heart—a peace which "passeth understanding"—through which one of his five senses does this peace come into the soul? Ah! how much larger are our needs, often, than our theories of divine operation.

7. Bro. C. considers our remark, that the movements of the divine Spirit are not limited to the church and to methods that we call Christian, as an "extraordinary statement." Does God have nothing to do with the heathen world? Is He not also working through the family relationships, through the state and by His providence to make this world better and to lead men to forsake their evil ways, and to live truer lives? Do let us cease to limit the Almighty and thank Him rather that by so many voices He is calling the race onward and upward to a higher destiny.

Bro. C.'s exegesis of Paul's remark about the self-emptying of Christ is an entirely new doctrine of the kenosis, and can hardly stand the test of examination. It was not God exhausting Himself in Christ, but Christ disrobing himself of divine glory to become man and the Savior of men. EDITOR.]

Helps for Preachers.



I receive many letters of inquiry respecting a course of study for preachers who have not the time nor the means to attend school. Others, too, who have graduated in the classical, but have done but little work in any course preparatory to the work of the ministry, feel the need of help for their calling as a minister of the gospel. Many have committed the mistake of supposing that if they have passed a creditable examination in the sciences and classics, therefore they have made about all the preparation needed for the ministry. The same course would prepare them just as well for medicine or law. After they begin the work of a minister they begin to realize their need of Bible study and their need of helps.

To the brother who has not had the advantage of college I would say, first of all, you need to be very familiar with your Bible. If you study it without references or concordace, all the better. Too many study simply for sermons, and never have more than a concordance-acquaintance with God's Book. Study its history, its chronology, its geography, its prophecy, its law, its practice, its promise. Study the English Bible; the Revision by all means. Become familiar with it, commit it to memory—I wouid say "to heart." Read and study it as you would any other book, expecting to find its meaning by an analysis and synthesis of its own words, clauses, sentences, paragraphs, sections, chapters, books. As for commentaries, they are good on easy questions. As a whole, "the Bible Commentary" on Old and New Testament is about the best. For practical value in the study of the New Testament, I I know of nothing better than Barnes' eleven volumes. As for the works written by our own people, I very heartily commend McGarvey on Matthew, Mark and Acts; Lamar on Luke; Johnson on John; Lard on Romans; Milligan on Hebrews. But there is nothing so profitable as a careful study of the Book itself. A thorough study of Hermeneutics—the principles of Exegesis—will greatly assist. To know the methods and rules of interpretation will assist more than a knowledge of many commentaries.

You say you want to know something of the Greek New Testament, and that you have not the time to go to school, and have no teacher. Well, you might get a Greek reader, a kind of first book in Greek. This will lead up to a grammar and a lexicon and enable you to do something in translation. As a lexicon, Liddell and Scott is the best. But a very convenient small work is the Noble and Hind Greek and English Dictionary, 4 Cooper Institute, New York. It is much cheaper than the other and contains all the words and they are sufficiently defined. This is based on the Liddell and Scott, but does not give the classical occurrences of the words as does the larger work. It is much cheaper, as it costs but two dollars, with the second part in it, which is English into Greek. This is a great help to students. I have tried it and found it a favorite with the best scholars and teachers. It is coming to be a test book in many schools.

If you delight in sermon books, I recommend that you read them for their thought and literature. For, let me say, the written sermon is the highest order of literature in the country. But, above almost everything else avoid preaching other men's sermons. Use them as helps to thought, and diction too, for all that, but in the sermon be yourself. David can do better with his sling than with the armor of the king. To use a figure, if you must borrow a coat, do not get one too large nor too snug, you might get it on and not be able to get it off.

Read works of the best English, of the best thought and of most moral and spiritual worth. Sensational books or magazines are for the most part a waste of time; they may make you glib in fashionable gossip, but they will empty your head and heart of the things which the people have a right to expect of you. Enough for the present. D. R. DUNGAN.

Only the tortures of the mediæval rack are comparable to the agonies which many women suffer through the peculiar weaknesses and diseases of their delicate, feminine structure. Nothing less than unbearable torment would induce sensitive-minded women to submit to the intolerable methods of the average doctor in dealing with diseases of this nature.

That there is "a better way" than these detestable "examinations" and "local applications" is a truth which some women have yet to learn, although thousands are already rejoicing in the knowledge. They have found in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription the one unfailing remedy which heals feminine weaknesses at their very source. This marvelous "Prescription" restores absolute health to the internal organism; stops weakening drains and ulcerated conditions, gives elastic strength to the supporting ligaments, vitality to the nerve centers, and complete womanly vigor to the entire constitution.

It is the perfect fortifier and regulator of women at every critical period in their development; from the time when they merge into womanhood until the "change of life." It is the one medicine which makes motherhood safe and almost free from pain.

A lady living at 7 Park Avenue, Chicago, Ills., Mrs. Emily Howe, writes: "I, myself, suffered a long time from female weakness and seemed to be going into a decline. Took several bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' and it saved me from a great deal of suffering. I now enjoy perfect health and will ever praise the wonderful efficacy of your medicine."

The best popular medical book in the world is Dr. R. V. Pierce's 1000 page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser. It will be sent free, paper-bound, for 21 one-cent stamps, to pay the cost of mailing only. Address the Doctor at Buffalo, N.Y., or send 31 stamps for cloth-bound copy.

Japan Letter.

In looking over one of the Tokyo papers this morning two facts of great importance struck me. The first was

A MOVE IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

In 1871 the Educational Department passed some regulations with the intention of regulating the freedom of speech among school-teachers. They were not allowed to indulge in public discussions of anything which had even a semblance of political connection. They were also denied the right of having anything to do with religion, for fear in so doing they would infringe the liberties of the students. The new Minister of Education, Mr. Ozaki, upon assuming the duties of his office deliberately scratched these musty laws from the statute-books of the Educational Department. In doing so he has taken a long step towards the longed-for liberty of speech. Not only so, but he has shown that by denying the students and teachers the right to partake of the religious spirit of the times they have broken the law of religious freedom, which has so recommended Japan to the world. The old must give way to the new. To still cling to a suit of clothes, full of holes and dirty with age, simply because they have "become a part of us," so to speak, is a thing we would not think of doing. Yet we are apt to cling to old customs and forms simply because we have been used to them for so long a time. Japan is putting off the old and putting on the new. In the language of Scripture, she is going forth. "When that which is perfect is come that which is in part shall be done away."

CHRISTIANITY PRAISED.

The following note will explain itself: "According to the returns up to June last there are fourteen women's magazines published in Japan. Of these four are in the interest of Buddhism and the rest in that of Christianity. This fact alone is significant, and shows how actively the Christian propaganda is pushing the work of evangelization, in strong contrast to the Buddhist priests. The fact, also, that Buddhist ladies are relatively poorer in mental culture than their Christian sisters must also be taken into account."—Japan Times.

The ignorance of most of the Japanese women is astounding. They do not have any idea of literature, and know nothing of the great outside world. They thrive mostly on scandal and low chattering. It is a high tribute, coming as it does from a paper decidedly anti-Christian, to make such a statement as the above. The unseen leaven of Christianity is beginning to affect the whole of Japanese society. Even those in high places are beginning to recognize in Christianity a power not to be overlooked. "The kingdom of heaven cometh not by observation."

OUR WORK HOPEFUL.

Good reports are coming in continually from the workers in the interior. Fukushima reports two immersions. Sappora reports five. One young man has decided for Christ in Tokyo. What we need now is more men to go into the evangelistic work and urge the people "to come in." The name of Christ is not unknown. The people are familiar with many Christian truths. They only need to be urged. It seems to me, as I have more to do with this direct work of preaching the gospel, that the time is not far distant when we will not have to wait and count our converts by ones and twos, but when we may count them by the hundreds. Faith in God and the anointing of his Spirit will bring us the victory. "No man can come unto Christ unless it be given unto him of the Father." H. H. GUY.

Iowa Letter.

God is continually putting in stitches—binding the nations together. In this instance it is Iowa and Germany. Under date of August 8th an Iowa writer for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST penciled me these lines: "I am just on the eve of starting to New York City to put my thirteen-year-old boy on the Hamburg steamer, by which he is to go to his uncle at Berlin to make his future home. His uncle is court dentist, and will raise Charlie and make a dentist of him." In the present war the German Government has not endeared itself to the American people. Yet the two lands are knit together by untold ties of great strength. My own mother was born on the Rhine.

It is a good thing for us to see ourselves as others see us. A level-headed, pious-hearted man, who lately left the people among whom he was raised and joined his fortunes with the Iowa Disciples of Christ, thus writes to a friend who does not know us so well. It was not written for publication, and is here inserted without names and without the consent of the writer or the party addressed: "As to the type of evangelism we find among the Disciples, it strikes you as it did me, and you take the same view of the case. The lack of religious fervor, rather feeling or emotion, seemed to me very marked and almost painful, and in many cases I feel it so yet. But I have studied the case so much and discovered so many compensating equivalents that I feel much more reconciled. I find a truer knowledge and interpretation of the Word of God, for one thing. This goes a good way. I find a staying power in the membership which is very remarkable for another—a zeal to save and a fellowship among my brethren that pleases me much. There is less trust in prayers and less spiritual fervor than there should be, no doubt. As to the type of moral life, I am persuaded that it is equal to other churches of the best types. Our evangelists are fishers of men, and do leave, as a rule, very much for the pastor to finish up. The difference, however, is mainly this, a really better system of distributed labor. The evangelist dwells mainly on first principles and in setting forth the distinctive position of the reform movement. He dwells but very briefly on second principles or the daily life duties of the Christian—such matters as moral conduct, prayer, seeking spiritual gifts, etc. This is left to the pastor. A wise pastor after every series of meetings will take up these matters in sermons and at prayer-meetings, and complete the work."

A. J. Garrison, of Iowa City, recently picked up this precious bit of Baptist wisdom. On the cars a Methodist preacher pressed upon his Baptist brother—a preacher—this question: "Why, when so many of your own brethren are opposed, do you Baptists hold on to close communion?" You cannot guess his answer. Hear it: "It is about the only thing left to distinguish us from other churches, and we have to hold on to it!"

This reminds me of a few words recently spoken to me by Russell H. Conwell, the famous Philadelphia pastor and lecturer. I met him just before his lecture in a live Iowa town. "I do not understand these Western Baptists," said he; "I fear it would be hard for me to fellowship them." I asked him why. "This close communion business. That's not Baptist doctrine. We don't practice it in the East. Roger Williams' old church don't practice it. These men out West are hardly orthodox."

We have been compelled to change the date of our state convention on account of the great carnival at Des Moines. The new date is September 26th to 30th. Let all take note and be present. Do not forget your railroad certificates if you want to return at one-third fare. One of the items of interest is the election of a new secretary to succeed the writer of these notes. A splendid program is prepared. Write D. A. Wickizer, so that entertainment will be provided for you. Address him in East Des Moines, Ia. W. E. M. Hackleman will have charge of the music. Dr. Butchart, assisted by H. O. Breeden, will open the night sessions, on Monday night, September 26th, with a fine display of stereopticon views. Frank G. Tyrrell, of St. Louis, Mo., will close with an Endeavor address on Friday night. Let us make it a great convention. The year's work will surpass that of last year in two or three important lines. Come one, come all. A. M. HAGGARD.

History of Hiram College.

PART I.—THE ECLECTIC INSTITUTE.

The Western Reserve Electic Institute (now Hiram College) has almost completed its semi-centennial. It was founded in 1850, or properly speaking its first session was held in the fall of that year, although the initial steps toward its founding had been taken more than a year earlier. The religious body known as the Disciples of Christ was rapidly growing throughout Ohio and an urgent need was quite generally felt for a school of academic grade that should be under the influence and control of this people. The school came very nearly being placed at North Bloomfield, Trumbull County, O., but was finally located at Hiram. The reasons for this were partly the healthful and accessible location and partly because Hiram had a very flourishing church. The aims of the new school were clearly defined and seem to have been to provide a sound scientific and literary education; to temper and sweeten such education with moral and scriptural knowledge, and to educate young men for the ministry. Many schools have arisen among the Disciples since the old Eclectic, but it will be a long time before the large body of ministers in whose memory it figures will have passed away.

Of course, the religious aspects of the school were exactly what might be expected from the nature of the Current Reformation. The Disciples believed that the Bible had been in a degree obscured by theological speculations and ecclesiastical systems. They desired that a large place should be given to the study of the Bible, and hence the charter of the Eclectic Institute declared the purpose of the institution to be: "The instruction of youth of both sexes in the various branches of literature and science, especially of moral science as based in the facts and precepts of the Holy Scriptures."

Rev. A. S. Hayden was the first president of the new seminary. Railroads were few in those days and Hiram hill had to be reached from various directions by stage-coach. Many students came to Ravenna, thence to Garretsville and the old tavern at Hewitt's Corner, from whence a two miles walk or ride brought them to the seat of learning. The school rose at once to a high degree of popularity. A commodious brick building of two stories, which at that period was considered a large and model structure, had been built in a cornfield on the very summit of the hill. The beautiful campus into which this field has been transformed bears little resemblance now to the primitive surroundings of that early period.

Eighty-four students were present at the opening of the school. This number soon arose to two or there hundred per term. Under President Hayden's administration the work went steadily on and the Eclectic more than fulfilled the expectation of its patrons. The range of this patronage was wide. Ohio furnished the largest number of students, but there were some from Canada, New York and Pennsylvania, while no small number came from parts of the South and the West. These students differed widely in age, ability, culture and wants. Some received grammar-school instruction; others high-school instruction; while others pushed on far into the regular college course. Classes in the higher branches were organized and taught as they were called for. No degrees were conferred and no students were graduated. A course of study was published in the catalogue after the first year or two, but it was a list of studies taught as they were called for rather than a regular curriculum. Students were encouraged to push on their education into schools of higher grade and many of the old Eclectic finished regular college courses in the East. Among these were James A. Garfield, William Hayden, Warren Hayden, J. H. Wilbur and others. Williams College, in Massachussets, seemed to be a favorite finishing-place for students of the institution. The war found the Eclectic in a flourishing condition, but like all the colleges of the country, the student ranks were rapidly depleted when the call came to take up arms. Many of the boys followed President Garfield into the army, some never to return to resume their work on the old hill.

Among the early teachers of the Eclectic there were (aside from the revered president A. S. Hayden) Norman Dunshee, Thomas Munnell, James A. Garfield, Almeda Booth, J. H. Rhodes, T. E. Sutlief, Cortentia Munson, Harvey Everest and others who figured more extensively in the college era. These men and women, teaching at a ridiculously low salary, depending for this entirely on the meagre tuition receipts, were a hard-working, self-sacrificing band who made the name of the Eclectic honored and revered wherever it was known. Some are dead and the rest are scattered, but the work they did cannot be measured. For many years the Eclectic held a high position among the schools of Ohio. It did not die when it was rechartered as Hiram College in 1867. Its principal features are still to be discerned in the college preparatory department, while its inspiring spirit continues to be the life of the institution. P.

The Dipper or the Dropper?

There are cough medicines that are taken as freely as a drink of water from a dipper. They are cheap medicines. Quantity does not make up for quality. It's the quality that cures. There's one medicine that's dropped, not dipped—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. There's more power in drops of this remedy than in dippersful of cheap cough syrups and elixirs. It cures Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Colds, Coughs, and affections of the Throat and Lungs.

Newspapers in Congressional Library.

The value of the newspaper as a means of public education and enlightenment is being appreciated more and more as time rolls on. The period is not remote when the public speaker was the medium of enlightenment on all public questions. Then the orator was regarded as a superior being, deserving almost the adoration of the common people. Times have changed. Now the newspaper is the power behind the throne. It molds and controls popular sentiment. The public speaker finds the masses quite as thoroughly informed upon current topics as he himself is. He may inspire and create some form of enthusiastic action, but in a majority of cases the people have made up their minds on matters of public import, for they have gleaned the facts from the press.

One valuable feature in the Congressional Library is the preservation, in bound form, of the leading newspapers of the country. The advantages are numerous.

1. Newspapers are the best index possible to the condition of the public sentiment at the time of their publication. One of the most interesting books the writer ever read touching revolutionary history is a large volume made up of clippings from the Tory papers of that period. It reflects the true sentiment of the time.

2. They afford the real material out of which history is made. While it is sometimes true of these publications, as it was of the conversations of Gratiano—"He speaks an infinite deal of nothing. His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you may seek all the day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the search" —yet they are treasures of incalculable value. Some of our metropolitan journals took special pains and spared no expense to preserve the leading characteristics and events of the present war with Spain, as some of them did in the war of the rebellion in 1861-5, with the view of collecting all in bound form as a complete history of the period.

3. These newspapers, if carefully indexed, afford proper subject-matter for those who have occasion to investigate certain specific questions. This use of them is an important one and should be encouraged on the part of pupils in all grades of schools. It trains an essential element of their educational career—the wise, judicious selection of appropriate material from the great mass presented.

The writer desires to make a suggestion or two, and trusts that Col. John R. Young, the efficient librarian, will take the matter into favorable consideration.

1. Let newspapers throughout the country be requested to send to the library one or two copies of each issue for its special use.

2. Let additional help be employed, if necessary, to select carefully from these papers matter for a series of scrapbooks in science, biography, history, politics, poetry, theology, mathematics, language, etc., etc. The subject-matter needs to be carefully classified and put into separate volumes, according to the most approved methods of forming such scrapbooks.

3. Let all these scrapbooks be properly indexed, so that a person desiring information upon any subject can have, in addition to all that he can secure from encyclopedias and special treatises, what the newspapers of the country have gathered on the same line. For example, during the current war all our newspapers have had from time to time very important articles on the inhabitants, resources, productions, climate, characteristics, etc., of Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, Ladrones, etc. This information was often secured at heavy expense and much labor on the part of correspondents, and is of immense value.

4. The initiation and prosecution of such a plan on the part of the Congressional Library, in addition to its direct benefits to its immediate patrons will be serviceable in stimulating throughout the country the practice of individuals of using in scrapbooks the important material which is found in such great abundance in all publications, daily, weekly, monthly and quarterly. The accomplishment of this desirable result will be the attainment of a most important end. The language of Jesus to his disciples is specially appropriate: "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." Let the Congressional Library take the initiative in this matter.—J. Nebraska Letter.

The affable editor has asked me for occasional Nebraska letters. It was a surprise. Somebody wants to know about Nebraska? The reason at last occurred to me: The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST wants to know where Nebraska is! Now for the answer.

Geographically, Nebraska is in the center of the universe. She shares with Kansas the central position in the United States, and everybody knows—even Spaniards, now—that Uncle Sam's stool is a revolving chair set on the pivot of the universe.

Politically, I cannot tell you where Nebraska is until November 4. She is either Republican, Democratic or Populist—she is certainly not Prohibitionist. I have lived in several states, prohibition and open, and plain facts have convinced me, one hundred to zero, that prohibition is an instrument, not automatic, but adequate, when used by Christian citizens—even in the minority—to drive out the rum fiend. I have personally engaged, as pastor of churches in two prohibition states in arousing my flock to their duty, and in both places saloons, run in public or secret violation of the law, were entirely banished. Why is it not in the range of gospel themes, without even indicating one's party preferences even on real civic issues, to demand in the name of our Master that the Christian shall think and pray first,-and then carry his Master with him to the polls. When Christians do this the power of the Christian vote will be regarded in the caucus as well as that of the saloon and the banks.

Educationally Nebraska is, of course, a new state. Its University and Normal School have been a close study to me. I have the statistics of all American colleges in numbers—the very least element in rating a school, and in annual working funds the greatest item—for prices are nearly the same and money will bring the best professors, the most books for library, and the best apparatus. I have compared these with those of hundreds of othercolleges and am convinced that Nebraska's University ranks as peer of those of Kansas, Missouri and Iowa. Of course we do not claim the means at present of the great institutions of the older states. But look out! Times change.

Religiously our state's location can be stated by one word—where? The answer will be given in the next generation. It will depend on the faithfulness of the Lord's workers of this generation. The standing (numerical) of the various churches is, I presume, in this order: Methodist, Presbyterian, Disciple, Baptist, Congregational.

The membership of our own fellowship is perhaps fifteen thousand. Reckoning, as some statisticians estimate, the total might be made twenty-five thousand. I have certainly given the very lowest.

It is difficult to give the number in the ministry, so slight is the division in the minds of some between local talkers and regular preachers. There are certainly over one hundred in the state who devote all their time to and receive their whole support from preaching the gospel. Less than one hundred and fifty could honestly be counted under any system of reckoning.

Nebraska has about 175 churches meeting regularly.

We have had several losses to our ministry within a year. Bro. A. D. Harmon, followed A. R. Moore, in the pastorate in St. Paul, Minn. Bro. J. M. Vawter left the First Church in Omaha, to become pastor of the church in Liberty, Mo., and now we are losing Bro. Elliott, of many years' faithful service in the state, who leaves the church at Harvard to labor in Iowa. May the Lord bless these brethren, even if they are not in Nebraska!

My next letter will assume that the reader already knows all about Nebraska, and tell of the current work and conditions.

ALBERT BUXTON.

Austria-Hungary (Tyrol).

Tyrol is a prosperous county of Austria-Hungary; it is a mountanous region, containing about 800,000 inhabitants, of which one-half are German-speaking people, about 200,000 speak Italian, and the rest some form of the Slavonic language. Agriculture, forestry, mining, and the production of silk, form the chief pursuits of the thrifty people.

Every householder has his own piece of cultivable land, and clothes himself and his family with stuffs spun and woven at home from the wool and flax produced in the neighborhood.

To form from this material the quaint costumes which are pictured on another page from a photograph taken in the Tyrol by an agent of The Singer Manufacturing Co., the Tyrolese women find the Singer sewing machines most satisfactory.

Christian College.

Christian College opened its forty-eighth collegiate year Wednesday morning with the usual exercises. Mrs. Moore in a few well-chosen words heartily welcomed the young ladies to the college and then gave way to Dr. W. T. Moore who delivered one of his characteristic addresses, bubbling over with good humor and feeling, which acted like a tonic upon the home-sick girls in his hearing. Dr. Moore has the happy faculty of saying the right thing at the right time.

Miss Morse gave a reading, Miss Hunt an instrumental selection, and Mrs. Cora Elgin Reid sang one of her sweetest songs.

In truth Christian College has begun a most prosperous year. More students are enrolled than ever before; several young ladies were turned away on account of lack of room. The teachers are all enthusiastic; the young ladies contented, and everything points to a happy and useful session. There would have been no trouble in securing two hundred young ladies, had the college possessed living space for them.

It is to the interest of the citizens of Columbia, irrespective of church affiliations, and to the Christian brotherhood of this state, that a suitable school, with the prestige of an honorable history be maintained for the education of young ladies; and with this in mind, we believe that the scarcity of room will be corrected before another year. It is surely a good fortune that, in spite of war taxes, and the innocuous desuetude into which prosperity has sought refuge from political assassins, nearly one hundred Missouri girls have signed the muster-roll of old Christian College. Mrs. Moore's administration represents not only culture of mind and deportment, but fine business capacity, and the tact to make every circumstance contribute to the success of the college.

Columbians will learn with pleasure that Mrs. Luella W. St. Clair, ex-president of the college, and Mrs. Moore's immediate predecessor, will reside in the college this year. She will not be actively engaged in work, but her influence and example will be worth much to the young ladies who meet her. She is a well-educated, big-hearted, charming woman—just what every young lady ought to be in time.—Missouri Statesman.

Andrew County Convention.

The annual convention of the Christian Churches, of Andrew County, Missouri, was held at Fillmore, Aug. 24-25. There were present seven preachers and over 100 delegates and visitors. Sermons were preached by I. Bauserman and R. M. Dungan. Reports were received from all the churches of the county. The condition of the work may be understood from the following summary: Number of churches in county 13, of which one is a mission; number of pastors, nine; houses of worship, 12, the aggregate value of which is $24,800; membership, 1071, with an increase during the year of 85. There are 12 Bible-schools, with an enrollment af 737. There are six Y. P. S. C. E. Societies, with a membership of 148. Junior Societies four, with a membership of 103, and one Auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. with a membership of nine. The entire amount contributed from all sources, $4,502, of which $284.80 was for missions.

This was one of the best and most profitable conventions ever held in the county. We hope for a forward movement on the part of all the churches during the present year.

Pastors Should Inroduce the Reading Courses.

Every pastor who has been prayerfully anxious for the Christian growth and education of the young people whom he has seen come into the church, has again and again wished for some printed courses of simple yet comprehensive lessons along just the lines the Bethany C. E. Reading Course follows. The Sunday-school lessons do not cover this field, pulpit instruction cannot take the place of personal research, and the method of the C. E. Course best adapts itself to this need that every pastor feels.

This method commends itself, not only to every Endeavor Society in our brotherhood, but it is a suggestion from which the entire Christian Endeavor world will profit. It is plainly the duty of every pastor among the Disciples of Christ to introduce these courses of study among his young people, of every paper to give ample space for the presentation of their claims. A day of power will dawn when we can say, "Every Christian Endeavorer among the Disciples of Christ is a student.

Notes and News.

J. C. Scott, of Alliance, Nebraska, says that there is room for thousands of our brethren in the Platte Valley, in Scott's Bluffs and Cheyenne County, Neb., where splendid homes can easily be had.

The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times, Sept. 12th, says: "The first anniversary of the dedication of its new church building was celebrated yesterday by the congregation of the East End Christian church, south Highland Avenue and Alder Street. Rev. T. E. Cramblett, the pastor, preached his anniversary sermon at 11 A. M., taking as his text Deuteronomy 8:2. During the past year 120 new members were added to the church roll and only eight were lost by removals and death, leaving a net gain of 112. The entire membership is unanimous in the belief that this has been in every way the best year in the history of the congregation. The present membership of the church is 354. During the year the Sunday-school has doubled in attendance, and every department of the church's work is in excellent condition. The congregation is thoroughly united and the best of feeling prevails throughout the entire membership. At the evening service a platform meeting was held, at which addresses were made by Col. Samuel Harden Church, Dr. Cadwalader Evans, Prof. W. C. Lyne and J. P. Hamilton, officers of the congregation, who discussed in a most interesting manner "The Past, the Present and Future of the Church."

Illinios District Convention.

The convention of the seventh district of Illinois will be held at Fairfield, Oct. 4-6. A good program has been prepared. A number of strong preachers who will address the convention are announced. All churches in the district are requested to send delegates and all delegates are requested to notify N. J. Odell, of Fairchild, one week in advance of their coming. Entertainment free.

Tennessee Christian Missionary Convention

Will meet with the Highland Park Christian church, Chattanooga, Tenn., Oct. 10-13. Free entertainment will be furnished the delegates by this church and friends. The railroads give us a rate of one fare for the round trip. Let our brethren in Tennessee turn out en masse and make this the greatest convention possible. It will cost you no more to come in time for our state work and then you will be better prepared to enjoy the National Convention.

W. M. TAYLOR, Pastor and Gen. Sec.

The Kansas Convention.

The Kansas State Convention will be held at Wellington, Oct. 3-7, and preparations are being made to make it one of the largest and best in its history. A good program has been prepared and a one and one-third railroad rate on the certificate plan secured. O. L. Smith is the pastor of the church and an attractive circular over his signature says that every pastor in Kansas should be present at that convention, and that every congregation in the state should send one or more delegates. Prof. V. E. Ridenour, of Ft. Scott, will be the leader of song. We sincerely hope that the Kansas churches will have an inspiring, grand convention.

A Final Appeal.

TO CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS—Greeting:

An appeal was made at the beginning of this missionary year for five thousand dollars from our Endeavor Societies for Foreign Missions. We have given less than two thousand, and our zeal is lagging, our offerings are waning. We ought to give the amount asked.

The time is short, but if every Endeavorer who reads this will give 25 cents, or have his society to give two dollars, at once, the goal will be reached.

Send offerings to F. M. Rains, box 750, Cincinnati, Ohio. Let us hasten, for we have barely a week. One grand universal effort and the deed is done.

Yours for "C"hristianity "E"xtended,

CLARENCE H. POAGE.

Chattanooga.

It was the writer's good fortune to spend a part of 1892 in Chattanooga, with the church that is to entertain the convention of the Disciples in October. This ministry, though a temporary one, is remembered as among the most enjoyable experiences of his life. With these people one finds, not only Southern hospitality, but what is better, Christian hospitality.

Let no one hesitate for a moment to attend the coming convention out of a fear of a "cold reception." No city in the country of the same size entertains more conventions than does this picturesque, historic and hospitable "gateway city." S. R. HAWKINS.

State Convention Notes.

Next Monday night opens, we trust, the greatest convention in all the history of our people in Missouri. It ought to be, because we are a greater people than ever before. We must have conventions in harmony with the numbers we have or people will be very skeptical in regard to the numbers.

We have 160,000 people in Missouri. If ten per cent. of these would go to the state convention we would scare the Nevada people badly! If only one out of each hundred would go we would have 1,600 and the number would be too great, but if we have that great a number of people we ought to have not less than 1,000 in attendance at Nevada.

Is your preacher going to the state convention? Have you asked him? Suppose you do. He may tell you that he is too poor, and that would be a good time for you to raise the money for him to go and meet with his brethren and get inspiration for another year's work.

We need to impress the people of Southwest Missouri that we are indeed a great people; that the plea we present is winning its way with a rapidity and power that is in harmony with the claims we have made. A great convention down in that section of the state will be of wondrous benefit to us, while a lukewarm, indifferent one will do us incalculable harm. It is the solemn duty of every Disciple of Jesus who can possibly do so to attend that convention and make it a great power for good.

We are not so great in convention as we ought to be. Our religious neighbors are finding out the value of these gatherings and they are working them to a great purpose. The Methodist Conference, the Baptist Associations, are being multiplied and enlarged. There is something about the coming together of great bodies of men and women, inspired with one great purpose, that impresses the observer as nothing else can do; and, besides, the influence on our own hearts and lives is by no means insignificant. No one can come to the convention at Nevada and enjoy its sessions without going home better and stronger therefor.

This is the first time we have had one of our Missouri "laymen" on the program for an address of any great moment, and certainly we could not have had one more distinguished than our brother, Champ Clark, of Bowling Green. As an orator he has no superior and but few equals in our state. It is said that when a Missourian hears his address he feels a foot taller than he was before! We owe it to Champ Clark to give him the greatest audience a Missouri convention ever had. Remember, he speaks Tuesday night.

Bro. Willett delivers his first lecture on Tuesday morning. You don't want to miss that. Certainly none who heard him at Trenton will willingly miss his Nevada lectures. They were easily the most attractive feature of that convention.

The presence of Miss Ada Boyd, for fifteen years a missionary for the C. W. B. M. in India, should call for such a gathering of the sisters of Missouri as never was seen before. Surely, when you think of all that is on this program, the wonder is how such a feast could be obtained, and that any one would stay away. Let everybody come to Nevada. Remember, the one-fare round-trip tickets can only be bought Sept. 26-27.

Yours in His Name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

Forefathers' Day.

Forefathers' Day falls this year on Oct. 23rd. Pastors and presidents of our Christian Endeavor Societies should begin at once to plan for its proper and profitable observance. The day may be made one not only of benefit to our young people and of help to the American Christian Missionary Society, but of great interest and profit to our churches and the communities by which they are surrounded. In not a few of our churches there is need of a clear, strong presentation of our peculiar mission and our special message.

To aid in a wise preparation for the observance of Forefathers' Day I venture to make the following suggestions to our Christian Endeavor Societies, and to all whom it may concern:

1. Have the missionary committee or a special committee begin to arrange at once to secure offerings on that day from all the members, these offerings to be sent to Benj. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O. He is Corresponding Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society.

2. Take for your subject in the C. E. prayer-meeting, Sunday, Oct. 23rd, "Forefathers' Day, Its Lessons and Its Call." The topic list published by the United Society makes this a missionary day, and names "Go or Send" as its subject. This easily gives an opportunity to speak of the work of our forefathers in going forth to proclaim the gospel in its purity.

3. Have at least three five-minute biographical sketches of our prominent pioneers prepared and read in the C. E. meeting by members of the Society. The pastor will cheerfully aid his young people in preparing these sketches. I suggest as suitable subjects the Campbells, Stone, Scott, Rogers and Smith.

4. Have some one give, with the aid of a map, a ten-minute talk on the work of the American Christian Missionary Society. A sketch of this society may be found in our "Handbook of Missions," prepared for the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses by W. J. Lhamon. If further information should be desired, write to Benj. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

5. Ask your pastor to preach that day, October 23rd, on "The Plea our Fathers Made." This sermon should be given at the regular church service, either morning or evening, and the young people should make special effort to secure a large audience.

Should some such plan as the foregoing be followed, I am sure the observance of Forefathers' Day will prove very happy and helpful. Let all our Christian Endeavor Societies take this matter in hand at once with their characteristic enthusiasm, and let all pastors and church officers give them encouragement and cordial support. In every aspect of it, Forefathers' Day merits a prominent place.

Should it not be convenient to observe the day on the date named, October 23rd, please arrange to observe it as soon thereafter as possible. The date is not important, the day is. Let no Christian Endeavor Society among us neglect its observance. J. Z. TYLER,

The people come now from sheer curiosity. Hope they soon may not be able to stay away for a better reason. The Davenport church has just secured Bro. C. C. Davis as pastor. He is a Drake man, and a good one. He has been attending the services at Spring Street with a force of helpers, and is getting acquainted with East Davenport folks and will gain a strong foothold with them soon by it. Those people like to have the "city pastors" come up and see them. Will report developments as they arise, as we have only started. Others wanting me for meetings write me here. —MILO G. CUMMINGS, evangelist.

We go next to Greenford, O., then to Hoopston, Ill., then Buchanan, Mich. Miss Nona McCormick (aged 15), of Indianapolis, Ind., is with us and her power over an adudience with her solos is most wonderful. She exceeds any soloist that I have ever heard. Last year our meetings ran seven months and three days, and added 1,101 to the church. For this we praise Him from whom all blessings flow, and are asking for even greater results this year, and his name move forward.—SCOVILLE AND SCOTT.

Church Extension Collection.

In analyzing the above receipts, it will be noticed that for the same time last year the churches sent $262.78, which is $4.50 more than for the same time this year. However, last year thirty-six churches contributed the $262.78 while fifty-five churches contributed $4.50 less than that amount this year. We gained nineteen contributing churches, but lost in amounts. The individual receipts up to September 10th, this year, shows a gain of $869 over last year.

One very encouraging thing is that churches are reaching their apportionments, with but very few exceptions.

2. Churches reaching the largest amounts have written that they are holding their collections in order to increase them.

3. Churches that have been asked for the largest amounts are working hard to reach those amounts.

4. We start into the month of September over $500 ahead of last year.

5. The corresponding secretary has already reached the $15,000 he agreed to raise this year and will probably reach $17,000.

Collections should be completed on the fourth Sunday and remittances made the following Monday, as the books close on Friday, Sept. 30th, at twelve o'clock.

"Pray for the Conventions."

This word is from F. D. Power. It is a most appropriate message. The conventions will be held in Chattanooga, Tennessee, October 13-21. Of course, if it is at all possible you will be there; you cannot afford to miss this great annual convocation of Disciples of Christ. Begin at once, if necessary, to prepare to attend the forty-ninth annual meeting of the Disciples of Christ in the United States. Speak to your friends about the approaching meeting. Endeavor to excite an interest in the conventions on the part of those who are now indifferent. Why say "conventions?" Why not say "convention?" For this reason: The annual meeting of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and the American Christian Missionary Society will be held at the time and place above mentioned. The Board of Church Extension, the Board of Ministerial Relief and the Board of Education will present reports. There is reason to believe that the reports of our societies and boards will exceed in interest any reports that have been made in the past. You want to attend and hear, in person and for yourself, these reports. An exhibit will also be made of our work with the young people.

The conventions are held in the interest of the kingdom of righteousness—a kingdom of joy and peace. The work is God's. Let us look to him for wisdom, guidance and blessing. "Pray for the conventions."

"Pray for the conventions" in the midweek prayer and conference meeting. Make the approaching conventions a subject of special prayer. Do this, not once nor twice; do not fear that you will "pray for the conventions" too much. Speak to our Father about this great assembly. In the home, at the family altar, "pray for the conventions." Let us in our private devotions remember this general assembly of the Disciples of Christ in the United States.

F. D. Power is president of the American Christian Missionary Society. It is peculiarly appropriate that he should issue this call. He is himself a man of prayer. He knows what it is to bear great burdens. He is not ignorant, in his personal experience, of the source of strength. In this case he has a sense of grave responsibility. Human wisdom is not sufficient. For the task to which we have been called human power is inadequate. Hence the message: "Pray for the conventions." Wisdom from on high is needed. We must have the strength which God alone can give.

The work in which we are engaged is great—very great—greater, more important far than the average man among us realizes. The longer I live and the more I know of this movement the more wonderful seems its magnitude and importance.

This is enough. Whether you go or whether you stay, do not fail to heed Bro. Power's earnest call to "pray for the conventions."

B. B. TYLER.

Encouraging Words for Church Extension.

"We raised our apportionment. May God speed the far-reaching work of Church Extension. I hope it may be so strong some day that no congregation need go without a comfortable and beautiful house of worship. Such a work is Christianity in action."—P. J. DICKERSON, Canon City, Col.

The Old Bedford Church (Blandinsville), where A. R. Adams ministers raised their apportionment for Church Extension.

"We raised our apportionment, $10, and a little more. If all do as well as we have done, we will reach the $250,000 by 1900."—J. N. SMITH, Seattle, Wash.

"Our offering for Church Extension was $41.80, which is $11.80 more than our apportionment. We hoped to make it $50."—SUMNER T. MARTIN, Mason City, Ia.

"It was rainy on the first Sunday, but we expect to raise our apportionment, $100, the following Sunday."—O. W. LAWRENCE, Maryville, Mo.

"We raised our apportionment, $20, for Church Extension."—J. T. OGLE, Carrollton, Mo.

"I agree to take several public collections for Church Extension Fund."—KILBY FERGUSON, Richmond, Ala.

"The church at Reeve, Ia., just doubled their apportionment and next Lord's day we expect to do better at Robertson."—W. F. MCCORMICK, Iowa Falls, Ia.

This good work should continue until the $20,000 apportioned among the churches is raised. G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.
Kansas City, Mo.

Do It the First Sunday in October.

Every preacher among us, if he has not already done so, is earnestly requested to call the attention of all his people, and especially all his young people, to the importance of taking up the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses at once. These courses enable the people to have systematic instruction concerning the entire Bible, concerning missions and concerning our plea for a return to the old paths. It is suggested that the matter be presented in all our churches on Sunday, the 2nd of October. In churches where it may be impossible to present the matter on this day, let it be presented as soon thereafter as possible. Full information may be had gratis by sending a postal card to me.

To Win the World.

GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

How shall we win the world to Christ?
Have our words availed, have our gifts sufficed?
Have our prayers and pleadings been enough?
O, the way is long and the road is rough!
We may sit at the summit of Wisdom's peak
And call to the climbers who toil and seek
For the summit of Truth. We may rise and throw
A rope of gold to the souls below,
But unless we give them our strong right hand,
Unless we are willing ourselves to stand
On the perilous steep which their feet have trod,
We never can win him to Christ—to God.
When the rich no longer oppress the poor,
When the mighty and fortunate cease to lure
The feeble and fallen—when great and good
Are bound in a cable of brotherhood,
When the haughty grow humble, the bitter sweet,
The world will turn upon hastening feet,
Willing and glad to be led again
By the way of truth which has made us men!

"WHERE THERE'S DRINK, THERE'S DANGER."

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

Woe unto him that giveth his nieghbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him and makest him drunken.—Hab. 2:15.

Ralph Lawrence awoke the morning after commencement with a most delicious consciousness of having come off with flying colors the day before. He had received the degree for which he had worked all these happy college years. He felt himself to be fully equipped for his chosen profession. Life lay all before him.

"But I am in no hurry to get down to work," he had said to his friends. "I must see a little of this big world before settling down to business. Plenty of time for work after I have had a little fun."

He was thinking about it this morning while going over the events of the day.

"Guess I'll run over to C—— for a visit to Tom Layton," he said. "I'll send a line to the folks at home, saying they may look for me when they see me coming. Of course they will be disappointed, but they oughtn't expect a fellow to never have any fun."

Then he thought of another—one who had faithfully waited for his return and was impatient that, in imagination, he could see two blue eyes looking at him almost reproachfully because of his delayed home-coming.

"Effie must wait too," he said. "I must see something of life first of all, and Tom is just the fellow to liven me up after all these years of 'digging.' "

Two years later, therefore, he was being initiated into what his friend, Tom Layton, called "having a good time."

They had stopped on ——— Avenue and Ralph was saying:

"Well, perhaps I wouldn't object to taking a little wine, but to be seen going into a ———"

"O, pshaw!" broke in Tom. "Don't let a little thing like that worry you. However, until you are a little more accustomed to it, we need not go into a regular drinking-place, but will stop at this drugstore. And you certainly must have something stronger than wine."

"I didn't know that drugstores were licensed to sell liquor," said Ralph.

"Bless the dear innocent!" cried Tom, mockingly. "Of course they are not licensed, but that is no hindrance if they want to sell it. They can find plenty of patrons, for many like you object to being seen to go into a regular drinking-place, yet are themselves regular drinkers. Unscruplous druggists, therefore, reap a rich harvest. But what care we, just so we get what we want and have a good time."

The drugstore proprietor, whose smiling demeanor hid a soul as black as the windows through which it looked, so many had he helped on to perdition, chanced to be in,and recognizing Tom, came forward himself to wait upon them. They were invited into a room in the rear. Tom gave the order, and presently a glass was placed before each.

Ralph hesitated, but only for a moment. Conscience was trampled upon. He was in for a good time.

"Wait here a moment, Ralph," said Tom. "I saw a friend as we came in that I want to speak to."

Ralph was glad to sit down. The "something stronger than wine" had gone to his head, and somehow he could not help wondering what Effie and the folks at home would think if they knew just what a "good time" he was having.

A young man of shabby appearance, whom he had noticed when he first came in, rose from his chair and approached him:

"You are from the country, I take it," he said.

"Yes," Ralph answered; "that is, I was raised in the country."

"And have come to the city to see something of life before settling down."

"How do you know?" Ralph saw that no offense was meant and was, therefore, not offended.

"I guessed it from the first," replied the shabby young man. "And I want to tell you that Tom Layton is not the right sort of company. He is a moderate drinker and his influence is by far more dangerous than that of the drunkard in the gutter. Nobody wants to be a hopeless inebriate, but many young men seek to imitate the moderate drinker, and few—very few—are strong enough to remain one. Five years ago I was just where you are now. I started out to have a good time. Tom Layton took me under his wing and was my friend as long as my money lasted. Friend! What is a friend? Is it he who rides with us when we have a carriage and turns another way when we walk? Is it he who helps us spend our money while it lasts and when it is gone has none to lend us? After I got down in the world, Tom Layton had no more use for me. Like you, I did not start out with the intention of becoming a common drunkard, yet I have done so. The future spread out before me with all the brightness that it does to you at the present, yet now I see nothing ahead of me save misery and degradation, each year of a deeper dye. I know that the gutter is not far distant. And of the world that is to come, I dare not stay sober long enough to think. And when I see others in a fair way to become what I am, when I see them trampling upon conscience and turning away from the better impulses of their nature, I long to warn them before they reach a point where the nobler impulses are deadened and the still, small voice of conscience is not heard. When I saw you come into this vile den of outside seeming respectability and witnessed what followed, I felt that I must speak a word of warning; and particularly would I warn you against Tom Layton. None but his victims ever come to know him fully. He belongs to a fast set who calls themselves society. He is a man of the world and a moderate drinker. One such man alone, while damning his own soul can send more other men to perdition than ten preachers can reclaim."

At that moment Tom returned. He frowned as he saw the shabby young man moving away, but said cheerily:

"Hurry up, Ralph! we yet have time to drop in at Miss A.'s hop!"

"But I know nothing about dancing," replied Ralph, as he followed Tom out. The words of the shabby young man were with him, and he was wondering whether he hadn't better tell Tom plainly, that he——

His half resolve had gone no further when Tom spoke again:

"But I want you to meet some of my acquaintances, old fellow. You don't need to know how to dance. I only want to have the pleasure of introducing you to my friends."

Ralph made no further protest. Surely, such a jolly, happy fellow as Tom could not be bad. The shabby young man must be mistaken.

The hop was at one of the most fashionable homes in the city. Tom was evidently a favorite and his friend was most cordially received. Indeed, he was quite flattered by the attentions showered upon him. And when dark-eyed Beauty smilingly volunteered to teach him to waltz, he unhesitatingly placed his arms about her and after a few initiatory steps Ralph, naturally graceful and full of music, was whirling about as gaily as the others.

The music, the surroundings, the conditions withal, were most seductive. Ralph was under a spell—intoxicated with the feelings and sensations awakened within him, and when Beauty gracefully offered him, with her own hands, "wine in the cup," he was powerless to refuse. Then on the way home in the "wee sma' hours," when Tom suggested that they stop at a public drinking house, he made no further objection. Already his better impulses were being numbed.

Hand in hand with drink, there are other vices which, to record, would disgrace the pen. Suffice it to say, that Ralph became thoroughly acquainted wlth them all in his endeavor to have a good time. Friends gathered around him. He laughed and the world laughed with him.

The days lengthened into weeks and the weeks into months, and still Ralph was not ready to go home. The pleadings of parents had no longer any influence, though he knew he was breaking their hearts and filling their lives with sorrow. As to Effie, the vows he had made in all sincerity when life was bright with high resolves, had long since been forgotten.

He was on the downward path, and the farther he traveled it the more smoothly it seemed worn. Daily it became more slippery with sin, and he sped on the more rapidly to destruction.

Two sad messages came, to him not many months apart, but he made no effort to tear himself away from his associates, that he might be present when the earthly mantle of his parents was laid in the churchyard. Their death had little power to affect him, so despoiled had his heart become of all its natural tenderness and sympathy.

Soon, very soon, his inheritance was gone—swallowed up in riotous living—and friends (?) one by one forsook him.

"You are such a fool," Tom Layton said. "Now I can drink or not drink, just as I like." And he closed his door in the face of the friend whose hospitality he had accepted, whose luxuries he had shared while his money lasted.

Five years later there was a funeral from the workhouse. The remains of a poor inebriate lay hidden in the wooden box. A blotted, ragged wreck, babbling and red-eyed, stood near, and as he looked, a ray of intelligence came to the mind and he realized that the body of Ralph Lawrence was soon to be consigned to a dishonored grave in the potter's field. He walked up to the wagon and touched the wooden box.

"Good-bye, Ralph," he said. "I, even I, will soon be with you. I, the moderate drinker. How sure I felt of myself while so perilously near the edge. 'At last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder.'"

Reason was again gone, and the once brilliant Tom Layton, so sure of his own strength, was led away by an attendant, while the body of Ralph Lawrence, who a few years before started out to "have a good time" was carted away to the potter's field.

"The wages of sin is death."

The Good as the Enemy of the Best.

GEO. T. SMITH.

Man seeks good. God promises it to those who ask him. Science, experience and the Bible agree that the asking must be in the right spirit; the seeking, according to law; the knocking, at the door. It is vain to pray for health so long as the laws of health are ignored, to seek knowledge listlessly, or to knock on the gates of opportunity with the little finger.

Our asking is too limited. The good is the enemy of the best. It is right to be covetous, to be ambitious, to secure the best. We are too easily content. We note instances where the good drives out the best. We begin low.

Invited to walk out a mile, after the morning sermon, we found an idoitic boy of sixteen. Dinner being delayed, he grew troublesome. He yelled. He rushed to the table, filled his plate and crammed. Then he rolled off to sleep. Eating is good. But the quieter, social repast is best.

Play is good, especially for a boy. But the truant? His good is enemy of the best.

Two workmen in the navy yard at Philadelphia had leisure evenings for six months. One taught a dog to stand on its hind legs and even to dance. That was good. It was recreation. The other invented a machine, during the same time, for dressing the knees of ships. That was creation. Do you read a newspaper? Good. All of it? Sitting down? Skimping it is better. Reading books is best.

Do you read fiction? Sensible. Always, omitting the philosophical and historical novelists? The best is crowded out.

There are two systems of astronomy. The Ptolemaic made earth the center, hindered progress, chained Galilee, burned Bruno, obstructed Columbus' way. The Copernican swept away the horizon, swung the earth around the sun, brought the stars near and buried time in endless ages. Which is your system? Do you make this little body of yours the center of your thoughts and works? Or do you make the Sun of Righteousness the magnet which holds you steady in the orbit of duty, while the gems of the sky are the beaconlights of your pathway to the throne of God? If Ptolemaic, you have good. But you sail around in a tub, you refuse the offer of the soul's Columbus who would steer your bark across the stormy Atlantic of life to a land of fadeless day. Your good is commonplace. The cream of life you never taste. You are sprouting no wings.

Eating we adjudged good. But if to the thoughtful and pleasant company at the table the apostle comes with his benediction, saying that God has created these things for our enjoyment, that they are sanctified by his word and prayer, you may worship God in eating. You can make a meal a thankful sacrament.

What moment of sweeter bliss than the first kiss of avowed love? Happy the man for whom its fragrance never dies. But how inexpressibly sweeter is its pure joy if, then and afterward, the thought comes to the man and to the woman, "My love is a Christian; this union is forever."

"But we are already Christians; we can be no more." What grade? There is no more difference between the primary tot and the college athlete than between those called Christians. The Spanish are Christians. "Spain" is in the New Testament. But they are yet in the kindergarten. Their bullfights are the feeble copies of the gladiatorial show of the Coliseum, and Weyler, the "butcher," is in true apostolic succession from Nero.

"Ye who are spiritual restore such a one." Are we of this grade? Are we satisfied with what we are? Then the good is the enemy of the best.

Here we reach the Scripture which gave rise to these thoughts. It is the temptation of Christ. How did he win the battle which I lose? By choosing the best, not the easiest. He did not daly, nor rely on his own strength nor wisdom. He placed God between him and every temptation. He overcame and assures me that I may.

Oh, Thou who art so covetous of human love that Thou didst purchase us by the costly sacrifice of Thy heart's blood, help Thy brothers who yet abide in the clay. Forbid that we should be content with less than Thy best gifts. Thy fullness lead us to seek till Thou shalt possess us completely and we shall be altogether the children of light!

At School and at Home.

My teacher doesn't think I read
So very special well.
She's always saying, "What was that Last word?" and makes me spell
And then pronounce it after her,
As slow as slow can be.
"You'd better take a little care"—
That's what she says to me—
"Or else I'm really 'fraid you'll find,
Some one of these bright days,
You're 'way behind the Primer class."
That's what my teacher says.

But when I'm at my grandpa's house,
He hands me out a book,
And lets me choose a place to read;
And then he'll sit and look
At me, and listen, just as pleased!
I know it from his face.
And when I read a great, long word,
He'll say, "Why, little Grace,
You'll have to teach our deestrict school,
Some one o' these bright days!
Mother, you come and hear this child."
That's what's my grandpa says.

He Stopped the Train.

Train No. 20 on the Indianapolis & Vincennes Railroad in charge of Conductor F. W. Russe, of Indianapolis, was tearing along toward Indianapolis the other evening fifty miles an hour. The train was loaded with passengers, and was behind time. East of Edwardsport Engineer Dorsey saw on the track far ahead a dog that was jumping about and acting in a peculiar manner. The dog's actions looked suspicious and, as a measure of caution, Dorsey shut off the steam, so as to have his train under control. When the train reached a nearer point the dog stood and barked at it, and then with a yelp, started for the woods.

Then it was that Dorsey saw that there was something red between the rails, and he threw on the emergency brakes and opened the sand-box. The train came to a standstill within ten feet of a pretty flaxen-haired baby in a red frock. The child was about two years old, and had been playing with the dog. The train crew ran forward and Baggageman Franklin picked up the child, which laughed and crowed and patted his face in glee.

About eight hundred yards distant was a farmhouse, and toward it Franklin started with the baby, to meet a man running toward him like an insane person. It was the child's father, who had missed the baby just as the train stopped and supposed that the little one had been killed. How it got so far away from home and into such a dangerous place no one could understand. The passengers were considerably jolted by the sudden stopping of the train, but no one was hurt, and when they learned the cause of it they clustered about Engineer Dorsey and congratulated him on his caution. — Philadelphia Times.

Kipling and His Work.

One of the interviewers of Rudyard Kipling during his visit to South Africa writes of him in the Cape Times: He takes his work hard. He is tremendously in earnest about it; anxious to give of his best; often dissatisfied with his best. He is quite comically dissatisfied with success, quite tragically haunted by the fear that this or that piece of work, felt intensely by himself in writing, and applauded even by high and mighty critics, is in reality cheap and shabby in execution and will be cast in damages before the higher court of posterity. When Rudyard Kipling had written "The Recessional," which two hemispheres felt to be one of the very truest and soundest pieces of work done by any writing man in our day and generation, he was so depressed by its short-comings of his private conception that he threw the rough copy in the wastepaper basket. Thence Mrs. Kipling rescued it. But for Mrs. Kipling we should have had no "Recessional." For his best patriotic poems he has declined to accept any pay.—The Standard.

Don't Worry.

Don't worry, dear; the bleakest years
That clog the forward view,
Each thins to nothing when it nears,
And we may saunter through.
The darkest moment never comes,
It only looms before;
The loss of hope is what benumbs,
Not trouble at the door.

Don't worry, dear; the clouds are black,
But with them comes the rain,
And stifled souls that parch and crack
May thrill with sap again.
The burden bear as best we can,
And there'll be none to bear;
Hard work has never killed a man,
But worry did its share.

The Women of the Bible.

MARY E. WARE.

What a diversity of characters is found in the Bible! Even Shakespeare, with all of the brilliancy of his unrivaled genius, has given us no such a study. In his portrayal of women lies his greatest strength, yet even here he is excelled by the writers of Hebrew literature.

Each woman, through illustration, quotation and association has become a type—Eve, of childish curiosity; Sarah, of personal vanity; Hagar, of a woman fleeing from the consequences of her guilt; Rachel, of beauty and innocence outwitted by a designing father; Ruth, of loyalty to assumed obligations; and Jezebel, of wickedness.

In the time of Jesus of Nazareth, Martha is typical of a woman busying herself about the temporal wants of her guests; Mary, of a woman mindful only of spiritual things.

Poor Martha! How her good reputation has suffered in these days! Especially by those who want to shirk from the small drudgeries of life. They even tell us that Christ condemned her. If he did so, it was only relatively. Is there not rather a ring of compassion in the words, "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things?" Just as though you would beg your tired mother not to do so much for your physical comfort.

He said that Mary had chosen the "good part," because sitting at the feet of the Great Teacher and listening to the words of divine truth is higher and better than busying one's self about the cares of the house. Because this is the better part it is not necessarily a condemnation of Martha's work. For the house must be kept clean, the children must be trained and the comfort of the guests must be attended to.

No, no; Christ does not condemn the doing of these things. If he condemned any one it was the woman who did nothing; the one whose whole existence is passed in idleness, frivolity and vanity; the one who produces nothing and grasps at everything that will contribute to her sensuous pleasure.

In comparison with such women, Martha's part in life is good, Mary's is better, but neither is the best.

The best part is found in the life of such women as Florence Nightingale, Clara Barton and Frances Willard. Such women not only attend to the temporal wants of the race, but give their very life-blood in administering to their spiritual needs. Great and grand as the women of the Bible are, there are none of this type to be found in it. They lived up to the best that was in their age. Nineteen centuries of Christianity has made this larger, nobler womanhood possible.

The principles of the "Sermon on the Mount" still go on, enlarging the hearts and ennobling the minds of women. Each century will see a higher development of womanhood.

If we are no better than Mary or Martha it is because we have not lived up to our opportunities. For Christianity ever holds the progressive ideal before us: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

Heathenism Doomed.

Some of the most interesting pages in history are those which describe the siege of cities. The walls of the beleaguered city are surrounded on all sides by men trying to force an entrance. Some make sudden onsets on the gates. Some plant ladders against the walls and fight hand to hand with the defenders. Everywhere there is noise, and tumult, and capture, and death, the shouts of the fighters and the moans of the dying, yet still the city is not taken. But all the while there is, unknown to the defenders, a body of men digging and mining under the very wall of the city. They are undermining the foundations of the city ramparts—the city is doomed.

I sometimes think that this is the work which our Christian schools and colleges in heathen lands are doing. We are sapping the foundations of heathenism. The city is strong and ancient; its walls are thick and ugly and deep. But it is doomed. In our hands God has put an ax, and we are digging, digging; and in the end, through the darkness we shall reach the light.—Rev. John Lendrum, in the Endeavor World.

Down in Maine the other day I sat on the rocks chatting with an old fisherman who was cleaning "a mess of fish" for dinner. Fish-cleaning in that part of the universe is exclusively within the sphere of masculine activity. No man ever takes fish home without cleaning them and cutting off their heads. He generally performs this duty as soon as he reaches land.

My old friend had been answering my inquiries concerning the affairs of the neighborhood in a quaint, philosophical way, when a summer girl, paddling a birch-bark canoe, passed under our vision.

"Do you like them cockeley boats?" he asked.

"They are very pretty and graceful," I answered.

"Waal, I'm not a church member and I've got the rheumatiz so bad I can't swim, so I jes' natchelly don't like to have nuthin' but a thin piece of birch bark betwixt me and hell."

"Why don't you reform and repent and join the church?" I asked.

He thought a minute before speaking and then answered, "Waal, my wife has been a teasin' me to for ever so long, and I calculate it's about time I was attending to it."—Chicago Record.

A tax-collector one day came to a poor minister in order to assess the value of his property and determine the amount of taxes. The minister asked the man to be seated. Then the latter took out his book and asked: "How much property do you possess?"

"I am a rich man," answered the minister.

The official quickly sharpened his pencil and asked intently: "Well, what do you own?"

The pastor replied: "I am the possessor of a Savior who earned for me life everlasting, and who has prepared a place for me in the Eternal City."

"What else?"

"Healthy and obedient children."

"What else?"

"A merry heart, which enables me to pass through life joyfully."

"What else?"

"That is all," replied the minister.

The official closed his book, took his hat, and said: "You are indeed a rich man, sir, but your property is not subject to taxation."—In Christian Leader.

ROYAL REFORMS IN JUDAH.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The lessons of the fourth quarter of 1898 deal with the Kingdom of Judah, which remained to the house of David after the disruption of the united Kingdom of Israel at the death of Solomon, 937 B. C. The material of these lessons is found in the books of Chronicles, Isaiah and Jeremiah with occasional lessons in Kings, one in Proverbs and one in the Gospel of Luke. The sources from which most of the lessons are taken are the Chronicles, which take their name from the court records, upon which our biblical books of Kings and Chronicles are based. The character of our books of Chronicles differs considerably from that of the Kings, although they treat in general of the same events. One can see the contrast in their character by comparing the two narratives as they run along together. This can be done without other help than the Bible, or more easily still by the use of such a Harmony of Kings and Chronicles as that recently published by Crockett. One notices in studying the two particular narratives that the authors of Chronicles deal almost exclusively with the Southern Kingdom; that they emphasize the priestly element in the national life, mentioning frequently the work of the priests and the Levites and the honor paid to them by the kings, who as a result were blessed in their administration. Sin, in the eyes of the Chronicle writers, consists not so much in moral transgression, which seems to be the standard in the narrative of Kings, but rather in departure from the ecclesiastical program of the nation, which centered in the ritual of the temple. The date of Chronicles, in some measure, accounts for this difference in tone and treatment. The record of Kings was probably compiled during the Exile period, up to which it reaches in its study of national life. The books of Chronicles, however, with their continuation in Ezra and Nehemiah, which were evidently originally part of the same narrative, reaches down into the history following the Exile, and describes the time when the Hebrew nation had passed over into the Jewish church, and the whole type of thought was colored by ecclesiastical and liturgical considerations. This history given in the Kings is written from the standpoint of the prophets, and emphasizes the disasters which fell upon the nation because of the disregard of the law of God, which is the law of righteousness and justice. Chronicles were written from the standpoint of the priests, and emphasize external and ceremonial ideas, and point out the successes of those kings who were most careful to maintain the temple worship in all of its splendor.

The Southern Kingdom had one decided advantage over its Northern neighbor in the matter of religion, and that was the presence of a central sanctuary at Jerusalem where the recognized worship of Jehovah went on in near approach to its original purity and imageless character, as taught by the early prophets like Moses and Samuel. The high places continued, as in former years, to attract large numbers of worshipers, and their type of worship was not deemed derogatory to the character of Jehovah. In the early period of the kingdom it was felt that Jerusalem was the center, and here the worship was represented at its best, but the local shrines were revered. To the capital, however, came in numbers the Levites, who sought the more remunerative service of the sanctuary, and thus left the provincial altars in increasing danger of degeneracy, and the better kings saw the need of gradually centralizing the worship at Jerusalem, and finally suppressing entirely the provincial sanctuaries, which was accomplished by Josiah.

Another striking contrast between the Southern and Northern Kingdoms is seen in the fact that the rise of political prosperity in the North was always accompanied by a corresponding depression of religion, so that the lowest moral levels were reached at the time of the greatest national grandeur, under such kings as Ahab and Jeroboam II. Exactly the opposite was the tendency in the South, where the most successful kings, like Asa, Jehoshaphat, Uzziah, Hezekiah and Josiah were the monarchs under whom the greatest religious reforms were instituted; in other words, religion and politics stood at opposite points in the Northern Kingdom, but co-operated in the Southern Kingdom where church and state were united.

The reign of Asa was one of these periods of success and reform. It was begun with a period of ten years' peace, after the wars between the two kingdoms. The attempt was made to undo the evil of theearlier times by the destruction of foreign altars and the debasing nature of the worship which had crept in from the north and from the neighboring kingdoms. These with the sun images of the Babylonian cult were swept away by the reforming zeal of Asa. The Chronicles even insist that he suppressed the high places, but the authors of Kings acknowledge that these were undisturbed. The kingdom reached a degree of strength under Asa which it had not enjoyed since the break with Israel. The more important towns were fortified by the building of walls which were pierced with gates, defended in the usual manner by bars and towers. A standing army, numbering more than half a million was raised and drilled; it consisted of spearmen from Judah and bowmen from Benjamin, these being the hereditary war methods of those tribes. Against Asa and his kingdom came the reigning king of Egypt, a usurper of Ethiopian blood, who brought an immese army with a large chariot force into the lower provinces of Judah.

Strong in the confidence of his righteousness and depending upon God, Asa went forth to meet him expecting victory, and with a prayer for success upon his lips. The narrative records his complete overthrow of the invading army and the gathering of enormous spoil from the forsaken camp. The remaining years of Asa's long reign were passed in the upbuilding of his kingdom, in which his regard for the worship of God seems to have played an important part. The ministry of a prophet named Oded is mentioned as strengthening Asa in his pious purposes; even the assults of Baasha king of Israel were turned back, although here Asa did not depend so fully upon divine help but secured the assistance of the king of Assyria. On the whole, his reign seems to have been one of ability and success in which the people prospered and the worship of Jehovah was given a prominent place in the nation's life.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

The condition of peace in a nation is the surest ground for growth and prosperity; war is expensive and dangerous; peace is constructive and encourages the highest elements of national life. Strange altars are erected, not alone in lands where heathen gods are worshiped, but sometimes in Christian lands where God is forgotten. The law of God, by which is meant all that has been disclosed of his will through the prophets, apostles and the Master himself, constitutes the basis for all individual and social progress. A nation needs to provide defences, not only of armament, but of character. The consciousness of doing one's work in the sight and fear of God is the source of limitless strength and confidence. The environment of the divine presence and the certainty of divine approval make life rich and fruitful. Prosperity comes just as surely today by obedience to the divine will as in the life of Israel. One need not expect to avoid attacks, but he may always be able to meet them with confidence and courage in the strength of God. What are the attacks which one may expect in these days?

TOPIC FOR OCT. 2.

TRIALS, AND HARD TO BEAR THEM.

(Isa. 41:8-20.)

There are ways in which it is quite evident that trials should not be borne. It goes without saying that they should not be borne with weakness and complaining, for then, in reality, they are not borne at all. Shoulders that sink can bear no load. A reed shaken by the breeze cannot stand against storms of wind and wave.

Nor, on the other hand, should trials be borne with granite-like hardness and stoical resistance. Brutus, hearing of his wife's death and smiting his forehead in a single gesture of stony grief, turning back to his consideration of maps and field campaigns, is no fit example for bearing trials, however wonderful and even awe-inspiring is his self-conrtol. No, no. Grief has its purpose, pain its mission. Rebel as we may against the thought that this specific bereavement or that particular anguish is sent by the hand of God, nevertheless we must all agree that he made this world, evil and all, and that in the end this and all sorrow must have its beneficent purpose. Hearts, therefore, are not meant to be stone. They are made to be soil. They must feel the plowshare and melt beneath the rain.

It is ours, then, to open our hearts to God, to bring him our sorrows, tell him of them and ask his help to bear them. This is the true attitude of the Christian toward trials. It is not a weak complaining nor a stoical indifference. It is a gentle-hearted endurance, not without a cry sometimes to God—for does not a single groan sometimes help us to bear a pain? Does not the telling of our sorrow to a friend often decrease the ache? Did not the psalmist cry out to God from the depths of his sorrow? Did not Jesus pray, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not my will but thine be done?" Christ's attitude in trials is the Christian's true attitude.

Thus it is, then, that with faith we are to meet the trials of this life. The very word trials is indicative that they have a purpose. Is there an evil in the city and the Lord hath not done it? Is there pain in the world and God's law in some wise has not produced it? When avoidable, then, let us avoid it. Where the pain is due to our outraging of God's laws—and a very large part of it may be so; sin is the most painful of all things; the way of the transgressor is hard—let us turn and obey him. But where the sorrow can be traced to no transgression of our own, it is ours to bear it as calmly and with as much faith as we can > "Trials must and will befall,

> But with humble faith to see
> Love inscribed upon them all—
> This ia happiness to me."

With work also we may overcome much of life's pain. When Jesus sat by the well weary and tired, a soul presented itself to him that needed his care. He seems to have forgotten his fatigue, his thirst, his hunger, in the enthusiasm of ministering to that needy soul, and when they bade him eat he said: "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." To do his Father's will, to accomplish his work—this was his meat and drink. And how often shall we, likewise, find in the heat and dust, the weariness and pain of this heavy-laden life, that our ease and refreshment shall be found in the enthusiasm of our work. "No brave man," says Carlyle, "needs any more happiness than just enough to get his work done." Is any trial weighing heavily upon your heart, fellow-Endeavorer? Press forward and do your work. Is any thorn eating and festering in your flesh? "My grace is sufficient for thee," press forward and do your work. Is any great, aching void in your heart? Press forward on the lonely road, try to fill your heart with your work, his work, and he will help you. Work for him, work in whatever you do as unto him; work in the consciousness of his presence; work with the feeling that even the drudgery of this narrow occupation, which seems so monotonous and mean, is assigned by him and is watched and approved, when well done, by him, and the trial will grow triumphant.

Finally, with the promises which he has given we can bear the ills of life. "Fear thou not; for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness," are the words of our Scripture lesson, spoken to discouraged Israel, and they have rung down the years to comfort the Israel of God ever since. And how numerous are the precious promises spoken by our gentle fellow-sufferer, the Master of Galilee, to us directly: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden and I will give you rest." "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Pillowing tired heads upon his breast, clasping feeble hands in his strong grasp, supporting weak forms by his mighty frame of brotherliness, guided in the dark by his seeing eye, have we not sufficient assurance from this our elder brother, our friend that sticketh closer than a brother, that we shall not faint? God is watching over us, guiding us with his eye, and will never leave us nor forsake us. Whatever may be the cloud, his face is behind it.

"My life is cold and dark and dreay;
It rains and the wind is never weary;
My heart still clings to the moldering past,
The hopes of youth fall thick in the blast,
And my life is dark and dreary.

"Be still, sad heart, and cease repining!
Behind the clouds is the sun still shining;
Thy lot is the common lot of all;
Into each life some rain must fall,
Some days must be dark and dreary."

PAINFUL JOINTS AND MUSCLES are the daily experience of rheumatic people. The majority of cases are largely due to an impure state of the blood. The best remedy is Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer, the Swiss-German remedy which was discovered by an old German physician over a hundred years ago, but only recently advertised. It restores purity and life to the blood, strengthens the entire system and builds up the general health. Seldom fails to cure all diseases caused by impoverished or impure blood or from disordered stomach. No drugstore medicine; is sold only by regular Vitalizer agents. BORROUGHS.

Margrette Elizabeth Borroughs, who died at Berkeley, Va., Sept. 5th, was born at Shelbyville, Ind., April 5, 1872, and was 26 years and five months old. She has been in frail health for several years, but her illnesss did not assume a serious phase until last April. Since then her decline has been rapid, and her sufferings have been extreme, especially during the last few days of her life; but she bore her afflictions with patience and fortitude, never complaining, but always cheerful. In early life she gave herself to Christ, and has been a consistent church member, a daily reader of the Bible, a dutiful daughter and a kind sister. She expressed a wish that she might live in order to do all the good possible, but was ready and willing to go if it were the Lord's will to take her. Her career was a religious triumph, and her memory is a bright monument or the sweetest virtues and most enduring accomplishments. "Lizzie," as she was affectionately called in the home circle and church, was the elder daughter of our venerable and beloved Doctor Borroughs, and to him and the stricken family goes out the heart of the church and whole community.

BROWN.

Mary Maranda Brown was born in Morro county, Ohio, May 12, 1840, and died in North English, Iowa, Aug. 20, 2898, aged 58 years, three months and eight days, leaving husband, one daughter and four sons to mourn her loss. She was a member of the Church of Christ 28 years. She patiently bore her intense suffering for weeks. The church here loses one more of its faithful members, but heaven is the richer. Just one year ago to a day her daughter Media preceded her to the promised land.

BUTLER.

L. Madison Butler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Butler, was born in Whiting, Jackson county, Kansas, Nov. 20, 1884; died Aug. 30, 1898; aged 13 years, 9 months and 10 days. She united with the church May 15, 1897. She was buried with Christ in baptism by Rev. A. N. Lindesy, of Canton, Mo. She was a beautiful Christian and ever ready to work for her Master. She was faithful in all things and by her bright, cheerful disposition won the affection of all who knew her. The whole community mourns her death. The funeral services were conducted at the family residence, Sept. 1st at 11 A. M., by Rev. H. C. Ventress, of LaHarpe, Ill.

GROVES.

William Groves passed into the spirit-life August 9th, 1898; aged 42 years. He was an earnest and consecrated disciple of Christ and will be sadly missed in the church. He leaves a wife and son who have a precious memory of him. For 13 years he was captain of the ferry-boat at Hannibal. He had ferried many persons across the Father of Waters; then, as if to rest him, the Heavenly Father ferried his ready spirit across the river of death into the spirit-land. In the absence of the pastor on his vacation, Bro. S. D. Dutcher, his old pastor, conducted the funeral service in an impressive manner.

LINDSAY.

Mrs. Nannie Lindsay (nee Browning), of Sweet Springs, Mo., was in her 29th year at the time of her death. At the age of sixteen she gave her heart and life to the Lord and soon developed those Christian graces that made her so much beloved. July 31, 1893, she was married to Mr. John Lindsay, who survives her. Her early death, to those who regard death as calamitous, was peculiarly sad, because they loved her so tenderly. Were we able to view death from the other side we would not weep, but rejoice because of her new-found joys. While her suffering was great, her patience was able to bear all things, knowing that He in whom she had trusted could and would do all things well.
C. A. HEDRICK.

PHILLIPS.

On June 26, 1898, with her husband and three daughters at her bedside, Mrs. Mary Eleanor Phillips fell asleep in Jesus. Mary Lindsey was born in Christian county, Ky., Dec. 3, 1832. She was the eleventh child of a family of twelve, six sons and six daughters. Three sons, James, Alfred and John, were Christian preachers. She became a member of the Christian Church at the age of thirteen. After attending school in Eureka she finished her course of study at Berean College, Jacksonville, Ill., and became a teacher in the public schools. In 1859 she was married to James E. Phillips and moved to Tremont, from which place they moved to Lilly and then to Normal. On Jan. 29, 1896, Sister Phillips had a paralytic stroke. For two and one-half years she was an example of patient suffering and sublime faith. As she was unable during this time to take her place in the house of the Lord, her own room became the "house of God and the gate of heaven." She was laid to rest in the family cemetery south of Lilly. Besides the husband and the three daughters there are one sister, Jean L. Linn, and two brothers, William and Felix, left to mourn her loss. 1 Thes. 4:13-18.

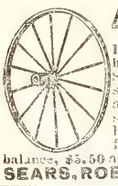
PORTER.



Lizzie Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Porter, died Sept. 3, 1898. She had just passed her fourteenth birthday. Two years ago she became a Christian. The right way of life was pointed out to her by her parents and she accepted it. Anxious ones watched and cared for her tenderly, but her young life gradually slipped away from time limitations and went into the eternal. She was faithful to her Christian profession, and the influence of her life will continue to speak to her associates in the flesh.

CHRONIC ECZEMA

I was troubled several years with chronic Eczema, on my head and face. I took medical treatment from two doctors and several lotions, but received little relief. Literature.

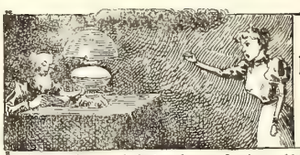
Mrs. Humphrey Ward's New Book.

There can be no doubt that Mrs. Humphrey Ward is one of the ablest writers of the present age. She has more than talent; in her pages the discriminating reader finds the subtle and indefinable marks of genius. The literary instinct is true, the wealth of diction surprising, the thought large and luminous, the analysis and interpretation of motives deep and comprehensive, and the complete effect of her work striking and impressive. It is obvious that the gifts of the Arnolds are highly developed in her, that she is saturated with Oxford culture, that she has made a careful study of the various problems with which the greatest souls of our country are occupied, and that she is conscious of a mission and a message. Wide open are her eyes, keen and receptive her mind, eager and ambitious her spirit. As she goes through the world she sees clearly what men and women are doing, what are the causes which produce in them laughter or tears, what are the principles to which they yield themselves from day to day, and what are the ideals towards which they are striving. Hardly anything escapes the sweep of her vision. And because she is a serious woman she deals with the serious things of life and paints them as they appear to her with a skillful and masterly hand.

"Helbeck of Bannisdale" is far above the ordinary novel. I do not think that it is equal to "Sir George Trenaby." But if it lacks the virility, the strong intellectual grasp, the witchery of movements, the breadth of conception, the uniqueness of execution of the latter book, it has a distinctive and peculiar charm of its own. There is not much plot in it—no more than is necessary to bring into proper relief the different persons who figure in it. Indeed, Mrs. Humphrey Ward is pre-eminently a religious, or as perhaps she would prefer to be called, an ethical teacher. Therefore, she does not waste her time or her energies on what has no direct bearing on the questions of the soul, or the claims of theology, or the hopes of the churches, or the aspirations and dreams of humanity. If she turns aside to speak of the beauties of Wordsworth's country it is that she may may show its moral value in the education of those whose lives she is endeavoring to make real to us. The bracing air of the uplands, the rugged mountains capped with fleecy clouds, the vines winding through the valleys where the cattle feed in blissful content, the woods casting their shadows in the lakes and the moss with its tendrils clinging to the massive rocks, the light playing on the larches and sycamores and making the larks to sing their joyous lays, the millions upon millions of daffodils glorifying the lovely fells of Windermere are to her a revelation of the eternal righteousness. The influence of nature combined with the influence of heredity and environments are responsible for what we are.



The chief characters of the book are not particularly attractive. Helbech, the hero of the story, lacks many of the qualities that are the distinguishing signs of the true child of God. In spite of his longing for holiness, his self-sacrificing kindness to the poor, his gentle and courteous demeanor to others and his untiring devotion to what he conceives to be for his everlasting welfare, he is a morbid and uncompromising bigot. When he exanines his conscience he depreciates himself a thousand times more than ever Jonathan Edwards did, and the mention of the building of an Anglican church near his home provokes in him a slumbering hatred of Protestantism and an intense hunger for its destruction. Laura, who is the heroine of the tale, is the daughter of a deceased Cambridge professor who had married Helbeck's sister and spent his life in revolt against Christianity. She inherits the religious opinions and prejudices of her father. A creature of contradictory impulses, wholly ignorant of the ways of life, and yet loyal to the memory of her agnostic parents, she says and does some very strange things. In her we have a splendid girl spoiled for the want of training. Mrs. Fountain, stepmother to Laura and sister to Helbeck, is certainly a weakling. Catholicism she abandons before her marriage, and her husband's eyes are scarcely closed in death ere she regrets what she has done and takes to her beads and rosary again. Father Bowls, the parish priest, is a sly, easy-going, hypocritical specimen of the ancient faith. His manner is offensively pious, his heart not engaged with supernal facts, his conscience not quickly disturbed by the voice of the Lord. The Jesuit Father Leodham is of another type. Refined, scholarly, urbane, with a considerable acquaintance of the world, he is specially adapted to win the wayward from the path of error. But he is a convert from Anglicanism, and consequently has all the faults of the convert, such as excess of zeal, intolerance of the convictions of his quondam friends and neighbors,a readiness to compass heaven and earth to gain the ends of theRomish Church. Brother Williams is low-born and cannot rise to the standard of a gentleman. He tries Catholicism for awhile, alienating from him his nearest relatives, and leaves it unceremoniously complaining of its exactions. And the Masons are a coarse, vulgar family. They are peasants to the tips of their fingers and view everything from the peasant's standpoint. In them the evangelicalism of the Church of England manifests itself at its worst. So it is all through the story. There is not a single individual that we spontaneously and unreservedly admire and love.

Mrs. Humphrey Ward in this book pays almost no attention to the free action of the human will. It seems to her that it is overborne by forces that lie outside it. Again and again she pictures it contending with the traditions of the past, with the superstititions of religion, with social customs and habits, with the wild and stormy passions that beat around it as the angry waves beat around a ship at sea. With inimitable delicacy and vividness she describes her men and women struggling for freedom, contending with the enemies of national liberty and fighting for the privilege of ushering in the kingdom of "sweetness and light." But these creations of her pen have not much part in the working out of their salvation. They are mere automata, enmeshed in a complicated web of invariable and inflexible laws and molded and shaped without their voluntary choices or consents. This, however, is not the teaching of the Bible or of experience. From the dawn of Jewish history until now,countless multitudes have declared that the children of God can determine their own weal or woe. We do not, for we cannot, admit that we are the puppets of powers that are entirely beyond our control.

And Mrs. Humphrey Ward is not fair to Christianity. She takes as its representatives persons who do not worthily embody it. In the case of Helbeck it is set forth in its worst material and dogmatic forms; in the case of Augustina in the sickliest and inanest aspects; in the case of Cousin Elizabeth and Polly in its crudest and boldest symbols, and in the case of Daffady it reveals itself in the cant and vanity of a spurious Methodism. With Christianity as thus outwardly expressed Laura is contrasted. Original in her mental processes, quick in meeting difficulties and emergencies, having at her command numerous sententious utterances of her father, and bright and sparkling in her speech, she is more than a match for the believers. And though she promises to wed Helbeck out of pity for his wretched condition, and because her own heart is torn with grief at the prospect of being left in the world alone, yet she commits suicide rather than accept the faith of her lover and become guilty of intellectual dishonesty. But we have a right to demand a juster presentation of the Christian religion. It is a conspicuons illustration of a violation of the golden, and exhibits an amazing blindness to the wonderful sanity and activity of the followers of Jesus in the realms of the noblest thought and life. If Christianity is not reasonable, then there is nothing reasonable in the universe or in the annals of our race, for apart from it we can discover no adequate explanation of mind and matter, no remedy for sin and no endless satisfaction for the infinite pleadings and hopes of our souls. Publishers' Notes.

MARY ARDMORE,

Or a Test of Faith, by J. H. Stark, will soon be issued from our press. Many were delighted with this author's former volume, "Hugh Carlin," and they will be pleased to know that "Mary Ardmore" promises to be much more interesting. The characters that make up this story are aptly chosen, the incidents are very lifelike and the great truths are brought prominently before the mind of the reader. The book will be ready in a short time.

KING SAUL, BY J. B. ELLIS.

"In the Days of Jehu," issued from the press but a few months ago, was written by the same author. The general satisfaction given by this former book warrants a good sale for this new candidate for public favor. Its conception is good, and the diction is excellent. Some of our readers may not agree with the author in thinking that Abner was the uncle of Saul. But whatever the relation the story is well written and full of interest.

Saul himself has not worth of character enough to warrant a work of 278 pages, but fortunately, David lived in those times, and his life was so interwoven with the reign of Saul that it seems well enough to borrow from him character sufficient to make one of the most readable and profitable books yet placed on the market. Like all the productions of the author, it deserves well and will evidently receive a large patronage. D. R. DUNGAN.

MORMONISM EXAMINED.

It is acknowledged by competent judges that D. H. Bays has presented in his late book the strongest arguments against Mormon doctrine that has yet been published. He calls his book "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism Examined and Refuted." He has attacked all the strongholds of Mormonism, closely examined all their doctrines, and has refuted every argument on which they rely to sustain their beliefs. The author of this book is acquainted with the Mormon doctrines from the very inside, having been a strong advocate of their faith for many years. To those who have the question of Mormonism to meet, we commend this work to them as being a strictly reliable refutation of the teachings of Mormonism. It is a book of 460 pages, and the price is $1.50.

A story that even those who are close pressed by the duties of a very busy and practical age may pause to read with interest is contained in the book "King Saul," just issued from the press. It is a vivid recital of the history of the ancient king of Israel, so told that the ages gone become reinvested with interest, and the characters become as great in the world's history as they do in divine chronology. "King Saul" is told in an up-to-date, matter-of-fact manner, with faithfulness to historical accuracy and plenty of snap, vigor and romantic details. It deserves to be read as well as the histories of other famous men who have played a part in shaping the destinies of the world. As a portrayal of human passions it is a masterpiece.

The author begins his story with the marvelous manner in which Saul became ruler of Israel, and the transition from a government by judges to that of kings.—St. Louis Star, St. Louis, Mo.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

The "Supplement" contains a large number of the very best old standard songs, without which any book designed for use in public worship must seem incomplete.

The authors have earnestly endeavored to make this book worthy the patronage of the public.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The exact relations between the American and native troops in the Philippine Islands and the precise attitude of the Philippinos toward the prospect of American sovereignty over one or all of the islands, are matters which defy all attempts to secure definite information. Admiral Dewey is apprehensive of trouble and does not think that the insurgent leaders will be satisfied with any terms which our government is likely to offer. He sees among the insurgents many signs of disaffection toward our troops. On the contrary, the Philippine leader, Aguinaldo, has issued the following statement which is important whether one considers it as a trustworthy account of the real state of affairs, or as merely indicative of the impression which the insurgent chief desires to make. He says: "The Filipino Government desires to inform the American Government and people that the many rumors circulated regarding the strained relations between the Filipino and American forces are base, malicious slanders of the enemy of both parties, are without any truth and are circulated for the purpose of prejudicing the appeal of the Filipinos for their release from the oppression and cruelty of Spain. The relations of our people and yours have been and will continue to be of the most friendly nature, and we have withdrawn our forces from the suburbs of Manila as an additional evidence of our confidence in the great American Republic." Even this, however, is nothing more than an assurance of present good feeling and involves no promise of submission to any arrangements which may be made for the disposition of the Philppines. It was believed a week ago that Aguinaldo had agreed to accept an Ameican protectorate over an otherwise independent Philippine Government, but since then there has appeared over his signature an address to the European powers recounting the defeat of the Spaniards in the islands, but without referring to the part played by the American ships and troops, and calling upon the powers to stand by and see fair play given to the new republic which it is proposed to establish. When the peace conference at Paris has done its work and published its results, it will not take long to find out how the Philippinos like the part of it which concerns them. Until that time it must necessarily be uncertain.

It is to be borne in mind that if the United States acquires sovereignty over any of the territory which has been involved in the recent war; i. e., Cuba, Porto Rico or the Philippines, we will have to deal with a Roman Catholic hierarcy which has hitherto enjoyed the privileges of an established church, and with a population which is almost solidly Roman Catholic. As to the establishment, there is, of course, only one thing to do. It will cease to exist, naturally, inevitably and without a struggle. Hitherto the church and its various institutions in these provinces have been supported in part by subsidies from the state. Henceforth, if any of these places become American territory, the Roman Catholic Church will shift for itself there as here. From this it will inevitably follow, especially in the priest-ridden Philippines, that there will be a large reduction in the number of Spanish priests in the islands. Indeed, considerations of personal safety have already induced by far the majority to return to Spain. It is estimated that out of 11,000 Spanish priests in the Philippines not more than 500 remain. It does not speak well for the influence of the church that the lives of its priests are not safe from attack by its laity when civil authority is relaxed. It is reported that the Archbishop of Manila is in favor of annexation to the United States, which would guarantee protection, though it would not give support to the church, and believes that the religious orders, Dominicans, Augustinians, Franciscans, Benedictines and Capuchins ought to be expelled. Their jealousies among themselves and the hatred of them all by the people make them a disturbing element, and doubtless the archbishop is right in believing that their removal would simplify the situation with which he has to deal.

By perseverance and persuasion the President has almost succeeded in securing the necessary quota of the right sort of men to constitute the commission for investigating the conduct of the War Department. Invitations were issued to a number of men whose names were not in the original list and seven have accepted the appointment. It is still hoped that the number may be increased to nine, but in any case the investigation will proceed without further delay. Meanwhile, Secretary Alger is making a ten days' tour of inspection among the camps and hospitals in the South and, presumably, is preparing himself to prove, if called upon to do so, that the conduct of his department as regards care of men, both sick and well, has been satisfactory and exemplary.

The cordial relations existing between the Cuban insurgent leaders and the American officers in Cuba was evidenced by the friendly reception, amounting, in fact, to an ovation, which was given by the latter to General Garcia upon his arrival at Santiago. In a graceful speech recognizing the honor done to him, the insurgent general expressed his gratitude to the United States and gave to our forces the entire credit for expelling the Spanish and thereby completing the task at which the Cubans had long labored. This is in brilliant contrast with the cheerful manner in which Aguinaldo alludes to the successes in the Philippines as a victory won by himsel and his fellow-insurgents. There have been many exasperating delays in the evacuation of Cuba by the Spanish forces. Instructions have been sent to the commission which is dealing with the matter to hasten the departure of the Spaniards. The protocol says "immediately," and that is a word which does not include in it the idea of any delay. The case has been quite different in Porto Rico. There, to the surprise of all concerned, the Spanish have not manifested their usual genius for inventing pretexts and excuses for delay, but have proceeded in a straightforward manner to prepare to leave. American troops are already in Porto Rico in sufficient numbers to preserve order, and within a few days the extra troops to be sent to occupy Havana and the neighboring provinces will be ready to embark.

One of the foregone conclusions of the coming state election is the retirement of Roger Q. Mills from the Texas senatorship. It was expected that the election of the legislature would turn upon the fight between Mills and Culberson for the senatorial seat now occupied by Mr. Mills. At the very outset of the campaign Mr. Mills declared that his rival had control of the machine and without a struggle retired from a contest in which he could see no hope of victory. The circumstances which made the situation seem to him so obviously hopeless was the rigid criterion of Democracy adopted last January by the Democratic state executive committee, whereby eligibility to participate in the party primaries was limited to those who had voted the straight ticket, both state and national, in 1896. As Mr. Mills was opposed to the free coinage of silver, it was naturally expected that much of his support would come from Democrats who had not voted the straight ticket in 1896, and the exclusion of the primaries was a serious blow to Mills' chances. The downfall of this former idol of the Texas Democracy is not, however, without causes of long standing. His intimacy with the second Cleveland administration cast an odium upon his name in the minds of the large number of Texans who never loved Mr. Cleveland. His real or supposed vast influence with the President in the distribution of patronage during that administration made for him an enemy in the person of every disappointed officeseeker from his state. Many things, both small and great, contributed to the confirmation of the general belief that Mr. Mills was becoming a political boss. As a result of all these causes, including Mills' opposition to and Culberson's connection with the Chicago platform, there is a probability, as near certainty as a political prognostication can be, that Gov. Culberson will soon succeed Senator Mills in the United States Senate.

There are plenty of influential Republican politicians in Michigan who are cordially opposed to Gov. Pingree and his ideas, plans and methods, but that did not prevent his renomination for governor by the Republican State Convention, nor did it render the outcome of the convention very dubious before the event. Together with the many faults which he may possess and the eccentricities which he undoubtedly does possess, he also possesses the confidence of the people in his integrity as a man and in his sincere devotion to popular interests. Knowing this, Pingree's political enemies within his own party could not leave him off the ticket without inviting defeat for their own candidate. Besides the policy of reform within the state, for which Gov. Pingree stands preeminently, the platform on which he is now renominated includes endorsement of the national administration, the conduct of the war by the President and of the War Department by Secretary Alger, the Dingley Bill and the St. Louis currency platform.

It has been commonly believed that the moral sentiment of the country has won such a victory over prize fighting that no attempt was likely to be made to "pull off" a big fight in the very heart of the country. Promoters of championship fights and the most prominent exponents of the manly art of self-defense have been compelled to seek some quiet, sequestered spot in Nevada or the Mexican border in which to give their exhibitions, and it is somewhat surprising to learn that an attempt is being made to arrange for a big heavyweight match to be held within thirty minutes' ride of Cincinnati. This may mean either Indiana, Ohio or Kentucky. Accordingly, the governors of these three states, at the first appearance of the rumor, made official statements which will have a tendency to discourage the enterprising promoters. The proclamation by Gov. Mount, of Indiana, is particularly clear-cut. He says: "There will be no prize fight in Indiana if I can prevent it. If local authority is not sufficient, the resources of the state will be drawn upon for ample force to suppress lawlessness and drive out the intruders if anything of the kind is undertaken. The persons so engaged will be treated as criminals from the time they cross the border line. Prize fighting is a disgrace to our boasted civilization, and ought not to be tolerated anywhere. It certainly will not be tolerated in Indiana while I am governor."

The death of Miss Winnie Davis, the daughter Jefferson Davis, has created profound sorrow throught the South. Miss Davis was born at the executive mansion of the Confederacy, at Richmond, during the war, this, together with the fact that she was her father's favorite daughter and accompanied him on many of his journeyings, brought her prominently before the public as "the Daughter of the Confederacy." She was known and loved all over the South.

On October 4, at Newport News, the battleship Illinois will be launched. She is built upon lines somewhat different from those of our other battleships, and will therefore have a distinct inidviduality of her own. The new vessel will be equal in fighting equipment to any boat now in our navy. Preparations are being made to have a large number of representative men from Illinois present at the launching in recognition of the honor done to the state in giving its name to the new battleship.

OUR EDUCATIONAL PROBLEM.

Many of the best minds among us have come to see, with a clearness of conviction not hitherto manifest, the transcendent and primary importance of our educational interests. For a long time our institutions of learning did not seem to be of sufficient importance to have any place on the program of our national conventions. It has only been a few years since the idea of an educational board was deemed practicable, and even yet the value of such a board and its special function have not dawned upon many of us. But many have come to see that back of nearly every other problen connected with our future growth and usefulness lies the educational problem, demanding solution. This has been the contention of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for many years, and we feel special gratification that there is a revival of interest on this subject.

There are many questions that go to make up the composite problem which we have called our educational problem. Some of these questions are as follows:

1. How shall this reviving interest in the welfare of our colleges become more general throughout the brotherhood, so that they may receive the sympathy and support they require? Of course, the religious press has an important duty to perform here, and the pulpit cannot be left out of any scheme that looks to the enlightenment of the mass of our membership on any subject. But it would greatly facilitate this work of awakening a general interest in our institutions of learning if there should be an educational day, or college day, on which the whole question of our educational interests could be brought before the brotherhood, by press and pulpit. The matter of lifting a collection for colleges on such a day might be omitted. Let the day be devoted to giving information concerning our colleges, emphasizing the importance of their work, and prayer for them. The fact of a whole brotherhood uniting in considering our colleges and praying for them would be a source of strength and inspiration for them. Let us have an educational day.

2. How shall we secure adequate endowment for our colleges? The need of such endowment is not a question. But how to raise an endowment that will enable our institutions to cope with the difficulties in their way and to meet the demands upon them is a most vital and practical question. It is one that has not received adequate thought among us. Shall we ask the churches, as such, to endow the colleges, or shall we rely upon the individual membership, or shall our appeal be to the wealthy? We see no reason why all these methods may not be tried. But still the question recurs, How shall we so place the needs of our colleges upon the consciences of those who have the ability to help them as to secure liberal gifts to that end? This is a question that needs prayerful study. The uncertain future of our colleges has been a deterrent to men of wealth putting money into them. But several of our institutions have passed the experimental stage, and it is only a queston of the extent of their usefulness. The man who proves to be a success in securing money for endowing our institutions of learning will have earned the gratitude of the whole brotherhood.

3. What is the relation of our colleges to the churches? Is the relation a vital and reciprocal one, binding each to the other in the bonds of a common destiny? Or are they wholly independent of each other? The former, of course, is the true relation, but how many churches act upon the latter suggestion! Christian colleges can only thrive where there are Christian churches, and Christian churches can only thrive permanently where there are Christian colleges, training young men and women for Christian work and to carry Christian truth and faith into all the higher callings of life. This relationship should beget a mutual interest in each other's welfare. Churches should support the colleges, and colleges should educate to meet the needs of the churches. Nothing is clearer to an educated mind than that no religious body can win or hold leadership among intelligent people without a high standard of scholarship in its ministry and other leaders.

4. What do our colleges need besides endowment? They need students, they need the sympathy and prayers of Christian people, they need thoroughly equipped teachers. Perhaps some of them need more extended courses. No doubt all of them would welcome more religious enthusiasm, and a more earnest religious atmosphere. Parents are asking, "Is it necessary for me to imperil the moral and spiritual welfare of my children, in order to give them intellectual training?" The question is born out of some sad experiences. Every intelligent believer knows that there is no conflict between the highest intellectual training and the deepest religious faith. And yet the latter often suffers in the effort to gain the former. It is only fair to say of our own colleges that they are generally pervaded by a religious atmosphere, and that students who enter them as unbelievers or religiously indifferent are much more apt to become Christians than are those entering as Christians to lose their faith. But a more positive and all-pervading religious enthusiasm, that includes pure morals, is a desideratum in all colleges.

5. What obligations do we owe to the State Universities where so large a per cent. of our young people are going for their education? We have only recently awakened to the fact that here is a vast field practically unoccupied by the church. It would be difficult to exaggerate the opportunities that are open to us in connection with these institutions. We are beginning to do something in this direction, and there is no more important branch of our educational work than this. In this connection we call attention to an article elsewhere, which we reprint from the Advance.

The relation of colleges to universities on the one hand and to preparatory schools on other, is another one of the many ques-ns that make up our educational prob-. Is it not time that these were fully ed and dealt with in an intelligent and orous fashion as becometh those champ-ng Christianity as a rational system e to vindicate its claims at the bar of an reason? Let us give our educa-al interests proper emphasis at the hcoming convention.

E BENEVOLENCE OF THE JERUSA-LEM CHURCH.

he members of the first church of Christ e Jews. This fact will explain some of ir peculiarities. Their moral and re-ous training had been protracted and rough. Before they became Christians y were deeply religious—they were thor-hly devout according to the require-nts of the law of Moses. The specialty he people of Israel was religion and rality. They were the most religious—the most intelligently religious—people earth. Their religion, unlike the re-ons of the Greeks and Romans, included rality. This was an essential feature of Hebrew religion. They were thorough-rilled in a knowledge of their duties ard God and toward their fellowmen. e Old Testament records are cited in dence of this fact. The change experi-ed by the Jews in Jerusalem in becom-Christians was chiefly in their concep-n of the nature and official character of us of Nazareth. They were led, by ap-priate evidence, to believe in him as the ssiah promised by the Holy Spirit in r prophets. When they came to under-nd that he was the promised Messiah, to believe in him as such, they placed nselves in right relations with him by ng baptized. In this significant rite y formally recognized him as their sov-gn Lord.

he growth of the church in members remarkably rapid. In a brief period of e the communicants numbered many usands. With the manner in which they ame Christians we are familiar. In our ching this has been made prominent and phatic. They heard the message of the y apostles, they believed the story, they ented of their sins, they put their trust he crucified Christ, they practically and nally recognized his Sonship by being tized in his name. But this was not all. s was only the beginning. They con-ued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, he fellowship, in the breaking of bread in prayer. They did not fall from ce as soon as the big meeting came to a se. This, in brief, is how the Jews in usalem became disciples of Christ.

Back to Jerusalem" has been our rally-cry from the beginning of our work. ack to Jerusalem" has, to us, a familiar g. It is, in a sense, and to a degree, a of soundness. The man who can say it he proper tone and with suitable em-asis is sound—he who cannot do these ngs is to be at least suspected of heresy. t "back to Jerusalem" usually means no re than this: Let us in thought and im-nation go "back to Jerusalem" that we y learn how to preach the gospel, that may learn the manner in which, under ministry of heaven-inspired men, sin-rs became saints, that we may learn from reme authority how to come to an as-rance of remission of sins under the gra-cious administration of Jesus Christ our Lord. This is probably the usual meaning attached to the familiar words, "Back to Jerusalem." And this is well. But the call ought to mean, to us, much more.

We are, in the good providence of our God, set for the restoration, to the church and the world, of the Christianity of Christ—its creed, its ordinances, its life. The creed can be learned by a study of the history of the Jerusalem church. The ordinances—their number, names, and nature—can be learned also in Jerusalem. But we can learn as well in "the City of the Great King" much concerning the primitive Christian life. Let us endeavor to do so.

It was a life of fraternity. The church in Jerusalem, the first Christian church on earth, possessed ten peculiarities of a household. The members of that congregation realized that they were brothers, not in name merely, but in deed and in truth. They loved as brothers love. There was among the members of that church real fellowship. They bore each other's burdens "and so fulfilled the law of Christ." No man said that aught of the things that he possessed was his own." "They had all things in common." The members of the Jerusalem church were genuinely benevolent. They lived for one another.

Theirs was a life of benevolence, because it was a life of fraternity. The work of restoring primitive Christianity will not be complete until we learn to live for each other as did the members of that first church. Compared with them our most generous men are positively stingy! Is this not true? "They sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all according as any man had need." "As many as were possessers of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold and laid them at the apostles' feet." "Joseph Barnabas . . having a field sold it, and brought the money and laid it at the apostles' feet." This is one of the distinguishing peculiarities of the Jerusalem church. Have we attained to their degree of benevolence?

The Epistle of James was written in Jerusalem, and in the midst of these scenes. Hence the conception of religion presented in this section of our New Testament. James said, "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Hence also the test of faith, or the evidence of faith, found in this epistle. On this point James, the bishop of the Jerusaiem church, said: "What doth it profit, my brethren, if a man say he hath faith, but have not works? Can that faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked and in lack of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled; and yet ye give them not the things needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it have not works, is dead in itself." The members of the Jerusalem church excelled in benevolence.

Of course, there was unity of thought and affection in that church. The historian tells us that "the multitudes of them that believed were of one heart and soul." Their love for one another was intensified by self-denial and service. Love can be made to grow now in the same way.

The members of the Jerusalem church considered themselves stewards of God. They did not say that their possessions belonged to them. All things, they understood, belonged to God. This was their thought. They had been trained in this faith while they were yet members of the church of Moses—the old Hebrew church. All things belong to God and are subject to his call. This is primitive Christianity. To restore this conception of property and its use is a part of our work.

The task is difficult. The members of the Jerusalem church had been in training for years—even for centuries in the persons of their ancestors—for the wonderful liberality described in the first chapters of the book of Acts.

We have examined in these papers the Hebrew financial system. This system explains, in part, the benevolent spirit and conduct of the members of the Jerusalem church. If the task before us is herculean, all the greater is the reason why we should enter upon it at once and prosecute it with all diligence and persistence. Let us go "back to Jerusalem" that we may learn how to use the means with which God has entrusted us.

"Do you think that Christians ought now to do as did the disciples of Jesus in Jerusalem?"

Why not? Jesus by his official representatives, approved of the conduct of these disciples. Dare we pronounce against it? Is it not a fact that we belong to Christ? Is it not also true that what we call our property really belongs to him? These things we confess in our prayers and hymns. Do we mean what we say when we engage in these pious exercises? Or do we observe a form merely? Our confessions are good enough—our practice can be improved.

Circumstances made it necessary for the members of the Jerusalem church to sell their possessions that they might give. Circumstances may make such a course necessary for us if we would show that we are genuine disciples of him who became poor that we by his voluntary poverty might be made rich. This demand is certainly not upon us now; but it is required of us that we shall consider our property as, not ours, but his. "The earth is the Lord's." "The silver is mine and the gold is mine, saith the Lord." The time has come in which we ought to form this habit of thought, and begin to use our property in this spirit.

Hour of Prayer.

ABOUNDING CHRISTIANS.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Oct. 5, 1898.)

Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord.—1 Cor. 15:15.

It was Paul's custom to "hitch his wagon to a star," to use an Emersonian phrase. If in his argument he soared into the empyrean, it was to discover a new motive for fidelity in the every-day duties of life. With him the highest thought and the noblest work were indissolubly wedded. The life which he lived in the flesh was lived, as he tells us, by faith in the Son of God. Its scene of sacrifice and toil was here on earth, but the source of its inspiration was the glorified Christ.

It is, therefore, very much in harmony with Paul's method of thought to close his great argument for the resurrection with a practical exhortation like the above. In view of the great fact of Christ's resurrection and, growing out of that, the resurrection of all those who sleep in him, he exhorts the brethren to steadfastness and unmovableness in their Christian faith, and not only to do the work of the Lord, but to abound in such work.

This exhortation suggests to us different kinds of Christians. There is the steadfast and immovable kind, of which Paul himself was a splendid type, and there is the opposite of this class—those who are zealous for a season, perhaps during a revival meeting or immediately following it, and then their ardor cools down and they gradually relinquish Christian work. They warm up again at the next meeting, and so are trying to get to heaven by fits and starts. Every church has one or more of this kind, but every church also has a few faithful ones that, through heat and cold, in season and out of season, are always to be found at their posts.

And then there are Christians who are always about the same, but they are content with doing a very little religious work. They do not lay themselves out to do all they can for the Master, who died for their sins and rose again for their justification. They are not abounding Christians. They do just enough to maintain a respectable standing in the church and are satisfied with that. Then there are others whose hand and heart are in every good work. It is surprising how much time they can find to do kind, helpful things for others, especially for those in need of sympathy and social recognition. They help all departments of the church, support our missionary treasuries and assist in benevolent work and in endowing colleges. They abound in the work of the Lord. The future of the church depends on the abounding kind of Christians.

The reason assigned for this fidelity and liberality in good works is the fact that we know our work in the Lord is not vain. If done in the right spirit and from the right motive it is as certain to yield its reward as that God is true and cannot lie. We sow our seeds here, looking for an earthly harvest, but often our expectations are disappointed. Not so with those who "sow to the Spirit." They shall surely reap everlasting life. And the law of the spiritual harves is, "He that soweth sparingly shall also reap sparingly, but he that soweth liberally shall also reap liberally."

Inasmuch, then, as Christ has risen from the dead, and that we, too, are to be raised in his glorious likeness and rewarded according to our works, why should we not abound in the work of the Lord the little while that remains to us here? In a few years we shall not be here. It will matter little then whether we have been rich or poor, whether life has been full of the sunshine of prosperity or shadowed by adversity; but it will matter infinitely whether we have been faithful in the use of our opportunities for developing character and doing good.

PRAYER.

O, Thou eternal God, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for a risen Christ and for the blessed hope of being raised from the dead in his likeness. May this hope purify us, even as he is pure, and may it stimulate us to abound in the work of the Lord during our brief earthly pilgrimage. Forbid that we should be loiterers in Thy vineyard when Thou art calling us to do Thy work. Strengthen us mightily, O Lord, by Thy Spirit, that we may devote the remainder of our lives to Thy loving service, to the praise of Thy name, and be among the number that shall follow Thee on the mountains of God forever! For Thy name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

Our last day at Macatawa was one of those mild, Indian summer days, that come in the autumn season. A purple haze filled the atmosphere and softened the rugged outlines of the landscape; the lake lay as quiet as an infant in its mother's arms, only breathing softly as a sleeping child breathes. And yet, as we walked along the shore we heard a sort of deep undertone that came in under a placid surface and seemed to tell of a conflict of elements far out from shore. At about ten o'clock we bade good-bye to the few friends left to "accompany us to the ship," the good "Soo City," and were soon out through the channel on the broad bosom of the lake. We had not been in our berths long, however, until we began to feel the swell of the lake, as if some mighty giant was underneath its depths, lifting the waves and vessel upon his huge shoulders. This action of the vessel, gently undulating at first, increased until the vessel was pitching and rolling alternately. It is the rolling motion of a vessel that gives greatest uneasiness to passengers. This is caused by the vessel quartering the waves instead of meeting them squarly or at right angles. Under such circumstances, in trying to court sleep, one is apt to try to comfort his mind with such reflections as the strength of the vessel in which he is sailing, the large proportion of the vessel that is beneath the level surface of the water, the skill of the man at the wheel, the faithfulness of the engineer, and that beneath all are "the everlasting arms." With such reflections we fell asleep at last to find that daylight had driven away the mists of the night, and the city of Chicago lay out before us clearly visible in the early morning light. The vessel had gone out of its way, as good navigators know how to do, to avoid the force of the waves and give their passengers as little discomfort as possible at the expense of a little time.

Chicago was busy, asusual. It was tending to its fall trade, reaching out its vast tentacles into all parts of the country after business, making preparations for the great peace jubilee and a thousand other things that have to do with the life and development of a great city. After a pleasant visit with Dr. Kirkham, at the office of the Christian Oracle, we had the pleasure of dining at the Quadrangle Club, at the University of Chicago, with a half dozen genial friends who made the hour a very pleasant and profitable one. It is always a pleasure to meet with such men as McClintock, Willett, Young, Ames, of Butler, who was passing through; Campbell, Gates and others, and a good lunch adds to the social enjoyment of such a meeting. These busy professors and pastors and Bible lecturers are full of their plans of work, and all of them seem ambitious to do the greatest good for the common cause. They are all impressed fully with the fact—as what Chicago citizen is not?—that wh Boston may be the "hub" of New Engla Chicago is the real commercial, educatic al and religious "hub" of the Unit States. There can be no doubt but t there is concentrating in that great metrc olis a vast aggregation of those for that make for civilization, as well much of the lower forces that make in t opposite direction. When these issues fully joined in conflict the end cannot doubted. Where else in all the world c the student of social and religious prc lems find a better field in which to stu the operation of the complex forces modern civilization?

It seems good to be back again at t old desk, to dust out the pigeon hol renew the ink in the inkstand, exchang rusty pen for a fresh one, meet with fam iar faces and drop into the regular groc of things. The beauty of a change base in the summer season is not more the novelty of going away than in that coming back. It makes two changes stead of one. But, after all, there is place where one can do his work with t same ease, other things being equal, as his accustomed place of work, and especi ly do we believe this to be true of an edit There is no place in which one can edi paper so effectively as at the editorial de where he daily comes in contact with readers and where his hand is continua on the pulse of the people. Much as enjoy Macatawa, if experience had taught us that a change was a necessity us, we would prefer to remain the y round at our desk, for when one loves work, the highest pleasure that he c have in this life is the doing of that wo and in the constant effort to do it m efficiently. Nevertheless, as human nat is constituted and as the present order things is constituted, we believe it to highly important for a large number people, at least, to secure the benefit o change at least once a year.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Jour and Messenger, in an editorial entitl "Baptism Into What?" says that "wh the present writer, in his earlier minist thought it proper to use the preposit 'into,' he has become convinced of error." This comment is drawn by the statement of a corresponde that he had heard a Baptist minister, good standing, in baptizing a candid say, "I baptize thee 'into' the name of Father and of the Son and of the H Ghost." The editor is convinced that t is wrong. He admits that he is against revisers in taking this position, and might have added with equal truthfuln that he is against the original Greek. have always regarded this as one of most important renderings in the Revis Version. It carries with it tremendc consequences. It makes baptism, in outward action and in the inward prepa tion—which alone gives baptism validity a transitional institution. In that act c comes into formal citizenship in the kin dom of God, and of course this presu poses the qualifications for citizensh Does not the Journal and Messenger that this rendering at once renders infa baptism null and void? In such cases it not transitional, for the subjects of it ot fitted for citizenship in the kingdom of od. We regret to see our Baptist neighr surrender a stronghold of one of its rdinal points from the morbid fear, which many Baptists manifest, of overdoing e value of baptism. There is no need for y fear in this direction as long as we ake baptism mean what it meant in the inistry of the apostles, and keep it in tal touch with faith in Christ.

Questions and Answers.

I understand there is a disposition on e part of some of our churches to aban- on the International Sunday-school Les- ns. Do you think this a wise policy in ew of the fact that we advocate Christian ion, and are supposed to be broad and eral? Would you advise such a course, d if so do you not think it would be a bject for discussion at our next Nation- Convention? Do you not think it best r those that believe it wise to take such a urse to first await the action of our con- ntion before giving up the International ssons? Lee D. Martin.

San Antonio.

So far as we know, the disposition to andon the International Sunday-school essons is very limited among us. In the ast there is an opposition series being ublished, which its advocates claim to be ore in harmony with modern methods of blical study. The general feeling, how- er, throughout the religious world is that e advantages of a uniform series of les- ns far outweigh the benefits to be gained the adoption of some other series. No ne claims that the International Sunday- hool Lessons are chosen with infallible isdom, or that there may not be improve- ents made in future as there have been in e past. Instead of abandoning the Inter- ational series of lessons, it seems to us at a much wiser course would be to graft to this series whatever good points may e suggested by any other series, when ey have approved themselves to the lightened judgment of the majority of hristian leaders. It would be entirely roper for this subject to receive consider- ion in the Sunday-school feature of our ational Convention, but to make such nsideration profitable it should receive ery careful thought beforehand by some ne or more, competent to treat the subject.

Will you explain in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the following passages of Scripture: . Matt. 21:44; 2. Luke 18:8?

S. A. Q.

1. The first passage reads: "And he hat falleth on this stone shall be broken pieces: but on whomsoever it shall fall, shall scatter him as dust." The language is that of our Savior in conversation ith the Jews who opposed His claims. He had just referred them to the Scriptures hich say:

"The stone which the builders rejected, he same was made the head of the corner."

It is this figure of the stone that leads to he language, the meaning of which is sked for by our querist. If one falls on a one he is likely to be bruised or broken limb by the fall; but if the stone be a rge one and should fall on a person, it ould make a sudden end of him. The one who stumbles over Christ and becomes offended at Him and refuses to receive Him, is certain to be broken to pieces; but if his attitude toward the Son of God be such as to call down upon him the anathema of Christ, he will not only be broken, but ground to powder. It is a difference, we take it, in degrees of punishment, growing out of different degrees or phases of opposition to Christ. Whoever puts himself directly in the way of the progress of the kingdom of God is certain to be ground to powder. The stone which the builders rejected and which has been made the head of the corner, is sure to fall upon every such one with tremendous power.

2. The second passage quoted is as follows: "Howbeit, when the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" The marginal reading is "the faith." This language is part of the parable spoken by Jesus to his disciples "to the end that they ought always to pray and not to faint." The parable is that of the unjust judge. As this unjust judge was led by the continual importunity of the widow to avenge her of her adversary, so it is argued, "Shall not God avenge his elect which cry to him day and night, and he is long-suffering over them?" The answer of this question is: "I say unto you that he will avenge them speedily." Then comes the question of our Lord quoted above, as to whether the Son of Man when he cometh shall find the faith on the earth. As this avenging was to be done "speedily," we may suppose that the coming of the Son of Man referred to in the passage was also to take place speedily in connection with that avenging. Perhaps the same coming is here referred to that is spoken of in Matthew 16:28: "Verily I say unto you, there be some of them which stand here which shall in no wise taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." This coming was at a time when the Jewish nation, as such, had rejected Christ, and when there was only a few of His faithful followers who received Him, and even they did not understand Him nor enter into sympathy with His large plans, until after Pentecost. Without being dogmatic we are inclined to believe that this is the coming to which Jesus refers in this passage, and that He cannot mean to raise the question as to whether He will find faith upon the earth at the final coming in the kingdom of His glory.

An evangelist who smokes cigars was asked, "Is it sinful to use tobacco?" He answered from the rostrum in substance: "The Scriptures do not condemn its use. If you think it sinful you had better not use it, for that would be sin for you. But if others think it not sinful and wish to use tobacco, it is none of your business." Would not the same reasoning apply to dancing, card-playing and the use of intoxicants? A Learner.

It could be said concerning the "use of intoxicants," at least, that there is scriptural prohibition, but the line of argument adopted by the evangelist is not an entirely safe one. It is our business to seek to win our brethren from habits which we believe to be hurtful to themselves and unpleasant to others. Of course we must observe Christian courtesy in this as in everything else. The question was not put, perhaps, in the best form to the evangelist. If he had been asked, "Is the use of tobacco consistent with the highest type of Christian character?" or, "Would you discourage it in the use of young converts as an evil habit which had better be avoided?" it would have been more difficult for him to answer without compromising his own position. However we may seek to justify our ourselves in the use of tobacco, it would shock our sense of the fitness of things to find out that Jesus was a smoker of the weed, or that any of the apostles were given to its use. We would not by any means say that no Christian uses tobacco, but are we not justified in saying that smoking or chewing is not consistent with the highest ideal of Christian life? Ought we not to strive after the highest ideal?

In a revival meeting one accepts the invitation, makes confession and asks to be baptized in the river (about half a mile from the chapel). The evangelist and pastor urge the use of the baptistery as being more convenient. The candidate refuses to be immersed in the baptistery, contending for his preference of places. The evangelist and pastor refuse to go to the river, holding that his refusal to use the baptistery is evidence that he is not penitent enough to receive baptism. How about it? Disciple.

We think it would have been more in harmony with the Spirit and teaching of Jesus if the evangelist and pastor had accommodated themselves to the weakness of their brother, and have gone with him to the river and baptized him there. They could have trusted to time and to an increase of spiritual understanding to have removed the objection to the baptistery. "He that is weak in the faith, receive ye, but not to doubtful disputation."

JUSTIFICATION.

A. M. CHAMBERLAIN.

To the categorical question, "Does God deal in realities, or figments?" the enlightened Christianity of any age unhesitatingly replies, "Realities." Yet, philosophers have oft constructively attributed to the Godhead figment rather than reality in the development of theological systems.

In our English Bibles are several words—just, righteous, justify, justification, righteousness—used to translate words framed in Hebrew and Greek from roots found in the Hebrew "tsaddig" and Greek "dikaios." In the New Testament the same word, "dikaiooma," besides one or two other renderings, is four times translated righteousness, and once justification. The two other occurrences of "justification" in our version are found as renderings of the Greek "dikaiosis." The adjective "dikaios" is rendered right, righteous, just (once meet). The verb "dikaio-oo" is rendered, with few exceptions, justify.

It is not necessary to define for the average intelligence such terms as just and righteous; and that same intelligence, if left to itself, and undazzled by speculative sophism, would quite certainly affirm that just and justify, "dikaios" and "dikaio-oo," are intended to express close and real relationship. To justify is to show to be just. But turn to the dictionary, or appeal to the learned, and you will apparently find that the average intelligence is not a safe guide upon such delicate questions. The Standard Dictionary informs us that in theology to justify is "to regard and treat as righteous and lawfully free from the penalty of sin, on the ground of Christ's mediatorial work." The new Universal Dictionary is, perhaps, even more specific. According to it, "justification is a forensic act by which God declares the sinner righteous and acquits him of all guilt, on account of the meritorious life and atoning death of Jesus Christ, the Redeemer, imputed to the sinner and received by faith alone."

After conning these deliverances of theological wisdom, the average intelligence will undoubtedly begin to puzzle. Does God, then, regard as righteous, and declare to be righteous, those who are not righteous? Go into court and, if you hear justification pleaded in reply to an offence charged, you find that "justification," in so far as it consists in plea of counsel and decision of judge or jury, is simply the expounding and establishing by adequate evidence of pre-existent facts. Are we to believe, then, that on the contrary God's Word makes a thing true apart from the fact, or rather that God's Word is always in accordance with the facts? In other words, when we say, "God's Word is always true," do we bear tribute to his power, or to his probity? The first hypothesis seems to lead into interminable confusion of thought as to God's nature and the verities of life.

The question is, assuredly, not of little importance. The prevalence of this "theological" conception of justification is responsible, who shall doubt, for low ideals of Christian life. Christ's mediatorial work is considered, not as the revolution of sinful life, the establishment of true and just ideals of obligation and the inspiration of a fervor for holiness, but it is a piece of chicane by which the eyes of God are self-blinded, and by processes akin to incantation and necromancy the soul is garbed to masquerade in an alien righteousness. Happy result! The penalty of sin has been escaped; but how about the sin itself? This is ritualism, the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, no more, while the words of the Master are, "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

In the application of common terms to the working of the human and divine, it is not to be overlooked that, in the nature of things, the larger application will pertain to the divine. Slight examination will show in regard to this term justify an almost generic difference in breadth in its application to the action of God and man. Man, in general, justifies or attempts to justify himself as to his past, but God is ever looking to justify humanity in regard to its future. Isaiah 53:11 declares, "By his knowledge shall my righteous ('tsaddig') servant jusifty ('tsaddig') many." Surely, this is the promise of a real work to be accomplished in the souls of men, a partaking of the divine nature to be theirs, a transformation into the likeness of his Son, which God purposed for his children. Of similar purport is the statement of Paul in the fifth chapter of the Roman letter, "For, as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." Unless we are ready to hold that the sinning was only an appearance, or accounting, or imputing, it would seem we are shut up to the conclusion that the righteousness to be established is as real as the righteousness of God. In the same direction points the language of the Roman letter, 3:25, 26, saying, "Being justified as a matter of gift by his favor through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God set forth by his blood, a herald of reconciliation through faith, in order to reveal God's righteousness in passing over in forbearance the sins of past generations [cf. Acts 17:30: 'The times of ignorance, therefore, God overlooked,'] as looking toward the full revelation of his righteousness at the present time, purposing to be both righteous himself, and to render righteous the soul born of faith in Jesus." The writer assumes whatever of responsibility is involved in a new rendition of a passage of no little intricacy. Not stopping for lengthy exegesis, we may note in passing that no explanation of the closing statement can satisfy thoughtful men which practically makes God the slave of some abstraction known as "offended justice." It certainly comports much better with the language and with God's revelation of himself to men to judge that the justice for which he was solicitous in himself in the eyes of men, was absolute impartiality as between Jew and Gentile, and paternal regard for all his children whose sin was of ignorance. By the same logic, because God has shown himself dealing in realities, the righteousness of the soul born of faith in Jesus, is to be taken as a real righteousness, an abandonment of the sin which had sullied the old life, and not some figment of "imputation."

The natural tendency of that widely current "imputation" conception of "justification by faith in Christ" is to put a premium on sluggish Christian life. Not asserting that this is the sole cause of widespread lethargy, it may freely be affirmed, from the personal experience of many, that there is nothing in such concept to inspire a battle against the evils that sadden life. It may produce resignation, but not resolution. No assertion is intended or implied, that modern theology ignores the question of personal holiness, the burden, was it not, of Christ's ministry; but it may be truthfully affirmed that to-day, in many instances, "the holy life" is made subsidiary to the main proclamation of a salvation constructively formal and ritualistic. We are saved and accepted of God primarily on account of certain observances and professions (our own or even our parents'), as a result of which a righteousness not ours is graciously attributed to us and the doors of heaven are unbarred. As a sequence of this acceptance it is presumed that a measure of gratitude will prompt to a greater or less imitation of the virtues of Jesus, but the impression is indubitably left on many minds that a passive receptivity will suffice if an active zeal for holiness does not spotaneously arise. May not the day of judgment reveal at last that the awful apathy of the modern church in face of ravage of rum and grip of greed in social life is the outgrowth of low trains of thought whose roots are concepts of past centuries of stupendous ignorance and but formal allegiance to Christ?

One need scarce hesitate to assert that while refinements of doctrine have chang and systems of theology have been modifi in recent generations there is, after a not a primary concept of religious tru which has not been carefully preserved hallowed entirety in the form which it h acquired a half millennium ago, under t molding influences of an age of intolera tyranny, vicious administration and withe ing ignorance.

But, lest charge be brought that suc statements are iconoclastic, smacking of t arrogance of an irreverent age and cra and presumptious scholarship, it may b well to review briefly the changes in th concept of "justification" which have take place in the long centuries of Christia thought. To be sure, there is the ope Bible, and to that some appeal has bee ventured that such is the nature of t mind, and this brief historical glance ma not be without value in giving prop balance to our considerations.

Among the first of the "Fathers of t Church" to give large attention to systen atic theology was Augustine, Bishop Hippo, who lived in the latter part of t fourth and the early part of the fifth cen turies. His concept of the meaning justification was practically that of t preceding argument. For example h says, "God justifies the ungodly, not on by remitting the evil he has done but also b imparting love, which rejects the evil an does the good." And again: "The ungodly justified by the grace of God; i. e., fro being ungodly, is made righteous." Th idea received the greater emphas from Augustine, because in his own ca his acceptance of Christ had been t abandonment of a vicious and licentio life; and, indeed, it retained its theoretic vitality undiminished for at least a thou sand years. To this day it persists, u modified at bottom, in the dogmatics of t Roman Church.

Likewise, Martin Luther who, while great reformer, was not a great theologia whose theology at least as gathered from h writings, was not always clear nor consis ent, held to the vital development of t Christ in men as the essential element justification. At the same time it is to b admitted he held that Bernard's stateme of the imputation of Christ's righteousne to men was a correct exposition of Bib teachings. Abelard, in the twelfth centur and Socinus, and Osiander, about the tin of the great Reformation, also gave em phatic expression to their opinions as the reality of the righteousness whic Christ was to work among and in men.

In spite of modern claims of antiquit the idea of the imputation of Christ righteousness to men dates as a recogniz factor in theology, only a few centuri before the time of Luther. Anselr Aquinas and Bernard, the product of th age of the cloister, were its peculiar chan pions. With such a history it may b asked, how comes the wide acceptance to day of the doctrine of "justification" as a "imputed righteousness?"

Two things have conspired to produ this effect. In the first place, alongside the theory of the Roman Church, whic asserted the actuality of the reformatio effected in human character by Chris denominating it justification, developed widespread belief in the doctrine of supe erogation. This idea was based on beli at the righteousness demanded by God as cessary to salvation was vastly exceeded those peculiarly spiritual beings who ent far beyond the letter of law and uity in manifestation of love and service ward humanity. This "superfluity" of rtue was thought to accrue to the interest the church at large, and with the velopment of the idea of priestly minis- ation and meditation it was conceived as fund to be drawn upon as a substitute for e performance of earthly penance, by me even as a fund to be banked against r the liquidation of the supposedly in- rred pains of purgatory. It is true, no uncil of the church ever affirmed the lidity of this notion, but it gained great rrency in the church, and the more as xity of life grew greater in a corrupt age. ose coupled with this, which was prac- ally the imputation of righteousness om man to man, the idea of the imputa- n of the righteousness of Christ to men ined vogue; and, so revered was the me of Christ, that at the outbreak of the eformation, though protest was not in in against the idea that priestly minis- ation could redistribute human righteous- ss, no incongruity was suspected in as- ming that the righteousness of Christ uld be appropriated in some mystical y by the faith of individuals. The era of e "Indulgence" passed away without af- cting this kindred notion of justification imputation.

In the second place, dating back to the ne of Augustine and perhaps earlier, was somewhat vague idea of "total de- avity," or at least of "original sin." me modification of this tenet was pro- ulgated by Augustine himself in his tter contest with Pelagias. It was held at Adam in some way acted for the race, d that before the possibility of individual oice, every soul was alien from God. he sin of Adam was mystically imputed to and it was lost. It may be remarked, in ssing, that the earliest attempts to unciate a doctrine upon this point, how- er, avoided this notion by assuming that e soul before entrance upon earthly life d shared Adam's guilt by deliberate oice in a state of pre-existence. After e time of Augustine, as the doctrine of puted guilt was amplified, the idea be- me gradually accepted that the imputed ghteousness of Christ should make nends for the imputed sin of Adam. his accords well also with common ideas justice. If an imputed sin is to con- mn the race, it is quite equitable that an puted righteousness should save it. his idea of imputation apart from reali- es has its cloudy phase, however. There e sins which, whether imputed or not, e very real. They are not Adam's, but rs. Is an imputed righteousness our fficient cure?

The conception of the ancient church as that sanctification was an act of con- ecration to Christ, justification a refor- ation of character worked by Christ. As the first, the introductions of nearly all he epistles of the New Testament attest s truth. Was the idea as to the other accurate? It harmonizes well with the ea of "justification by faith," which has een called the foundation of the Protest- nt Reformation. Consecration is an ction, faith is an enduring attitude. The he may estatlish a formal relationship, but it is the part of the other to develop and mold the life.

In view of these apparently natural relationships, there is a charming naivete in the surprise of some modern theologians, sure of their own infallibility, at the "odd" inversion of terms which marks the writings of the early "Fathers," and at the peculiar way in which they "confounded" justification with sanctification.

In conclusion, let it be noted that an exception to the ordinary translation of "dikaio-oo" as "justify" occurs in Rev. 22:11 which, there being no possibility of giving it a hypodermic injection of "theology" has been rendered into the vernacular, "He that is righteous let him be rigtteous, let him be righteous still." Inasmuch as we are English and readily understand the Saxon tongue, would we lose anything if we heard less of justifying and more of making righteous?

DANGERS OF THE MINISTERIAL OFFICE.*

BY J. J. MORGAN.

It is not the aim of this address to mention all the dangers of the ministerial office, nor to fully discuss those herein mentioned. The discussion which is to follow is expected to cover these points.

The Century Dictionary defines a gentleman, "A man of good family; a man of gentle birth." The sixth definition is, "An apparatus used in soldering pewter ware." Between these two gentlemen, the one of gentle birth and the one used for soldering pewter ware, is room for great variety.

The same is true of the ministerial office. In it there is great variety. We may range all the way from the sexton to the bishop. But I wish to confine this address to the ministry of preaching, and even here there is great variety. In the city of London at the same time Liddon and Spurgeon, Joseph Porter and Newman Hall preached the Word. What a variety the ministry of our country and our church presents! We cannot have before us any one person as a model for all. Indeed, the first danger to the ministerial office is the tendency in some souls to mold all in one pattern. In the Established Church in England all the ministry dress and drawl alike, which makes the ministry tediously monotonous. The chief charm of the Disciples is the variety there seen. The apostles were not made into one mold, even under the personal influence of Jesus.

The second danger is a very marked disposition to undervalue the ministerial office on the part of the ministry. It is not an unusual thing to hear unappreciative comments made by them, which shows the low esteem in which it is held by them. We often hear it said, "I can make a living at something else;" i. e., I am in it for a living. It is more than a mere occupation. "That a man stand and speak of spiritual things to men." Said Carlyle, "It is beautiful. It is among the beautifulest, most touching things to be seen on earth. Whom have we to compare with him? A man making endeavor to save the souls of men. No public functionary is worthier than he."

Dr. John A. Broaddus, that princely man of God, said: "I do not envy our senators or legislators; I do not envy our statesmen or warriors; I do not envy our President or rich men, but I do envy your pastors. I would rather be pastor of a church than anything else." And Paul said, "I magnify mine office."

The next danger I mention is that the minister will undervalue himself. "We have this glory in earthen vessels." "The vessel is nothing; the minister is nothing; the message is all." This leads men sometimes to live a little below the best it is possible for them to attain. "What you are," said Emerson, "speaks so loud I can't hear what you say." The message is greatly affected by the messenger. He who preaches should be a superb man. He owes it to his people; he owes it to himself; he owes it to his fellow-ministers and to his Master to make the best of himself possible in every attainment, in purity, in knowledge, in spirituality, in goodness. "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace!"

Many years ago this act was passed by the Massachusetts Legislature: "A man should be converted and show some signs of spiritual life before he is licensed to preach the gospel." It ought to be in force still. Our Lord said to Peter, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."

A danger not so common as the last needs mention here. It is the danger of over self-esteem. I do not think this is common, but I have heard of some cases. A young man last winter was invited to dine with a preacher. He afterward reported the conversation: "He did nothing the whole time but compare himself with other ministers, and he always got the bouquet." This is very injurious to one who stands as the representative of Jesus, and leads to many vain and foolish things. He will appeal to the populace and to the galleries and seek his own exaltation. It is dangerous, fatally so, to the minister of the gospel. We are glad it is so very rare.

Another danger against which I wish to warn you is a tendency to exaggerate statement of facts in the pulpit. It is not a new weakness, but it is none the better for its age. It seems to be a law of nature that bad things grow worse and good things better with age. Jeremy Taylor speaks of a city of fifteen millions population! Daniel Webster said: "Not one in fifty can state a thing as it occurred, without exaggeration or diminution." And Burke said: "Every word in a sentence is one of the feet on which it walks. To lengthen or shorten one may change its course." Correct statement is difficult to obtain, but it is worth the effort.

Closely allied to this is the danger of extravagance of expression—high, overwrought language and extravagant imagery. Did you ever hear Isaac Errett or J. S. Lamar draw a scene? It was beautiful, chaste. Said Bro. Errett to the speaker just before his death: "I do not want to live till I am in the way of young men. I looked out at my window the other day, and I saw little leaves peeping out [it was spring] on some twigs. But old leaves were hanging on to other twigs and the young leaves had to push them out of the way."

Did any of you ever hear J. S. Lamar in his sermon on "Lights in the World" tell of the candle he read by in time of the war? "As it burned on, great sentinels stood round the light; the wick burned till it turned down and curved round all, obstructing the light, till I took the snuffers and trimmed them away. Brethren, keep your lights trimmed and burning." These were chaste and master-strokes. But too many daub the scene with overwrought language and tremendous physical effort. It is the mark of mastery to be chaste, reserved. Many years ago, Mr. Beecher said: "He who would be heard must paint pictures or tell stories." But remember, it is a gift to paint or tell stories. A story badly told or a picture badly painted detracts from the sermon, obscures the thought.

One says of Renan: "He very skillfully undermines Christianity by profusion of praise. He comes to the tomb of the Savior, not to weep and worship like the women of the gospel, but to stifle with profusion of spices. He does not deal a blow. No, he embalms, but the effect is the same."

One danger is the use of hackneyed, commonplace phrases, that detract from the sermon by giving it an antiquated appearance. I saw a little miss dressed up in her mother's wedding dress. She looked very antiquated. "Too much of the preaching of to-day seems to be the preaching of yesterday, in the language of yesterday." It will repay the minister to take the pains to rid their sermons of these set phrases.

I note another danger which, though not common, as I see it, sometimes appears and strews destruction in its path. I speak of unwholesome rivalries, sometimes running into jealousy, or close to it. Sometimes symptoms appear when we would least expect it. I only mention this, for it is too coarse to have a place in the heart of even a half-cultured ministry.

The failure to realize and rightly use its powers is one of the dangers of the ministry. If the consciousness of the power latent in the ministry now could be aroused, what could it not do in his name?

Like our fathers, ignorant of the powers that lay in the electricity about them, they did not summon it to service, so lies the unrealized, the undiscovered power of the ministry of Jesus Christ. "Nothing vice so dreads, nothing the knave so hates, as the ministry," said Parkhurst. "Not the press, not the publication, but the pulpit must clear the atmosphere." When we know we are right a sort of omnipotence takes possession of us and devils flee away.

This power carries with it tremendous responsibilities. The wrong use of power has wrought devastation in the world. O, what ruin lies in the wrong use of this God-given power of the ministerial office! Worse, if possible, than the disuse is the misuse of the power we hold. To you is this power essential, but examples, be it sadly said, are not wanting in the history of the ministry, of the grossest use of it. We believe, happily, the wrong use is fast passing, and we see to-day a solid front presented by those in the ministerial office in the uplifting of depraved and fallen, struggling humanity toward the image and likeness of the perfect man, Christ Jesus.

THE CROSS VERSUS CHRIST.

D. S. HENKLE.

A great majority of nominal Christians worship the cross more than the Christ. The cross is lifted up, and exhibited to the public gaze, while Christ is totaly obscured by the shadow of the cross. The doctrine of a redemption purchased as a sort of commodity on the cross, by Jesus Christ, has laid the foundation for this species of idolatry. The cross, as a symbol of this form of salvation or redemption has been in a measure substituted for the living Christ, who alone can save the soul. Faith in the doctrine of the blood of Christ as an atonement for sin can be professed by the vilest sinner on earth; and a profession of this faith may admit him to baptism and church membership. Expectation of reward or fear of punishment has caused thousands of persons to make a profession of this faith. Thousands of ministers of the gospel have no other conception of the religion of Christ than an acceptance of approved creeds, dogmas and doctrines. They do not receive the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto them, neither can they know them, because they are spiritually discerned.

The religion of Christ is a religion of life—spiritual life, God-life. No man can get the religion of Christ outside of Christ. Christ is the religion himself. His religion is eternal life. He is that life. Spiritual life, without which no one can be saved, is the direct product of God. The Word is the seed of life, Christ is the type after whom this life is formed, the life thus formed is Christ. This Christ-life is multiplied just as many times as there are children born from above. Christ was "the first-born of every creature." He was the grain of wheat (John 12:24) that fell into the ground and died, that it might bring forth much fruit. This fruit is the life begotten in the heart of the believer. This is the "new creature" of which Paul speaks. This is the life that Paul lived by the faith of the Son of God. This is "Christ in you the hope of glory." This is the answer to the prayer of the Master (John 17:21), "That they may all be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee." There is no salvation outside of Christ, nor can doctrines concerning Christ be substituted for him. He is the way. No man can go to the Father except through him. The plan of salvation, then, is Christ. He "is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." These graces are only to be had in him. His work is internal. He is revealed in the Christian, not by the Christian. The life that the Christian lives is the life of Christ. The "old man" has been crucified with Christ, and buried with him; the "new man" is the resurrection life of Christ. The process of salvation, then, is not a lifting up of the cross but of Christ. When Christ is found in the heart, he lives the subject into eternal life.

Those who try to imitate Christ, to act like Christ, and to look like Christ, will be miserable failures. The Christian is either a christ or a base counterfeit of him. The Christian is not the Christ who was anointed with the fullness of the Spirit, but a christ, the product of the same life that constituted his person. By living in Christ and Christ living in us we have as a result perfect unity—not union with him, but unity in him.

When this high standard shall have bee reached, both in doctrine and in practice we shall have one Lord, one faith, on baptism, and sectarianism shall be banishe into eternal oblivion.

Current Religious Though

Of the very simple, appropriate, im pressive address delivered at the funeral o Prince Bismarck, by "Pastor Westphal," published in the New York Observer, w reproduce the following paragraphs upo their merits:

Not yours alone, beloved, has been this loss How the whole German land, with our hon ored emperor at its head, is united in the sor row that mourns over this bier! And yet, while we sorrow over this painful separation, hav we not great cause for thankfulness as w stand beside the dead hero, this veteran o fourscore years and three? Must we not giv God thanks at the close of such a life as this which God hath followed with his goodness an mercy, and thus marvelously gathered th scattered threads of so long a life into th rounding out of his gracious plan toward thi man, and the perfecting of his Christian char acter? Did not his life, according to the word of the psalmist, become noble and precious because it was filled with labor and sorrow Has not his life been manifestly under the gra cious guidance of God, so that in view of it w may well say, "The counsel of the Lord i good and endureth forever?" Has not thi man on the battlefield of life achieved victories and gathered laurels as few have done? Wher the triumphs and burdens of his most respon sible office were laid aside, did he not by th side of his most beloved consort, and in th circle of his own household, find again true happiness and well-earned repose? And afte God had crowned with blessing his work an purposes for the beloved fatherland, did he no grant to him a quiet eventide of life in his own beloved Friedrichsruh? That restful eventide was indeed clouded by loss of the faithful partner of his joys and sorrows. Nevertheless, i was made glad by the precious family life tha circled round him, it was beautified by the love of those who were left to him. It was made glad by the honors which his imperial master ever and anon showered upon him. It was made glad by the reverence of the grea multitude who delighted to pay him the tribute of their gratitude. As an old ailmen broke out anew with intensest pain, and i was to be feared that life's last days would bring him a fearful and prolonged wrestle with death, he drew near to God with earnest prayers for deliverance. He begged for a quie death, a sweet release. Without any morta agony he has gone to a better world. He has died peacefully in his own Sachsenwald, he has fallen asleep in the presence of his whole assembled household. Therefore do we give thanks unto our God this day and say, He hath done all things well.

But would we not still have cause to mourn if we could in such an hour thank God for temporal blessings only? Were it not poor comfort if, when we lost our dear ones, we did not know that the immortal explains the mortal? That should be recognized by us here and now. Did not light eternal illumine his earthly life? The impression which the Christian nurture of his father's house made upon him in his youth he carried with him to his life's end. Not without a certain regard to the Christian doctrine of the Trinity did he choose for his motto, In trinitate robur; and in a firm faith in Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior, he has departed from us and rests with God. That faith his parents strove to impart—that consciousness of the dependence of God which a Schliermacher strove to deepen—that he himself has told us upheld him in carrying the fearful burden of responsibility laid upon him. In this soil grew the graces that seemed to us not only wonderful, but most attractive. What was it but his fear of God that made him fearless before men? What but his recognition of the will of God, that standeth firm and fast, made him firm and unyielding in holding by that which he believed to be right and good? Was it not his trust in God that lent him that truthful sincerity? Was it not out of his Christian consciousness that his humility grew, which made him so friendly and gracious toward the common people? His personal piety, which no one who came near to him could question, if it did not manifest itself ostentatiously, yet so wrougut in him that men felt themselves not only in the presence of a great man, but what was better, a man of the highest Christian character.

The picture of Alexander Campbell, which give on our first page this week, is repro- d from a photograph which, in turn, reproduced from a daguerrotype taken t the year 1860. During that year Mr. pbell visited Auburn, N. Y., and while e was the guest of Daniel C. Goodrich, for n he had this picture taken. Daniel drich was one of the elders of the church a pioneer of our cause in the state of New r. His son, Eugene C. Goodrich, who in Grand Rapids, and who spends his ners at Macatawa Park, showed the nal picture to the editor of this paper, and s suggestion has had a number of cabinet photographs made from it, from one of h this half-tone is made. The picture was n about six years before Mr. Campbell's h, and is here reproduced for the first . It brings out with distinctness the face features of one whom future historians recognize as one of the most important rs in the religious thought of the nine- th century. Bro. Goodrich has a few a photographs taken from the daguerrotype h he will supply to those who may wish at simple cost of reproduction.

—One of the best known of the younger pastors, who has been recently called from one important field to another writes, "I am very thankful that the ——— church sent a committee to ——— to ascertain the influence and effect of my preaching and pastoral work here. It is one of the joys of a minister's life that when he stands boldly for what is right the people will stand by him. I wish our churches would more generally follow this example. We preachers would then stand or fall according as our influence in any community has been felt for good or for bad or not at all." We join with this pastor in the wish that the example of the congregation referred to would become the general custom. In all cases where the preacher is not personally known to the congregation, it is far superior in every respect to the custom of inviting preachers to follow each other in a long procession of "trial sermons." A wise committee, on the ground where the preacher has lived and labored any length of time, will discover more as to the real character and ability of the preacher than they would receive from any number of "trial sermons." Such a practice would lead to longer and more satisfactory pastorates.

—P. A. Seguin, an ex-priest, whose membership is now in the University Place Church, Des Moines, Ia., has for some time been endeavoring to establish a home for ex-priests and ex-nuns, but is not succeeding as he would like. In a letter from F. L. Davis, of Dows, Ia., on this subject, he suggests to the churches of Iowa that the matter be taken up by the state board as a part of their missionary work, or that a special day be set apart for offerings for this special work. While there is no doubt as to the need for such a home and the goodness of the enterprise it is not certain that either of the suggestions made by Bro. Davis is practical. However, he has made the suggestion for the Iowa brethren and we are sure that they will deal justly and wisely with it if brought before them.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST thinks that "party names are a necessity," and so think those who believe in denominations.—Christian Leader.

The statement of the Leader omits an important qualification. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST "thinks that party names are a necessity" as long as parties exist. Does not the Christian Leader believe this? If not, why does he say, in the same editorial, that "a Baptist editor in debate with a Disciple, quoted the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST," etc.? Why this distinction? Why did not Bro. Bell say that "a disciple editor in debate with a disciple preacher," etc.? He wanted to be intelligible, and in order to be so he must make the very distinction he criticises the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for making! Such are the inconsistencies of the anti-distinction craze.

—If the doctrine of repentance after death is a Baptist doctrine we have not read in the past as we ought. Yet it has come to us by way of the grapevine telegraph that the head and front of one of our leading Baptist colleges announced himself in a public address before a Sunday-school gathering, not very long ago, as believing such a doctrine. As soon as we get the facts spelled out and the notes all in, "we'll print 'em."—Baptist News.

Look out for a heresy trial in the columns of the Baptist News! By the way, what is the "Baptist doctrine" concerning eschatology? Where will we find it formulated? We take it, from the foregoing, that there must be some well-defined position on the subject among Baptists from which they are not likely to depart. Will the News tell us where that position is stated in an authentic form?

—Hiram College has started out to find the names of 50,000 persons who will unite in an effort to find for it an endowment, and the articles appearing in our columns each week from its president, E. V. Zollars, are preparatory to that work. This is a great movement and if successful will mark a new epoch in the history of that institution.

A PREACHER'S REPORT

Interesting Statement by Elder Joel H. Austin of Goshen, Ind.

"I was a victim of catarrh and had almost constant pain in my head. The trouble was gradually working down on my lungs. I was weak and irresolute. My wife had the grip and Hood's Sarsaparilla cured her. After this I had the same disease and resorted to Hood's. In a short time the aches and pains were relieved and I also saw the medicine was helping my catarrh. In six weeks I ceased to have any further trouble with it and I am now a well man. The pains and bloating I had in my limbs are gone and I am relieved of a heart trouble. I am thankful for a medicine so intelligently compounded and so admirably adapted to the needs of the system." —The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, of St. Louis, is one of the very best of Disciple papers, but it is not satisfying all of its constituency, because it is suspected of being a little shaky on the subject of baptismal remission.—Journal and Messenger.

We would regret to know that we are "suspected of being a little shaky on the subject of baptismal remission." We repudiate it as promptly as we do baptismal regeneration. So does every other intelligent advocate of our religious position. We have never uttered an uncertain note on this question and should not be considered "shaky" on it. Only God can forgive sins. To thrust an ordinance to the front, where Christ ought to be, is one of the mistakes of Christendom. We believe that a convicted sinner, seeking for a "good conscience" and the assurance of remission of sins, should submit to baptism as a command of Christ (1 Pet. 3:21), and as one of the commands on which he promises remission of sins (Mark 16:16; Acts 2:38, et al.). But this is not baptismal remission any more than it is repentance-remission or faith-remission. Indeed, faith-remission would be less objectionable, because faith includes the other conditions. But we would not give even faith this place. It is only the channel through which God acts in the pardon of sin. Let us give Christ the pre-eminence in all things.

—Prof. B. A. Jenkins has been spending the month of September at Macatawa, dividing his time about equally between steering a sailboat over Macatawa Bay and studying the New Testament in Greek, preparatory to his work in Butler Bible College. If he proves as successful in his professional chair in guiding his students through the problems of New Testament exegesis as he is in managing a sailboat in a stiff breeze, his boys need not fear theological shipwreck.

—The Sunday-school Union, of this city, is organizing a class to be composed of pastors, superintendents and teachers of the Sunday-schools, of this city, for Bible study, and has secured D. R. Dungan, pastor of Mt. Cabanne Church, for its teacher. The first meeting of this class will be in the Holland Building, West Side, 7th St., between Olive and Pine Streets, on Saturday, October 1st, at 3:30 to 4:30 P. M. This is an important movement, and the selection of Dr. Dungan for the teacher is not only a compliment to him and to our people in this city, but also a selection that means much for the class and for the Bible-schools and churches of the city.

—The venerable John G. Fee, of Berea, Ky., writes: "I am pleased beyond power of expression with your reply to the question of J. S. Stone as presented in your issue of Sept. 8th. There is a simple basis for union—faith in Christ and baptism in his name. God give you strength to stand ever for this simple but true basis of union."

—While there is much trash, slush and villainy in the newspapers of the land, yet in them appear valuable articles on all subjects, scientific, moral and religious, and if these could be preserved and systematically arranged in a scrapbook the reader would soon be amply rewarded for his trouble in the unique and valuable books he would be able to add to his library.

—Persons who love to do little deeds of kindness for invalids have an opportunity in the Invalid's Visitor, formerly the Shut-in-Visitor, a monthly published by Kate Sumner Burr, at Williamson, N. Y. The unique feature of this paper is its letters from invalids in each number, in which they comfort and cheer each other. Of course you will send them the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and Our Young Folks in addition to the Visitor for their comfort. What a grand work it would be to see that all shut-ins or invalids were thus regularly supplied with all three of these journals.

—The Cumberland Presbyterian, Sept. 22nd, says that an elder in the Ushigome church, Tokio, Japan, who became convinced th only immersion is baptism and so taught in t Sunday-school, was removed from his offi for the offense by the session and the acti was sustained by the Presbytery and the Syno and yet in the same article it is insisted th "the mode of baptism shall not be made essential!" Why then was the elder remov from his office? In teaching immersion he w scriptural, catholic and safe. Sprinkling i Christian baptism is unscriptural, sectari and dangerous.

—W. B. Taylor, of Chicago, who writes so enthusiastically in this issue of our paper concerning the Bethany C. E. —The following story, which appeared in a recent number of the Religious Herald, is remarkable for its cunning and crafty use of the deceptive art and shows how incompetent any man or set of men is to pass judgment upon the moral and spiritual state of those professing to be converted to Christ. It takes the fiery trials of daily life to reveal the true heart of the man. This story was told the Religous Herald by Dr. J. C. Hiden, of Richmond, Va.:

Dr. Broaddus was once preaching in a meeting in which considerable interest was manifested, and a number of persons confessed their faith in Christ. In those days it was common for candidates for baptism to tell their experience. When a number of candidates had told their experience and been received for baptism, a young man in the gallery—a wild, wicked, reckless fellow—said to a companion sitting near him: "Pshaw! that is all foolishness. I could go up there to that bench, and give in as good an experience as any of them." "No, you couldn't," said his companion. "Well, I'll bet you five dollars that I'll do it." And the bet was taken. It was some little time before another invitation was given; and meantime the companion had contrived a note to the preacher, telling him of the bet. When the invitation was given again, the young man went forward, and was at once confronted by Dr. Broaddus, who held the note in his hand. "Did you make that bet?" "Yes," said the young man, "and that bet was the cause of my conviction. When I began to think of the horrible wickedness of my conduct, I was overwhelmed with grief, and I am here to confess my sin, and to accept Jesus Christ as my Savior." He acted all the signs of the deepest penitence, was received and baptized, and won the five dollars. Upon the whole, I think that was the most daring piece of wickedness I ever heard of, and I was not surprised when Bro. Broaddus told me the young man died a most miserable death.

—We print elsewhere an article on Chautauqua from Dr. Battle, of Virginia, clipped from the Religious Herald. Our readers will enjoy it, not only for the high compliment paid by a distinguished Baptist minister, of conservative views, to Dean H. L. —The suggestion made by J. Fraise Richard, of Washington City, in our last number, in relation to the systematic arrangement of periodical literature in our national library, is a vastly important one. A great stack of journals on file is a staggering object to one in search of a valuable article in some unknown number, whereas a classification of the articles from week to week would not only facilitate the reader's object, but would stimulate the search for knowledge. It seems to us that the suggestion is a practical one and susceptible of wide application.

—A. M. Chamberlain's study of "Justification" in this paper will be read with interest, being a somewhat vigorous criticism upon the orthodox doctrine of "Imputed Righteousness."

—We want to say, "Them's my sentiments," and add a loud amen! to the following plain words from the New York Observer, of Sept. 1st:

Alcholism ruins the constitution and character of the individual, and thus inevitably undermines the vigor and virtue of the state. Sapping the strength of the republic, by just so much it renders progress more difficult and success more uncertain.

Therefore, there is nothing either patriotic or sacred in the rum traffic. "Prejudice" against it may well continue to grow. It is un-American as well as ungodly. A barroom in this city bears the name of, "The American Flag." Another calls itself "The School." But what right has the saloon as saloon, in other words as the destroyer of the nation's best interests, to the proud symbol of nationality and freedom? And what sort of a "school" must that be where glasses rattle over a bar and youth learns lessons of disorder and riot? The truth is that Americanism is in peril most of all from alcoholism. And the proper thing for our people to do is to declare of this pernicious evil with a mighty emphasis, "We cannot longer afford it!"

—The article in this paper on the frequent abuse of the phrase "Cross of Christ" should not be overloooked. Just such gross ideas as are here pointed out are great hindrances to the growth of spirituality in any life or church.

—A. B. Maston, editor of the Australian Christian, writing of his visit to Lexington, Ky., while in this country last summer, says:

While in the city I have come in contact with the leaders in the educational enterprise, and have been deeply impressed with the great influence which they in this institution must wield. Bro. J. J. Haley came from Cynthiana to visit with me and attend the commencment exercises. Like the rest of humanity Bro. Haley shows slightly the ravages of time, but his heart and mind remain young. We visited together the most of one day and talked much of men and things in Australia. Bro. Hugh McLellan made a journey to Lexington to see me. Bro. McLellan has become a ripe scholar and a useful, progressive preacher in the very best sense. Better than that, he is not satisfied with past attainments, but his motto is, "Onward." Will Edmonds also made a journey to see me. Bro. Edmonds is now preaching and ls doing a steady, quiet work. To meet and talk with some of the leading minds of the Reformation has been a great joy to me.

—The following editorial advice of the Chicago Record to political parties and politicians is wise, just and timely and we trust will be heeded. It ought to be the intuitive, conscientious duty of every true American:

The war that recently has come to a close was not a Republican war nor a Democratic war. It was an American war, and as such it received the united support of the American people. The effort to make such a war an issue in politics, therefore, is likely to redound to the disadvantage of the party that tries to degrade patriotism into partisanship. The war is over. It was supported by all parties and by citizens regardless of party while it lasted. Now that it is a thing of the past the people will not relish having it made a cause of dissension and party bickering. Naturally a successful war tends to benefit the party in power. Let the Republicans consciously attempt to make party capital out of the war, however, and the people will resent it, and the natural tendencies will be more than counterbalanced by the revulsion in sentiment. Let the Democrats, on the other hand, pursue a nagging policy and make it manifest that their chief concern about the war is the fear that it may be productive of benefit to their opponents and their fears certainly will be fulfilled in liberal measure. That party will profit most from the war spirit that is in reality most patriotic in its attitude toward the war and that shows the least disposition to make it serve partisan advantage. Now that the war is over the candidates should return to the discussion of questions that should naturally constitute the issues of the campaign had there been no war. The party that is quickest to do this, and to turn entirely away from the war as a matter having anything to do with politics, will strengthen itself in popular favor. The people doubtless will be glad to honor with their votes any individual war horoes who may chance to be candidates, like Roosevelt in New York and Wheeleer in Alabama, but they do not care to have the war spirit played upon by stay-at-home politicians for their own personal and partisan benefit.

—The Standard, Chicago, says that a clergyman of that city received the following reply, along with many others, to a question sent out asking the business men and professional men of all classes why they did not attend church. It is worthy of careful thought:

The church is a dead place. It is too slow. Literary clubs talk books, athletes talk athletics and politicians talk politics in a way that makes one believe that they mean business. But the people of the church have not spirit enough to exchange ideas with their fellow-members. They can get excited over pink parties and ice cream socials, but that seems to be their limit. Now if the church people cannot get interested in religion, why should they expect us to show any interest in it?

—The Literary Digest quotes the following scathing remarks of the Belfast Witness (Presbyterian) on the present state of the evangelical churches:

The Belfast Witness is convinced that the victory of the evangelical over the sacerdotal is "delayed if not hindered by the miserable divisions and subdivisions of the Evangelicals," and that "as matters now stand, Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist, Baptist, are overlapping each other like weasels, competing with one another like rival shopkeepers, countermining one another like armies at war; proselytizing and sheep-stealing instead of making aggressions on the unsaved."

—In answer to a question in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Sept. 8th, the following statement occurs: "It is nowhere stated in what manner any apostle baptized his candidate—whether he went down into the water with him or stood on the edge of pool or stream and baptized him." How about the following Scripture: "And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptized him' (Acts 8:38.) Homer nods sometimes. C. P. EVANS.

As the Philip who baptized the Eunuch was not an apostle, however, the Homer who nods in this particular instance is not the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—The Missouri state convention is in session this week, at Nevada, Mo. All the indications are favorable to a great convention. The editor in chief of this paper left Monday night for Nevada. Some of the St. Louis pastors will be present. But we are sorry to learn that the condition of Sister Abbott is such that Bro. Abbott will not be able to attend. Her departure is hourly expected at this writing. This will be sad news for the convention and a doubly deep sorrow to our secretary. But God can sanctify all our sorrows to our good and to the glory of his name.

—A partnership advertising club has been formed by the School of Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., somewhat after the chain letter method, for the purpose of selling Pres. Johnson's books to sustain the school. The new hall for this school has been completed and was dedicated Sept. 24th. About $400 indebtedness is on the building, for the payment of which Bro. Johnson is hoping and praying. To meet this he is making extra propositions on his books. As souvenirs of the dedication of the new hall beautifully printed cabinet size pictures of Bro. and Sister Johnson are being given to all inquiring friends and patrons of the school, which now has one hundred and forty students enrolled.

—Dr. F. M. Kirkham, editor of the Christian Oracle, will announce this week that he has sold his stock and entire interest in the Christian Oracle to J. H. Garrison, the editor of this paper. Dr. Kirkham, in the trade, takes the stock in the Pacific Christian Publishing Co. owned by J H. Garrison, and will remove to the Coast early in October, to take charge of the Pacific Christian. The Christian Oracle is to be continued, but fuller announcements will be made soon as to the plans which are now in process of maturing. Of course this arrangement in no way affects Bro. Garrison's relation to this paper nor to the Christian Pub. Co.

Correspondence.

Santa Cruz Letter.

In addition to unrivaled sea-bathing attrac-ons, Santa Cruz, Cal., has "Chautauqua" ttractions that are yearly becoming more and ore important. It is a favorite convention lace for literary and religious gatherings. he "Disciples" stand in the forefront in is regard. They have their annual gather-gs here, to which from four to six hundred elegates come from far and near to spend two more weeks together in the consideration of ve topics, and sniffing the salt air from the reat ocean at our back doors. Their meetings re held in Garfield Tabernacle, which is situ-ed at the end of the electric car line of this ty, one and a half miles southwest of the usiness center. The Baptists hold their an-ual meeting at Twin Lakes, a little village bout two miles southeast of Santa Cruz, on Monterey Bay, where they also have a large uilding to accommodate the Baptists as they ather here to rest and gain new strength, oth spiritual and physical. The Catholics ave their meeting ground at Hotel Del Mars, bout three miles east of Santa Cruz, on ay, while the mere pleasure-seekers ensconce hemselves at Santa Cruz, Seabright or Capi-ola. The Methodists have their Chautauqua t Pacific Grove, on the other side of the bay, ut they are seriously considering the advisabil-y of pulling up stakes and coming to Santa ruz and growing up with the country. We ope they may see their way clear to do so, ot only for their own good, but for the intel-ctual and religious stimulus that it would ive this community.

I wish to speak more particularly of the hristian gatherings and surroundings. I took ccasion to visit Garfield Park one Thursday orning, riding out on my wheel, first past he Sea Beach Hotel, then up over the hill ward the southwest, passing a number of cypress haystacks," which would strike a tranger as something out of the usual order. he Monterey cypress is peculiar. It is a vig-rous grower, and when trimmed back will row into itself until the foliage is a dense ass of living green. The people here have a ashion of carving the dense tops into hay-oodles, arches, pyramids and grotesque orms of all kinds. The cypress is also exten-ively used as a hedge. In this form it is rimmed back to about three feet in height, nd two and a half in width, and the thick ranches are so dense and smooth that a per-on could spread a laprobe on top and lie own on same as on a mattress.

The palms also would look strange to you t. Louisans, as would the eucalyptus and epper and other strange trees, not seen in the ast. But we cannot stop to look at the urious sights, for Cowell's Warehouses stand thwart our path, and we have to run around hem. We pass Bishop Warren's fine resi-ence and grounds, known as "The Break-rs," on the cliffs overlooking the Harbor of Santa Cruz. Here the good Methodist Bishop pends frequent vacations, studying theology nd the beauties of nature. We soon pass a ine private park and residence known as Phelan's Cottage," and then by the Light-ouse Point, where the bay ends and the cean begins. Here the road turns to the vest, and a fine road it is, both for driving and wheeling. It is known as the "Cliff Drive." To the left is the Pacific Ocean with its rest-ess waves bombarding the cliffs, and some-imes throwing spray high into the air. That agoda-looking building about half a mile arther to the west is at the terminus of the lectric car line, and the locality there is known as "Vue de l'Eau" ("View of the Water," or in other words, "View of the Ocean"). The building has been erected with good, strong windows, and is two stories high, and is a favorite resort in the stormy days of winter when tide and wind unite to get up a display of waterworks that knocks Niagara silly, and makes the spectator conscious that he stands in the presence of the mightiest power on the globe—the old ocean in a storm. It is worth going to see, but such exhibitions never come this time of the year, for the weather in California is governed by law; in the summer it never rains, and in the winter it rains when it listeth, but not inordinately. Nevertheless, there are days and days when it goes at it in earnest, and then it is the time, generally, when the ocean raves. To see the great rollers crawling up on to the ledges of the cliffs, and the next moment exploding into spray, and then pouring back into the ocean like giant cataracts, and the performance continually repeated, is a sight once seen never to be forgotten.

Now from this pagoda if you will look up the street toward the north (distant about 80 rods), you will see Garfield Tabernacle, which looks as if it stood athwart the street, but it does not; the street (on which the street car line runs) goes around the tabernacle. The tabernacle is octagon in form, and stands in the center of a circular plot of ground containing five acres, more or less, which plot is laid out in walks and flower beds. The tabernacle fronts toward the ocean, and vistas of ocean can be seen from the park in several directions. It is an ideal place for any kind of a convention, and more particularly so for a religious gathering, where one's thoughts are readily directed from the contemplation of God's works to God's Word.

A high range of hills can be seen through the windows to the northwest, about a mile distant. These look unimportant to the observer who is not in the secret of their usefulness to Santa Cruz. They lock out the too cold winds from the ocean, which otherwise would sweep through our fair city and make it as uncomfortably cold in the summer as San Francisco, where the wide gap between the mountains permits the Bay of San Francisco to come inland, and opens wide the Golden Gate to the raw, cold winds from the ocean.

But to return to Garfield Park. The land was originally donated by Santa Cruzans to the Christian Church of the state of California for religious purposes, with the understanding that lots be sold, and the money so raised be appropriated in the erection of cottages and the tabernacle. The prices of the lots ranged from $105 to $150, and the cottages were to cost not less than $400 each. As a matter of fact none of the cottages have cost less than $500, and some of the buildings erected are fine residences, and are permanent homes for the owners. The first year fifteen cottages were erected, and every year has seen additions to the number. These are for the most part owned by private parties, and are occupied by them during the "season," while many are for rent at from $4 to $10 for the season.

The attendance at annual meetings is from all parts of the state of California, save the southern portion — perhaps one-fourth of the state. They come by ocean, and rail, and wheeled conveyance, and even by the now almost omnipresent "bicycle." Some of the visitors camp in their wagons, and do their own cooking on the grounds, thus making the vacation quite inexpensive. A temporary grocery is established on the grounds where provisions, etc., can be obtained at Santa Cruz prices. There is also a dining tent on the grounds, where people who do not care to be bothered with cooking can get their meals at popular prices—five meal tickets for a dollar. In addition to the cottages there are tents for rent at very reasonable prices, and on the whole this place furnishes a splendid outing for the people from the interior who need just this kind of a vacation to counteract the depressing influence of the long, dry, hot summers which are almost as bad as you have in St. Louis.

The convention is called the "Christian State Meeting," and included in this are the following: the Ministerial Association, the Sunday-school Convention, the Christian Endeavor Convention, the Church Convention—which latter embraces reports of the various organizations of the Christian Churches of the state. The attendance this year was not up to the average, owing to the fact that this has been a bad year for the farmers and fruit growers. I was told that there were about 400 persons in attendance from abroad. The meetings last over two weeks, but many of those who come stay longer than that to enjoy the fine climate of Santa Cruz and the exhilerating sea bathing.

The sessions are held in the forenoon and at night, leaving the afternoons open for committee work, if needed, and fishing or bathing in the bay, driving into the mountains, visiting friends or the Big Trees and other attractions which are lying around loose all over Santa Cruz County. A bonfire near the ocean front one night during the sessions attracts a large crowd, and with its illumination, singing, stories, speeches and experiences, furnishes a scene long to be remembered.

The Christian Church in the state numbers about 1,800, and is increasing in numbers very rapidly.

The writer was present on the forenoon that had been set apart for passing "resolutions." The minister who had been appointed to deliver the sermon kindly gave way to permit a fuller consideration of the various resolutions. To illustrate how near Christian denominations come to each other there was not one of the resolutions but that might have been offered at almost any of the denominational conventions, and the writer, Congregationalist as he is, could have heartily supported and voted for each and every one of them — provided, of course, that the local application for some of them would have to be apropos. In fact, at one stage of the proceedings he forgot that he was only a spectator, and voted a rousing "aye" upon the "Anti-saloon Resolution," with all the rest of the audience. God grant that Christian denominations may cling closer to Christ, and let go their sectarianism whenever they can.

MEN OF THE HOUR—JOHN KENSIT.

One of the foremost of the men of the hour in this country is Mr. John Kensit. Indeed, Mr. W. T. Stead calls him "the Protestant hero of the hour." He well deserves the appellation, for he has taken up the sword of Puritanism and has gone forth to war with indomitable valor against the Ritualists, who are threatening to effect the conversion of England to the Pope. He is a Londoner, who was born in 1853 and has never been away from London, except for a few days, in his life. He is a well-known bookseller of Paternoster Row and is also a conspicuous temperance worker. Strange to say, when a lad of 15 John Kensit was a member of a Ritualistic choir, at St. Lawrence, Jewry, near the Guildhall in the heart of the city, under the stormy rectorship of the Rev. B. Morgan Cowie, now Dean of Exeter and one of the Queen's chaplains. At this time he became convinced that Ritualistic services are essentially Popish. When Dr. Creighton was appointed, not long since, Bishop of London, Mr. Kensit boldly went to Bow Church and publicly protested against the confirmation of the new prelate on the ground of alleged Ritualistic practices. This incident made an immense sensation in London, and it was the opening of the present exciting campaign, in which Kensit is the renowned leader. He accused the new bishop in public of a desire to undo the glorious work of the Reformation, which Ridley, the then bishop of London, and a noble army of martyrs, laid down their lives to accomplish. Bishop Creighton replied by wearing both cope and mitre in St. Paul's at his first ordination of candidates for the ministry. Thus the spiritual war began which is convulsing the country. There have during the summer been lively riots in churches and in the open air. These proceedings are not always to the credit of the Protestant party, who are somewhat unfortunate in their allies. They go in bands to Ritualistic churches to carry on the "Kensit Crusade," but they have been receiving the undesirable assistance of the "Gideonite Band," which consists of a lot of roughs who have offered their services simply from delight in being mixed with public disturbances. In several parts of England, when the clergy have appeared to begin service, arrayed in vestments like the priest of Baal, an uproar has instantly commenced and the scenes ensuing have been such as to baffle description. Books and cushions are flung about on such occasions and the clergy have even been spat upon! In consequence, threats of retaliation are now heard on the other side and Mr. Kensit is warned that he will be shot at with revolvers if he repeats his exploits which created such a sensation at St. Ethelbarg's, Bishopsgate and St. Cuthbert's, Kensington. At the latter he performed his celebrated feat of snatching the cross from the altar when it was being kissed and adored by the clergymen. On that occasion there was a fight in the church to the accompaniment of hysterics and fainting on the part of ladies, and Kensit was taken into custody by the police. He was brought up before the court on the charge of brawling and was fined and then released on the promise that he would do nothing further for two months, during which he would wait to see if the bishops would exercise their authority in checking the Popish pranks going on in Anglican Churches. The time is past, the bishops have done nothing at all except to put forth a few platitudinarian manifestos, at which the country is laughing, and now Kensit is brandishing the ecclesiastical tomahawk and is starting on the warpath with fiery declarations of hostility. He sent out in advance a cloud of skirmishers in the shape of seventy "Wicliffeite preachers," for whose support he has collected a large sum of money. These are now going through the land in all directions, proclaiming the principles of the Reformation and scattering literature of Kensit's publication. Public feeling is rising high and stormy scenes are feared at the approaching church congress, to be held at Bradford.

ANOTHER MAN OF THE HOUR—THE SIRDAR.

Sir Herbert Kitchener is at this moment the talk of the earth. In him another great general has arisen amongst our men of war. You Americans have lately concluded a war in which you have done the human race the beneficent work of ridding fair territories of the accursed domination of Spain. But Mahdism was even more infernal, and it has fallen to the lot of Britain to crush it to death on the desert sands out of which the sceptre sprang up. There is a curious analogy between the two wars. The enemy has in each case been wiped out with infinitesimal loss to the Anglo-Saxon side. The viper of barbarism has in each case been stamped on by the heel of Christian civilization. But there will be a very serious sequel, also, in each case. America has to deal with grave problems in the disposition of the future for Cuba and the Philippines. She had simply better keep them under her absolute control. England has to face that crucial question of the control of Egypt. She will never get out of Egypt, let the rest of Europe say what it pleases. But Europe may have a great deal to say. The destiny of England is to clear a road for civilization from Alexandria to Capetown, and she will have to do it, whether she may wish to undertake the stupendous task or shirk it. Nations are not their own arbiters or umpires. France played both the coward and the fool when she left both Egypt and England in the lurch in the hour of trouble over the rebellion of Arabi Pasha, and vainly will she now fret and fume at the continued occupation of the basin of the Nile by British troops. Seated on both banks of the Nile and seated there for all time as long as the present era of history lasts, she must remain. This is part of the mighty program of Anglo-Saxon advance to the supremacy of the world in which America is beginning to take her vast share side by side with Britain and her wonderful colonies. But England's trouble will come. The carnal "Beast" Powers, those great military despotisms have shown their claws and teeth in grim array during the tragic period of the sufferings of Armenia, Greece and Crete. God has not done with the infernal Sultan, although the sanctimonious kaiser was not ashamed to pat that colossal murderer on the back and to send him a gallery of nice German family portraits. Providence will exact a heavy reckoning from the pious German despot. Meantime, England pursues one folly, which must also cost us dear. We have taken Omdurman, avenged the "Hero of Khartoum," and our army has, on the Sunday after that wonderful victory, chanted Gordon's belated requiem to the hoarse accompaniment of nineteen minute guns. But we are blundering on in the muddle of the Concert of Crete, and now we hear this morning that the beautiful Turks have gone mad with religious frenzy and have murdered our consul and several soldiers at Candia. The Eastern question smoulders all the time. That Cretan tragedy, though it is on a small scale, will spoil all the profit which Lord Salisbury would have reaped from the victory of Sir Herbert Kitchener. Before this letter reaches my American readers the question may be settled, "Where is the Khalifa?" He has dropped on the sands of the Soudan many of those 400 wives who formed his harem. He it was who after Gordon's death ordered the massacre of men, women and children in Khartoum. The only society in this world fit for such a perfect hell hound is that of the butcher of the Bosphorus. But there seems to be no atonement in this world for such crimes as those committed in Armenia, the Soudan and Cuba.

IS ARMAGEDDON POSTPONED?

Americans seem to be taking the same view generally as Englishmen of the now famous rescript of the Tzar. The demand for a congress to consider the possibility of universal peace is probably due to a double initiative. There is a beneficent power behind the throne in the case of Nicholas II. in the person of his beautiful Anglo-German wife, the Empress Alix, who is well known to be determined to be a guardian of peace. Britain and Russia will never fight while she lives, if she can prevent war. But, although this beautiful irenicon does infinite credit to the heart of the Tzar, is it for a moment possible to believe that the high official advisers of the Emperor of Russia are simple and sincere in their sympathy with him? Not a statesman now living in the world has been more deceitful, arrogant and provoking than Mouravieff, the very minister who puts forth this rescript on behalf of his imperial master. Russian statesmen care nothing for the lives of the common people. Some of these gentlemen said in cold blood at the time when the last Russo-Turkish war began, that they calculated on spending the lives of thirty thousand of their own soldiers in forcing the passage of the Danube! It is not the sacrifice of hecatombs of victims that these beautiful bureaucrats care at all about. Russian, German and French officers are generally alike reckless of the spilling of blood and the waste of precious lives in honor of the Moloch of war. The world will realize that soon enough. But one thing has lately happened which shocked the political ruffians and nearly broke their diplomatic hearts. When you Americans were at war with Spain the four great Continental Powers had concocted a lovely plan for preventing the United States from reaping the fruits of the expected victory, just as Russia, Germany and France had succeeded in robbing Japan of the reward of her victory over China. But England was not caught a second time. When overtures were made to our government to join this delectable conspiracy, Mr. Balfour from the Foreign Office (Lord Salisbury being out of England), categorically and sternly informed the Powers concerned that the immediate action of England would be to put the British fleets at the disposal of America! I may tell you that wherever I go, all the Englishmen I meet are proud of that message. It has established Mr. Balfour in paramount esteem with his countrymen. And now what has this to do with the Tzar's rescript? Very much. His ministers have been roughly awakened by the terror of any sort of real alliance between England and America; that, whatever shape it may take, it is a sort of threatening of the day of judgment for the despots who are throttling all liberty of the people on the Continent. Yes, this is really why Russia desires peace. I love the Russian people, knowing them well. But the brute diplomacy of Russia I abhor with a pure and perfect hatred. Let us not imagine that the Great Grizzly Bear has become suddenly transmuted into an Angel of Peace!

New York Letter.

On Saturday, Sept. 10th, Bro. and Sister A. L. Chapman sailed from this port to Constantinople as missionaries, and on Saturday, the 17th, Miss Mildred Franklin, of Bedford, Indiana, and Dr. McNiel, of Des Moines, Iowa, sailed away on the good ship Anchoria, of the Anchor Line, for their field of labors in India. These young ladies spent several days in New York, and on Sunday evening, the 11th, occupied the pulpit at the 169th Street Church, to the great delight of our congregation. They go with the well-wishes of a host of Disciples of the Lord in this city, who will not forget them at the throne of heavenly grace.

The time for our great Chattanooga convention is almost at hand. Let all who read the New York Letter prepare to go if possible; and if you can't go, get ready to send some one to represent you and your congregation in this convocation of the saints. Every preacher among us ought to go. It will rest him, fill him with zeal and strengthen him for nobler endeavor for months to come, and will be a blessed memory in all the future. I lived and preached in Chattanooga at one time, and can testify that it is a delightful place in which to sojourn. Chattanooga is all historic ground, its scenery is beautiful and its people hospitable. The people of the East and North should go down in strong numbers; their presence in the South will do much good toward the inspiration of their brethren in that section of the country. May God bless this convention and make it the greatest and best in the history of our work!

In the death of Dr. John Hall at Bangor, in Ireland, on the 7th, one of the most prominent and honored of American preachers was taken away. If he had lived until in the autumn he would have completed fifty years in the ministry, and he had about decided to retire from the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian pulpit at that time. He began to preach before he was twenty years of age. He came as the commissioner of the Irish Presbyterian Church to the American General Assemblies in 1867, and after occupying the then vacant pulpit of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in this city, he was called as its pastor; hence he was pastor of that church thirty-one years. When he came to New York his salary was fixed at $6,000 in gold (gold being worth $1.30) and a parsonage. Afterward it was increased to $10,000, and since 1880 it has been $15,000. This, we say, is a large salary, but the demands on Dr. Hall were heavy and he frequently responded with a liberal hand. A good woman in his church several years ago settled an income of $3,000 on him, and his wedding fees and such like brought his annual income up to something over $20,000. His congregation, it is said, represents $400,000,000. Their church property at Fifth Avenue and 55th Street cost more than $1,000,000. Under his personal direction the charities of his great, rich church were widespread. They supported five missions and institutions of charity in and about New York, besides giving liberally to general missionary work. His congregation usually gave $30,000 a year to home missions. Dr. Hall's strong point was in his faithfulness as pastor and clear and loyal pulpit administrations. His work was heavy and he did it well. He held a large place in the affections of New York; his memory is honored.

The New York public schools reopened on the 12th with greatly increased attendance. The Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx on July 3rd registered 199,354 pupils, and admitted on Sept. 12th 26,155, making a total register of 220,431. There are school sittings for 227,658 pupils, but owing to the congestion of the population in certain sections some schools are overcrowded and others are not full. Consequently, 3,547 pupils were refused admission and 11,074 had to be put into half-day classes on the day of opening. This compels 14,621 children of these two Boroughs to be turned all or a part of the day into the streets, and that, too, in those districts of the city where, above all others, children should not be compelled to live in the streets. This will result in irreparable evil to many a child. Other public improvements should be postponed if necessary, but not so with the improvements and rearrangements necessary for the accommodation of every child of school age in the city. Failure at this point is a crime against children and against civilization—against the home, the state and the church of God. School-teachers all over the country should be paid well and promptly. Schoolhouses should be thoroughly equipped and every child of proper age should be compelled to attend and, moreover, the Bible should be taught in our schools—in this is our national security and safety.

The seventieth birthday of Count Tolstoi was celebrated on Thursday evening, Sept. 8th, at the St. Dennis Hotel, by about one hundred guests. Dr. H. M. Leipziger presided and spoke of the impossibility of divorcing literature and life. In referring to the remarkable fact that the recent message of peace to the nations should come from the Czar of despotic Russia, he said he did not doubt that it was in a large measure the result of the life and work of Tolstoi. Among the speakers were R. W. Gilder, Bolton Hall, Joseph Jefferson, Hall Cain, John Swinton, E. H. Crosby and I. Zangueill. Mr. Zangueill said one of the things for which every one owed gratitude to Tolstoi was that he had removed the last trace of the idea that the novelist was only a kind of performing poodle to amuse the public. This telegram was sent to the noted author: "One hundred Americans, dining in your honor, send greeting."

Bro. J. S. Myers, the new pastor of the First Church of the Disciples of Christ at Philadelphia, is starting into his work with the hope of a large success. We sincerely desire that he and that glorious old church may succeed admirably in extending the Redeemer's kingdom.

Bro. W. C. Payne, of the 56th Street Church in this city, is planning to organize an afternoon Sunday-school about October 1st in that church. He thinks there is a large field for such an enterprise in that community. We rejoice in this forward movement and hope for its success. Sister W. C. Payne, our new C. W. B. M. state president, and Sister Jennie Encell, the secretary, organized an auxiliary of twenty-four members at the Lenox Avenue Church on Lord's day evening, Sept. 18th, and are going to Green Point, Brooklyn, this week, to organize one there. The outlook for the work at 169th Street is bright this autumn. We expect a season of good work.

The 10th was set apart by the church at Niagara Falls for the dedication of their new house of worship. Bro. F. W. Norton, the hard-working pastor, and his congregation, are to be congratulated on the success achieved in this excellent enterprise. We rejoice with them. Here are congratulations to you, Bro. Norton, and to your flock. October 16th is the appointed time for the opening of the new church at Brockton, Mass., where Bro. G. A. Reinl has toiled so heroically for several years. This band of Disciples of Jesus has sacrificed, and great have been the sacrifices of their pastor, to build up the cause of Christ in that New England city. We are glad to know they are so soon to enter into the fruit of their labors. S. T. Willis.

Texas Letter.

September 7th was a red-letter day in the history of Lancaster. On that day Randolph College opened her doors for the ffrst time for the reception of the ambitious youth who desires an education. As our train neared the good old town the main building, a splendid modern structure, loomed into view, with "Old Glory" floating as proudly from the tower as if it had been a frowning fortress, filled with men and munitions of war. And why not? Are not our schoolhouses rather than our fortresses the safeguards of our nation? Are not our teachers rather than our generals to lead the way into the greatest battles and secure for us the truest victories? Are not the permanency, purity and power of our great Republic dependent upon the true education of our children? If so, let the flag float over every school.

This main building is flanked by two others, "The Girls' Home" and "The Boys' Home," which are also models of their kind. They are not simply boarding houses, but homes for the students. These buildings are on a campus of eight acres, sloping gracefully eastward, as if to greet the rising sun, fit emblem of a vigorous and hopeful young school. All this, costing $25,000, is the princely gift of the liberal people of Lancaster.

At ten o'clock President Randolph Clark, his strong faculty, the business board and invited guests from the chapel rostrum looked into the faces of a splendid audience. After prayer I had the honor of making the opening address, and if it was not a good speech it was not the fault of the occasion and the audience, for both were full of inspiration. Other speeches followed, closing with a capital one from Bro. Clark. I had never heard him before, and had no idea that he could do it after that fashion. He is not only a teacher, but a logician and orator.

These exercises over, a sumptuous dinner was served, and then began the work of enrolling the students. This was by far the most satisfactory part of the proceedings, for Bro. Clark felt assured that he would open with forty boarders and one hundred day pupils. Hence all signs must fail, or Randolph College is a success.

The church at Lancaster is a good one. Baxter Golightly, their pastor, on account of a sick wife, was just leaving them for Eastland, and President Clark will take up the work, and it will not suffer in his hands.

Add-Ran University, Waco, also opens most hopefully. Financial Agent Henry has met with unexpected success, and that old curse of a debt promises soon to be a thing of the past. This promise inspires its friends with hope and courage, and students are coming in well. Addison Clark, a brother of the president of Randolph College, is at the head of this school, and has, like his brother, a strong faculty to help him.

Our state mission work for the last quarter is encouraging: Men employed, 8; time, 537 days; sermons, 546; additions, 346; churches organized, 4; Sunday-schools, 4; Endeavor Societies, 4; money raised, $2,032.

"The Divided Church," by John Logan, is one of the best tracts of the day. It deals with a living issue in a strong but simple and loving spirit, and it will do good. Send to Christian Courier, Dallas, Texas, and get a copy.

F. N. Calvin, of Waco, has returned from a visit of two months with his family at Chicago. Colby Hall preached acceptably for him during the absence.

The Austin work is steadily growing. Bro. J. W. Lowber and wife are succeeding grandly. The contract for a new stone house with a seating capacity, with all space thrown together, of one thousand, has been let, which is substantial evidence of the work they are doing.

Prof. J. B. Sweeney, of Add-Ran University, has spent fifty-three days of his vacation in protracted meetings, with ninety additions and money raised to build a church. Where is there another vacation record like this?

John Logan, late of New York, now of Gatesville, is proving himself a splendid evangelist. His last two meetings, at Melissa and Anna, resulted in more than seventy additions. Bro. Rosecrans assisted him as singer in these meetings.

The Third Church, Ft. Worth, with Homer Wilson as pastor, will soon have a new house. It will be of the tabernacle type, exceedingly plain on the outside, but neatly finished inside, with a capacity of 1,500. It will be equipped for the work of the institutional church.

Pittsburgh Letter.

After a season of rest and refreshment, the various pastors and workers of the churches of Pittsburgh and Allegheny have returned to their fields, and have taken up the work again with redoubled ardor and zeal. None of the churches have been closed during the summer months, but the services have been slightly shortened and, in some instances, open-air meetings, with good results, have been held. Additions to the churches have been frequent in spite of the intense heat. More than one hundred being reported at the ministerial meeting held September 5th, for the month of August. The preachers of this city seem to be all-summer as well as all-winter evangelists.

After a pleasant season spent at Ocean Grove, on the Atlantic Coast, Bro. T. E. Cramblet, returns to his work, and by way of inspiring his workers to greater zeal celebrates the first anniversary of the dedication of the East End Church with a short series of meetings, in which some of the newer preachers participated, doing the preaching. One short year ago this beautiful edifice was erected to glorify God, honor Christ, and bless man. That God has been glorified there during the year is evidenced in the fact that through the faithful ministry of Bro. Cramblet, one hundred and twenty have witnessed the good confession, thus honoring Christ, while the blessing has been theirs. Three thousand dollars also have been paid on the church debt and nearly one thousand dollars in all departments given for missions.

The historic First Church, of Allegheny, comes with Bro. W. J. Lhamon to a campaign for Christ with renewed vigor and ardor. Bro. Lhamon spent his vacation preaching regularly for his congregation and working on his new book for the Christian Endeavor Reading Course. At the First Church Bro. Fred Fillmore and his noble wife have charge of the music, with most encouraging results. Bro. Fillmore is also clerk of the board and looks after collections and delinquent members. So well does he do this that the summer collections have been nearly doubled this year as compared with those of last.

At Central Bro. C. L. Thurgood was made the recipient of a very nice present. A ticket for himself and wife, and entertaiment for a ten days' sojourn at Ocean Grove. During the last few weeks a complete renovation has been made in the church edifice, so that the good brother and his wife come to their fall campaign with many encouragements.

Over at Knoxville the brethren have secured the services of Bro. M. H. Wilson, who is hustling things. Although in the field but three months, he has so encouraged the membership that they have spent over twelve hundred dollars in rearranging and beautifying their house Bro. Wilson reports good audiences with frequent accessions.

Still the march of improvement goes on. At Hazelwood Bro. C. M. Iams has with the assistance of the Ladies' Aid Society succeeded in wiping out the old debt and remodeled the building. New carpets, pulpit furniture, change of organ loft, and paint have made the building a thing of beauty, while the gospel as preached by Bro. Iams is a joy forever.

Another brother who found Ocean Grove a place of recuperation is Bro. O. H. Phillips, of Braddock, who returns to his work with little if any more avoirdupois, but a heart warmed with souls for the sake of the Master. Bro. Phillips the Jonathan of the Pittsburgh preachers; "the heart of the Davids do knit to him."

But in the midst of general rejoicing there are some notes of sorrow. Bro. Z. O. Doward, after heroic work at Lawrenceville, Forty-third Street, is leaving the field. Bro. Shelenburger is leaving Beaver, and we are in fear that our brother J. Z. Bates will also bid us adieu. Vacancies there are in the pulpits at McKeesport, Duquesne, Homestead and Johnstown. Alas, that it should be so. May God in his mercy help these to find the right men to work in fields where much work is to be done.

Bro. Craig, of Belleview, and Bro. Hanna, of Carnegie, have been among the stay-at-homes. But as each are young bachelors and passionately fond of lawn tennis, and are looking for love and finding it (love is a tennis term, your scribe has been told,) the summer for them has not been unprofitably spent. Bro. Hanna's work at Carnegie is flourishing and is showing the wisdom of the brethren there in calling and retaining him, while of Bro. Craig, hustling for a new church building in Belleview as he is, only kindliest words may be said.

The annual convention of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society convenes in Connelsville the 20th of this month, the session lasting three days. That it will be a season of spiritual blessing there can be no possible doubt. A good program has been prepared and many are planning to attend.

The work at Observatory Hill is moving along well. Never has it been the good fortune of your scribe to work with a more genial and pleasant body of men and women than he has found there. A small congregation, but full of faith and good works, serving the Lord with one shoulder; that is, all in a united service. During the year closing October 1st there have been thirty-five accessions by letter and confession. Bills and salaries have been paid promptly, and when the church receives its renovation of new carpets, furniture, paint and additional room which even now is being carried on, it will be hard to find a sweeter, cosier building and a better body of workers than on the hill.

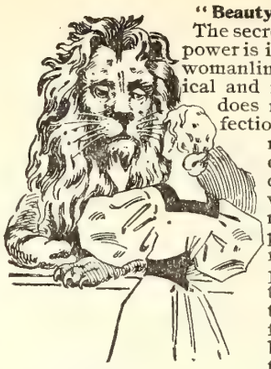
At Chautauqua, N. Y.

In all the world, I suppose, there is no other place just like this. There are many imitations, each having certain excellent resemblances to the prototype; but the venerable mother, now just entering upon her twenty-fifth year, sits in queenly dignity on an emerald throne, among her one hundred blooming daughters. "The great and original Chautauqua" presents to the eye of the visitor, crossing the beautiful lake from which the place derived its name, a vision of exquisite loveliness. The picturesque pier, reflected in the limpid waters of the lake; the beautifully kept lawn, with noble trees and plots of rare flowers; the roads and walks glittering in their whiteness; the magnificent Hotel Athenæum, crowning the elevation; the countless artistic cottages seen by glimpses through the trees; the touch of higher life supplied by thronging men, women and children—make a picture of grace and beauty worthy of a poet's dream.



But this world-famed summer city does not find its chief attraction in that which appeals to the eyes. It is a great system of schools, patronized by many thousands, from every state in the Union and many parts of Europe, who come in quest of better equipment for the serious and sacred business of life. Many of the most noted speakers of the world are engaged for the lecture platform. Here is a list for the present season, containing (among many others) the names of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen; Professor Gaston Bonet-Maury, of the University of Paris; Professor C. Rene Gregory, of the University of Leipsic; Rev. Russell H. Conwell, of the Temple, Philadelphia; Professor B. Rush Rheese, of Newton; Dr. John Henry Barrows, of Chicago, Hon. Murat Halstead, Mr. Will Carleton, Commander Booth-Tucker, Mrs. Emma P. Ewing and Hon. Wallace Bruce. One hundred courses in study are offered by seventy instructors from leading institutions, and could you see the hundreds of earnest men and women (nearly all of them preachers or teachers) hurrying on their way, with notebook and pencil in hand, to lecture or to recitation, you would catch a glimpse of the real life and power of Chautauqua.

But somebody wishes to ask, "What about that teaching—is it orthodox?" Well, that depends—just as the answer to such a question must always depend. I presume the instruction in English, German, French, Latin, Greek, Mathematics, Psychology, Music and Fine Arts is quite orthodox, and of the very best; and, if it is not, I am not sure that I could prove its incorrectness.

Oh, you mean the study of the Bible? Well, that study of the Bible is, for me, the chief charm of Chautauqua. And do you know why? Because it is so thorough, so bold and so reverent. I tasted, then I became a pupil, and for three weeks drank full and deep draughts from the great fountain of consecrated learning. I do not hesitate to say that, according to my judgment, Professor Willett, of the University of Chicago, is one of the ablest and most helpful instructors in the study of the Bible that this age affords. But he is scientific to the core, and more than once I have felt constrained to take issue with him upon his conclusions. His lecturing in the classroom (where I had the honor to be the guest of the Professor) was just of the character I desired to hear—the latest deductions of the most thorough scholarship, uttered by a man who reverently accepts the Bible as the Word of God and Jesus of Nazareth as the Savior of the race. In special interpretations (as of portions of the 53rd of Isaiah) we did not agree; but we stood together upon the foundation, "which is Jesus Christ." I owe Professor Willett much. He annihilated some of my pet texts, but he made the dear old Bible dearer and more wonderful to me. He brought the historic Christ closer to my every-day life. Before that divine form, which the exquisite genius of Matthias Claudius loved to call "The Star in the Night," all at Chautauqua, in one way and another, bow and worship.

Dr. Willett has left, and the gifted Professor Rush Rheese, of Newton Theological Institution, will now conduct that department of Bible study. I have heard Professor Rheese but once. He instructed and delighted me. With not so much personal magnetism as Professor Willett (few speakers can compare with the Chicago professor in this respect), I am inclined to think that his vision is more comprehensive, and that, upon controverted points, he will be found to be more in accord with what is ordinarily accepted as the orthodox belief. And, after all, do not such differences constitute a distinct advantage in the Chautauqua course for the mature mind?

The public devotional services have been most helpful and inspiring. A number of very distinguished ministers are here, and are being used for the general good. The first Sabbath after my arrival, I heard Rev. Russell H. Conwell, of the Temple, Philadelphia, in the morning, at the great amphitheatre, which seats 8,000. It was a wonderful sermon from a wonderful man, and held the multitude as if spellbound. At the evening service it was my privilege to preach to a vast multitude, hundreds of whom stood outside the building, unable to get in. (It is estimated that 15,000 people are now at Chautauqua.) The next Sabbath I heard Dr. John Henry Barrows, of Chicago, preach at 11 o'clock. Dr. Barrows is, perhaps, best known to the general public as the head and front of "The Congress of Religions," held in connection with the World's Fair. I confess that a distinctly unfavorable impression of that noted "Congress" had for me shadowed its champion. But the "Beauty and Power."

The secret of a woman's power is in her complete womanliness, both physical and mental. This does not mean perfection of outline nor regularity of features. It does not mean wit, nor talents nor accomplishments. It means that physical attractiveness that comes from perfect bodily condition and the bright, happy cheerfulness of disposition which only complete health can insure.

A woman with a bright eye, clear complexion, mantling color in the cheeks and buoyant elastic step and manner has a natural attractiveness that no artificial agency can counterfeit.

A woman who is afflicted with the mortifying misfortune of a dull, sallow, pimply complexion or that listless movement and attitude which provokes only disgust and revulsion in the opposite sex, ought to avail herself of the purifying, invigorating power of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which makes a strong, healthy stomach and digestive organism; purifies the blood and imparts a natural stimulus to the excretory functions; insures healthy weight, clear skin, bright eyes and the animated manner and bearing of perfect health.

A lady living in West Virginia, Miss Anna Callow, of Kyger, Roane Co., writes: "It is with pleasure I write you after using a few bottles of Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I think them valuable medicines for female troubles and weaknesses. I could hardly go about my work I had such inward weakness and constant misery in the womb. It worried me so that I would give out in walking a short distance. I had a bad cough and my lungs hurt me all the time. I got very thin, my complexion was bad, and my eyes would get so heavy in the evening they seemed stiff in the lids. I could hardly move them. Many persons were alarmed about me, I looked so bad and had such a cough; they were afraid I would go into consumption. I felt so badly every day that I had no life about me. I used only five bottles in all. I shall ever speak in praise of your grand medicines. They are blessings to suffering females."

Another good thing to have in the house is a vial of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They cure biliousness and constipation and never gripe.

shadow is gone, and he now stands before my mind's eye in the clear light, one of the greatest and best men of this age. As he spoke for India, from his rich stores of thought and observation, one could not fail to admire the profound learning, the discriminating judgment, the sympathetic nature, the evangelical spirit and the passionate earnestness of the eloquent pleader. I have not heard a nobler or more powerful plea for foreign missions. With a hand that did not falter, he tore all hope of salvation based on heathen philosophy or heathen living into shreds, and exalted the cross as Heaven's only provision for a lost world. It recalled the lamented Ellis when at his best. In the evening, Bishop Vincent (whom to know is to honor and to love) gave us a discourse so solid, so tender, so loving, that it must have accomplished—penetrated as it was by the unction of the Spirit—the very highest mission of preaching. The third Sunday of my stay I heard the famous Dr. A. J. F. Behrends; and, judging by that sermon, I would say he deserves to be famous, in the best sense of the word. Many will say, "No matter;" but it seems to me that it does matter, and matter much. In the afternoon, a Virginian lectured.

It will be interesting to Southerners to learn that there are 400 or 500 most excellent people here from the South. Georgia leads in numbers, but Virginia, the Carolinas, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi and Texas are well represented. They are here and, as is always the case, are winning golden opinions. Every vestige of bitter sectionalism seems to have forever passed away, and no figure is greeted with more universal or enthusiastic applause, when thrown upon the screen, than that of Fitzhugh Lee. The fact is, I am tempted, from all I have recently seen and heard, to believe that Fitzhugh Lee is today as popular at the North as at the South.

The writer was invited to speak for the South upon the night of the celebration of Chautauqua's "Quarter Centennial." I shall never forget that occasion. The magnificent illuminations, the splendid fireworks, the gorgeous decorations and the audience of 12,000, reaching far beyond the great amphitheatre. As an evidence of the generous spirit of the place I may be permitted to say that the audience punctuated almost every sentiment of the Southern speaker with the most enthusiastic applause, and at one point, when the enthusiasm had reached, it seemed to me, the highest pitch possible, the members of the band seized their pieces and the thrilling strains of "Dixie" swept out on the torrent of applause. I never expected to witness such a scene in New York; but—thank Heaven—we are now one people, with one God and one destiny!—Rev. Henry W. Battle, D. D., in Religious Herald.

St. Louis Letter.

News is accumulating so rapidly on these beautiful autumn days that we fear our inability to keep within the bounds of an "occasional letter" from this city to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, granted by the editor. At the opening of the summer just past the city was all excitement over the war with Spain. Young men were enlisting, troops were parading the streets, camps were growing and everything had taken on a military aspect. The war is over now, but the excitement of returning troops is almost as intense as was their enlistment and departure. The returning regiments are being received with open arms, and their comfort made the first and foremost of all duties. And while there is great rejoicing over the return of husbands, fathers and sons to home and friends, the unreturned ones are not forgotten.

Next to the excitement of returning soldiers the St. Louis Exposition has become an object of attraction. One of the chief factors of the Exposition, the popular Sousa Band, was on hand at the opening, and this alone is a guarantee of the loyal support of St. Louis, which loves to boast of its musical taste and talent. The new attraction this year is the large oriental garden in the Coliseum, and the reproduction on canvas of some of the great naval battles of the late war. The art galleries are said to be as fine, as attractive and as popular as ever. The attendance at the opening on the 14th instant was estimated at twenty thousand persons, which is a strong evidence of the popularity of this prominent St. Louis attraction for its citizens and their guests.

In religious circles the probable loss of Dr. John Mathews, a popular minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, by removal to another field, is the occasion of much talk, many comments, some agitation, a few tears and many regrets. Dr. Mathews has not ceased to be a drawing card, but the iron-rule government of his church compels him to go. He has lived out the longest possible measure of time allowed under the creed which he has decreed to live up to and support, and must go. The Centenary Church and a large crowd of outsiders who by several turns of opportunities have succeeded in holding him as long as they have lament his going; but he talks about the will of the Conference as though it were the will of God, and has exhorted his brethren and friends to be reconciled to its commands. Dr. Mathews is an interesting man, always attractive and one of the few preachers of St. Louis who seldom lack a large audience to hear his address or sermon. He is also one of the few men who can repeat an old story as often as he pleases; and some he has told a great many times without being too severely criticised therefor. Dr. Mathews is not a very profound theologian nor critical scholar, but he is a good generalizer, always entertaining and a fearless spokesman against the evils of the day. He is vigorous in his delivery of sermons, comes at men with his points by the shortest method, and is strictly orthodox according to the oldest Methodist tradions, except on the question of a state of absolute sinlessness in this life, which he confesses freely not to have yet attained, and advises his brethren not to provoke unnecessarily nor too severely at any time. Just what estimate is to be made of his long ministry in St. Louis, on moral and spiritual grounds, we do not profess to know, but on the score of popularity he certainly ranks high.

Our Christian preachers have again broken over the rules of past methods as to their Monday meetings, and introduced another innovation. Instead of their devout, dignified meeting at the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST each Monday at eleven o'clock A. M., as their custom was, they have started out on a series of promiscuous informal gatherings. Two weeks ago, on Monday, they with their good wives met at Forest Park where they were to lunch, talk or play as the spirit moved them. In these Monday meetings it is now proposed, we understand, to visit various places, houses, shops and districts of the city to see men as they are through the week and to learn how to come into closer touch with them. The idea may be a good one, but we prefer to await results before venturing an opinion on this subject. Of course a number of them will attend the state and general conventions, and until these are over, together with the city's fall festivities, the fall campaign of the city churches can hardly be said to be opened.

Christian Science.

The growth of the religious fad called Christian Science can be explained on the following grounds:

1. The eagerness of invalids to be healed. The fact that sick people will swallow anything in the hope of regaining their lost health is amply attested by the millions of gallons of swill in the shape of patent nostrums, sold annually in the United States, to say nothing of the rest of the world; and the ease with which they can be convinced of the virtue and effectivenesss of these same nostrums is as fully attested by the millions of pages of testimonials with which the country is being constantly flooded. In view of these facts and of the claims made by this new science, it is not surprising that it should find a large following among sick and morbid people. As it is impossible to brew a nostrum too nasty for some people to take (people actually took Vinegar Bitters while it was on the market!) so it is impossible to formulate a creed too absurd to win a following.

2 A false notion concerning the proof of the Spirit of Christ. The apostle John, in 1 Jno. 4:1-6, teaches that there are two spirits operating in the world, the Spirit of Christ and the spirit of Antichrist. He gives the sure rule by which to discriminate between them. Many, probably most people make the mistake of thinking that the spirit of Antichrist appears only in his true character. They are indebted to Milton and not to the Master for this idea. John's admonition to try the spirits indicates that it is no easy matter to distinguish between them. The fact is, the spirit of Antichrist is trying to appear like the Spirit of Christ, so as to get himself mistaken for him. In this he succeeds so well that "if it were possible, the very elect would be deceived." With this sinister end in view he may use a beautiful life. Therefore, a beautiful life is not proof conclusive of the possession of the Spirit of Christ. The person who lives the beautiful life may be deceived as to the true character of the spirit that dominates him. This is clearly implied in the passage cited above. As Jesus found innocent children possessed of demons while here on earth, so there are now conscientious people who are being led astray by the spirit of the arch deceiver. Healings are not proofs positive of the Spirit of Christ as their author. Jesus will say to many who offer teese in evidence at the last day, "Depart from me, for I never knew you!" The spirit of Antichrist does all of the works of the Spirit of Christ that are possible for him to do, in order to deceive the people. Therefore, no work that can be done by the spirit of Antichrist can be cited as positive proof of the identity of the Spirit of Christ. There is but one absolutely infallible test, and John gives it in these words: "Every spirit which confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit which confesseth not Jesus is not of God." The one thing above all others that the devil wishes to prevent is the confession of Jesus as the Christ. The one thing he cannot do is to move a man to make the good confession. The good confession, sincerely made, cannot be prompted by any other than the Spirit of God. Here is the point at which the evil spirit is stript of his disguise and revealed in his true character. The hand that stopped the mouths of demons that would confess him while on earth is laid on the lying lips at this point. Satan must not destroy Satan, but evil must be overcome by good. Truth must triumph over error, light over darkness, life over death.

Christian Science denies every fundamental fact of the gospel. It denies that Jesus Christ came in the flesh, for it denies that there is any such thing as flesh; denying that there is any death, it denies that Jesus died, that he was buried and that he rose again; denying sin, it denies John when he cries, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," and Paul when he says, "It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ died for sinners."

The best that can be said for these people is that they are earnest and sincere, but are being led by the spirit of Antichrist, by a flowery way, to the destruction of the very citadel of Christianity. "They know not what they do."

Princely Knights Again.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—As one of the founders of Princely Knights, and as its present secretary, I desire to say a few words in reply to the criticisms of its "secret" feature which have been made by Bro. Keeler, first in an article of his own, and second by a clipping from a Boston paper.

The sum of both criticisms is that "the good in the society is destroyed by the secrecy." Does it make every good thing bad to have anything secret about it? We keep secret the preparations we make for a "surprise party," or for a "birthday surprise." The secret does not make all the good worthless. Why? "He who surprises another for his good is always counted a friend." Often to keep a thing secret until it can be made known in the best way is a duty. The Master charged his disciples not to tell the vision of the mountain top until the Son of Man be risen from the dead. The keeping of that secret was not "a crack in the costly vessel that made it worthless." "If he had anything good why keep it a secret?" To keep a good thing secret until it may be made known with the best result is wise—the Master himself thought so. This is all the Princely Knights aim to do in having a secret institution. Lessons can be most impressively taught to many—to most—men and boys when they are given in an initiation that teaches the lessons in the "surprise" it contains. The initiate could not be surprised if the ceremony were not a secret to him. This is the chief—almost the only—value or purpose of the secrecy in the initiation. To keep this secret from those who are not members of the lodge is, of itself, no more reprehensible than it would be for Bro. Keeler to keep secret his plan to make his best friend a valuable present, or for the editor of the Boston paper to keep secret his plan to give something good to his readers until his arrangements are completed.

I regret these criticisms, but if they shall cause any one to investigate the results of P. K. work I shall be content. To give all an opportunity to find out whether our work is "evil because it is secret" I will agree to send to any Christian, who is a true lover of boys, a copy of the ritual, on the condition that I be given satisfactory assurance that it will only be used "to help boys build, adorn and defend a good character for themselves." This is the only object we have and he who will so use our secret work ought to have the opportunity to do so.

S. M. CONNER.

Irvington, Ind.

"Take Heed How Ye Build."

A young girl said to me in the presence of her parents, "I never did have as good a time in my life, as I did at that tent meeting. I wish we could have another." When she had gone, her father said, "I can't tell you how that meeting demoralized our daughter. She has taken less interest in the Christian Church, to which she belongs, ever since; she has been clamorous for something sensational at church, and far less disposed to listen to any advice or warning from her parents."

This led me to investigate further. For weeks before that meeting the pastor, at whose bidding the evangelist came, was loud and fulsome at every preachers' meeting. It was going to be immense; all get ready for a blessing. When the evangelist was gone, the silence at the preachers' meeting was a noticeable as had been the noise before.

Not many moons have passed since a pastor said to me, "I wish I knew how to let go this fellow who is trying to preach and can't. I opposed his coming, but was overruled by my officers, and they all see the mistake. This Boanerges was suddenly impressed while out on the road as a commercial traveler, that he was called and sent to preach, so he sent in his samples and gave up his lucrative job and hired him a singer from another denomination and entered the ministry. While listening to him I was reminded of the little boy who whispered to his father during the sermon thus: "Is that so, or is it just preaching."

He illustrated the unimportance of baptism, by the story of Sweeney's and Jarrel's frogs, each of which escaped being swallowed by a snake by jumping into and swimming across a pond—the Disciple frog when across croaked saved, while the Baptist frog croaked non-essential.

In towns where we are strong we are "Christians," where we are weak we are "Campbellites."

One of strongest and wisest evangelists wrote me, "What is to be done to stop this craze for numbers?" The imitators of Sam Jones have made this style of evangelism so odious that the late General Conference at Baltimore has stamped its disapproval on the whole business in most emphatic terms. I hope the day for these peripatitics is well-nigh over, and when we take hold of a church that has had two or three great ingatherings and can't find half a dozen who will take hold and work with us, the pastors ought to see the remedy and apply it. I am an evangelist as well as pastor, but it is false methods and untempered mortar that needs yet to be looked after.

Compare, if you will, the reports of these sensational preachers with those of Luke in Acts, and you will have learned the lesson.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Of the Audrain county meeting I have much to say, but the space is not to spare. The Bible-school reports were not so good this year as last, and every school making a poor report was followed by a poor church report, so that all saw that a poor school report made a poor church report. When will the brethren learn this to their reformation in Bible-school work? Laddonia and Mexico made remarkably good school reports, showing work worthy of them, while County Bible-school Superintendent P. W. Harding worked hard for good reports from all schools.

Now comes Central, St. Louis, with one-half their annual pledge remitted promptly, which means much for us and the fieldmen. Thanks to all of them. Who next?

The Barnard Bible-school is another friend in time of need, and a good friend in meeting the apportionment as it falls due, with words of cheer. Am sure our schools do not know how much we depend on their acceptance or rejection of the amounts asked of them, or they would respond more promptly. Brethren, won't your school consent to give us the mite asked of each for this good work, and will you not be good enough to notify me right away? We would like to put a man in the southeast district if we could only feel sure that the schools would give us the meager sums asked of them. What do you say, friends, and say right now?

The Nevada Bible-school, under Prof. W. O. Broaddus, with his efficient corps of assistants, is worthy of model. In their opening the pastor, A. C. McKeever, and his assistant, Mrs. McKeever, were right to the front, and the song service was a delight. In the class work there was much to compliment, while their class arrangements were better than is usual. In offerings the school excels, so that they can give largely toward the church debt and also to our work, $30. Am now telling other schools about Nevada's good points, hoping to help them in their methods.

Bro. Giddens has organized a new Bible-school, and is now at Ulman, hoping to raise the money for the new house so long and badly needed. If it can be done, we all believe that John Giddens will do it. Over $300 for it on hand at this time.

A new Bible-school has been organized in the Antioch (Marion county) neighborhood, christened Willow Bend, and with a good membership. You will hear more of such work in North Missouri, now that F. M. Rogers is in the field, for he works.

At Virginia we had a great day and happy work, and so all were happy. John Jones is a yokefellow with whom one delights to labor, while the co-operation of the church membership will quicken one's best efforts. The basket lunch may have drawn some, but all took hold of the work happily, so that every moment was profitably spent, and the institute was followed with a meeting. A good offering, too.

At night, my old-time friend, C. B. Lotspeich, gave way at Passaic, and the friends gave fine hearing and the change they had for this work, $1.70. This is one of the pleasant fields for a true servant of Christ, the brethren paying promptly at every meeting, but having no Bible-school of their own in a union house, do not feel obligated to this work as they will some day. All appreciate the preacher.

The Honey Creek (Grundy county) friends will help us as long as the leaders are with them, and Miss Lyda Evans sends the first quarter promptly, as usual. It is the only school in Grundy county giving to our work this year as reported.

What a time your servant had getting to Hickman Mills, but what pleasant greeting when he did arrive! Had it not been for "Uncle" Jerry Robertson's wife and her horse and buggy, would not have made it, and then by the help of Brother B. Z. Palmer I was enabled to go on promptly, so that no miss was made in my appointments at all. The new house is a "thing of beauty," and the presence of the older people in the school did me good, while the brethren, without one moment's hesitation, said, "We will give to your work from now on." Thanks to them and God bless them. Brethren, you never will know, without experience, what a feeling of pleasure comes with your kindness to the fieldmen, nor how we appreciate it all in His Name.

Your servant declined an appointment to the Omaha Bible-school conference, for it came at the time of our state convention, Sept. 27-30, and no Missouri worker ought to neglect the Nevada convention for anything. Hear? Well, that is exactly my sentiment, and there is something wrong if you do. The rates, one fare, the entertainment, free, the program, fine, ought to enlist you if nothing else. Come!

THE NORWEGIAN AUTHOR, MR. LIE, writes in the "Luren & Buskerud's Amstidende," published in Skien, Norway, as follows:

An American Medicine.

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is a medicine, which for over a hundred years has been famous as a health-giving remedy. I myself have tried it, so that I can speak from experience. I obtained a few bottles from the manufacturer, Dr. Peter Fahrney, and after using it I felt remarkably invigorated and strengthened in body. My digestion improved; my appetite increased; in short, I felt well and happy. I only wish I could always have it in my house.

I also obtained some of the Oleum Liniment, for external use. Myself, as well as others, used it and found it splendid for sprains, bruises and pains in the limbs. I do not think these excellent remedies are to be obtained in Norway. I wish they were.

It is, of course, difficult and costly to get hold of the medicine, yet I would advise the reader to make an effort. Write to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 So. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill., U. S. A. If you are so fortunate as to get the medicine you will prize it highly. The Vitalizer is worth its weight in gold.

Notes and News.

Sunday, Sept. 25th, was rally day at the Mt. Cabanne Church, this city. All of the activities of the church had special services morning, noon and night.

The Central Christian Church at Pueblo, Colorado, has issued a very neat church directory. The number of names enrolled is 469. R. B. Preston is the pastor.

The Texas Christian Lectureship will meet at Waxahachie, Nov. 14-17.

G. W. Crosby, of Perry, Oklahoma terriory, wishes persons seeking a home to remember that there is still much room in that country. He writes encouragingly of the climate, soil and its productions. He says we have 6,000 members in Oklahoma or more than any other religious body. Those wanted are Disciples of Christ, of course.

J. C. Hay says that excellent homes can be had in Routt county, Colorado, where consecrated Christian stockgrowers are wanted. He has been doing some evangelistic work in that region and speaks highly of the opportunities there for homeseekers. He says that interested parties may address J. L. Ellis, W. H. Tucker or Lewis Breeze, at Craig, Routt county, Colorado.

The churches at Beech Grove, Williamsport, Ind., established through the sacrifices of brethren Walker and Clark, and the voluntary offerings of the people, are now entering upon their third year, and are in prosperous state.

N. A. W.

An "open field evangelist" spent three weeks at Ann Arbor, Mich., during the commencement of its great university, with 3,337 students enrollment. Of the graduating class of 500, about 300 were attorneys at law. Bro. Forest, with his well-improved intellectual opportunities, good house and grand membership, is leading the leaders in the right way.

Jasper County Meeting

At Webb City, Oct. 27-29; a good program. Let all the preachers of the county remember the date. Come out, brethren, and let us find out how the cause is in Jasper. Delegates should be appointed by every congregation in county.

W. A. OLDHAM,
County President.

Logansport, Ind.

I began my second year's ministry with this church last Sunday. The church has paid an old debt of three hundred and eighty-five dollars. Put in a new furnace at a cost of one hundred and forty dollars and paid for it. Gave one hundred dollars for missions, and it was not all given through one society. Fifty persons have been added to the church without the aid of a special evangelist. The preacher has been paid in full every week. I am not seeking "another field." The church and the Lord are very good to me; I wish I were more worthy of them. I will try to be. The church now owes no man anything, love excepted. We hope to do better this year. As our faith is so shall our work be.

Christianly,

Minnesota Notes.

Have been making a trip among some of the churches of this state; the evangelist could profitably spend two months in this way. Pastors are on the run; several churches pastorless. I might locate two faithful young men who could work at a moderate salary. Pleasant Grove, one of the oldest churches in the state, is wide awake in good works under J. M. Elam's ministry. David Overend, one of the oldest Disciples in the state, lives here; he has done much to build up our cause in Minnesota and still gives liberally.

Visited Horicon and Willow Creek, country congregations; they will co-operate in employing pastor. These churches are at peace and wield a strong influence on the surrounding country.

At Garden City I received a warm welcome by W. H. Rust, pastor, and the congregation. The church is strong and vigorous. It was our privilege to meet Sister Marshall, our missionary from Japan, now visiting her parents, Bro. and Sister Waite, who reside here. She will return to Japan in November.

Some time ago I visited Mason City, Iowa, where S. T. Martin ministers, and Walter Martin assists. The membership is 800; three Bible-schools with 900 pupils. No mean growth in six years. They are prospering abundantly under the Martins. I presented the Austin (Minn.) work and they responded with an offering of $26 for the building fund.

We have one of the most beautiful building sites in Austin. We are planning to have the congregation housed before winter.

Minnesota is a difficult field, but many places are ready for the harvest, and faithful work is being rewarded.

I think the time for a forward movement has come and that henceforth the progress will be more rapid. More funds for our home board and the work can be done. Send an offering to B. L. Smith, fellowworker, to help take America for Christ.

Bethany C. E. Reading Course.

In our plea for apostolic Christianity we have emphasized some points to the overshadowing of others. We have read that part of the commission which says "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded, I am with you." The office of the teacher in the church has been overlooked. It has seemed to me for years, in fact since I began my ministry, that we would have many more competent workers and teachers if we did as much teaching as was done in the apostolic church.

Every year since I left college I have conducted classes in Bible study and I know of no preacher of my age who has more sons in the ministry. I once asked a young man to speak to a friend about his salvation. The young brother said: "I have long wanted to, but I confess ignorance of my Bible; I don't know what to say." We conducted a class that winter on "The Early Days of Christianity." This brother took the course, began to speak to his friends of the way into the kingdom and is now a promising young preacher.

The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses are especially fitted for such needs of the younger people of our churches. First, a systematic study of God's Word, a study of missions and the needs of the world, then the inspiration of the lives of missionaries and our own pioneers to encourage them to be true to their convictions and the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

There is a joy in proclaiming the gospel that is not known in Christian service except in living the gospel, and no person can live or tell the truth until he himself has learned it. The person with average memory listening to the average sermon in the average congregation, having preaching twice per month, would be a long time learning enough himself to become a teacher of men.

Baby Badly Afflicted with Eczema. Medical Treatment Useless. Cured by Cuticura.

My niece's little baby boy had Eczema all over his face, so that he needed continuous watching, and he scratched the sores constantly. Mornings, his face, hands and clothes would be stained with blood. She never could take him out, his face was so full of sores. She had medical treatment, and tried everything she heard of. She commenced using the CUTICURA REMEDIES. The sores left his face and he was entirely cured, and now his face is smooth and rosy.

To say that a young Christian should study his Bible as in the beginning of our movement is not enough. They have not the same incentive now that they had then. Our position is not assailed now as when the fathers began to plead for the undeniable position we occupy. That study, however, was liable to be textual and incomplete, but seemingly, to me, the plan of study in the C. E. Reading Courses is more comprehensive and valuable. Every church and Christian Endeavor Society should become a school in which the man of God should be thoroughly furnished unto every good word and work.

How Goods are Ordered by Mail.

Few people have any idea of the vast amount of goods that is being shipped by freight, express and mail direct to the farmer and the home, and few people have any idea how easy the great mail-order houses have made buying at wholesale, and how great are the inducements they offer to secure orders.

This office is just in receipt of Catalogue No. 107, issued by Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, a vast department store boiled down, so that you can sit down at your desk or table in your own home and select just such goods as you want, and everything is made so plain by large, handsome, clear illustrations, plainly written descriptions and prices in plain figures, that every one can order by mail; have the advantages of such a vast variety to select from and such very low prices that it certainly is not strange that these big department stores which issue these big catalogues are attracting the attention of buyers everywhere in the walks of life. Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s Catalogue is certainly a merchandise encyclopœdia, a book of 1120 pages, weighing nearly 4 pounds, and while it requires 30 cents postage alone to mail it, they send it postpaid to any address on receipt of only 15 cents to help pay the postage. Everything you will find in the largest department stores, everything that is offered for sale in any kind of a store anywhere, is found complete in this catalogue, and so plainly illustrated and described, and the price so low, that it is not strange that people are so anxious to get this book, and that so many send to this house for their goods. We are informed that it requires seventy carloads of paper to print their fall edition of this catalogue, fifty large printing presses running nignt and day to print them and $150,000.00 in postage stamps to mail them. Only from such stupendous figures can it be comprehended to what extent people everywhere are sending in their orders to this house for everything they eat, use or wear.

Chattanooga Convention.

RAILROAD RATES.

All roads belonging to the Central Passenger Association and the Southern Passenger Association sell tickets to Chattanooga and return for one fare. No certificate is necessary. The passenger buys a round-trip ticket, and it is good until the 24th of October. These tickets are for sale from the 13th to the 17th of October.

The roads belonging to the Western Passenger Association will sell tickets to Chattanooga on the certificate plan. The passenger pays full fare going, and takes a certificate. This certificate is signed at the convention, and entitles the holder to return for one-third fare. Those who live near Chicago and St. Louis would do well to pay full fare from their homes to these cities and then buy a round-trip ticket from there to Chattanooga. Those living at a considerable distance from these cities would do well to buy their tickets clear through to Chattanooga and take a certificate.

The Trunk Line Association sells tickets the same as the Western Passenger Association. Those who go to the convention must take certificates. The gateways of this Association are Buffalo and Pittsburg.

Ministers in the Western Passenger Association territory, having permits, should buy their tickets on their permits as far as either Chicago or St. Louis and then buy a round-trip ticket from there on.

ENTERTAINMENT.

It is understood that all who go to this convention pay for their own entertainment. The committee in Chattanooga has secured homes where persons can be entertained for $1 a day. The hotel rate is $2 a day. A. McLEAN.

Railroad Rates.

The Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association north-east of the Potomac River has granted a rate of one and one-third fare, round trip, to the gateways of the Central Association, on the Certificate plan, to the Chattanooga Convention, Oct. 13-21, 1898.

Those coming from the Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association north-east of the Potomac River will pay full fare to the gateway of the Central Traffic Association, and from there will get round-trip tickets to Chattanooga and return, at the rate of one fare for the round trip. When you pay full fare take a certificate for the same, and after having it signed at Chattanooga you will be returned from the gateway at which it was purchased to your home for one-third fare.

Please notice that those coming from the Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association north-east of the Potomac River purchase tickets twice, one at the home station for which they will take a certificate, and the second at the point where they reach the bounds of the Central Traffic Association, where they will buy round-trip tickets at the one-fare rate.

Our convention at Chattanooga promises to be the most interesting in all our history. Preparations have been making for months that it shall be the strongest Convention we have ever held. The brethren at Chattanooga have had it on their hearts the entire year, and have made the most ample preparations for the successful entertainment of this Convention.

In behalf of the Boards we desire to extend the invitation for a general gathering of the loyal Disciples of our Lord and Savior. Let us say in our hearts, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of our Lord."

Come to the Convention at Chattanooga, October 13th to 21st, 1898.

MISSISSIPPI.

Elzy, Sept. 16.—Just closed a meeting of seven days with four additions. Bro. Tally is our preacher. This is the first time the Christian people ever preached in this country, and great interest is taken by everybody. Hope to be able to organize soon. May the blessings of God abide and the good work go on.—E. PARKER.

VERMONT.

West Rupert, Sept. 19.—We have just closed a grand tent meeting, conducted by E. W. Darst, of Chicago. There was an intense interest from the start, and the large audiences present at all services displayed a notable enthusiasm. Bro. Darst's preaching was effective, and his sweet, kindly spirit won the admiration and respect of all who heard him. Twenty-nine persons were added to the Lord by baptism, and others are considering their spiritual duties as they never did before. Many are on the verge of surrender and will doubtless come at our regular services. A striking feature of the meetings was the large number of elderly persons who made the good confession. At least 10 of the number ranged from 50 to 80 years of age. The church is strengthened and each individual member quickened to a deeper sense of the spiritual life.—THOS. G. PICTON, pastor.

NEW YORK.

Rochester, Sept. 21.—My eighth year of service in Rochester opened Sept. 1st. In our annual meeting, held last week, we reported over 80 accessions to the membership in the city last year. Forty-four of these were received into the First Church. There is an increase of devotion and earnest endeavor in all departments of the congregation. The Second Church is duly launched into a promising future under the efficient ministry of J. R. Tolar, Jr. We are more hopeful for strength now than for numbers. Pray for us, brethren, that our strength fail not.—F. P. ARTHUR.

NEBRASKA.

Fairfield, Sept. 16.—Two added recently by letter.—GEO. LOBINGIER.

NO STATE MENTIONED.

Thirty-four additions was the result of our three weeks' tent meeting at Sandyville. The last Sunday afternoon four confessions were taken in the water. Every one of the 34 were grown.—WM. J. LOCKHART.

MISSOURI.

Tarkio, Sept. 21.—Seven additions the first week here.—H. A. NORTHCUTT, evangelist; A. R. HURST, pastor.

Charleston, Sept. 19.—Fourteen added in a two weeks' meeting at Bertrand. Oscar Rogers, of Paragould, Ark., assisted. The people were greatly pleased with his preaching.—A. F. HOLDEN.

Dedication.

On Lord's day, Sept. 18th, it was my privilege to preach the opening sermon and dedicate the new and beautiful house of worship just completed by the church at Giffin, Ind.

Many more people were in attendance than could get into the house. We raised $200 more money than was necessary to pay all debts. The house is built in modern style, and is beautifully finished and furnished. It is a beauty. Bro. G. W. Ford is the pastor of the church at Giffin. To him is largely due the success of this enterprise. God has greatly blessed his work. L. L. CARPENTER.

NOTE.—It will be seen by the above statement that we gained in church collections and lost in individual contributions. We rejoice in this gain from the churches. The record with the churches as compared with last year stands as follows:

This year, contributing churches, 85.	Amt.	$ 705.34
Last year, contributing churches, 55.	"	347.49
Gain in contributing churches 30.	Amt.	$357.85

Encouraging words are coming in from all sections of the country in reference to reaching apportionments. Many collections are held back in order to double or increase the amount apportioned by the board. It should be noted that this is only the report of the second week of September. The largest amounts will come in the last two weeks. With the gain thus far made, the board has great hopes of reaching the $20,000 by collections from the churches.

Churches that do not get their collections to the Board by the 30th, at the date our books close, should hasten their offerings to the board before we go to the National Convention to read our report. All collections that come in from October 1st to the 13th will be put into a supplementary report.

Remember the watchword for the next three years: One Quarter of a Million Dollars for Church Extension by the close of 1900.

All remittances should be sent to

Are We Following the Recommendation?

"Because the Board of Church Extension can answer but one appeal in five, we recommend that unusual effort be put forth to raise our Church Extension Fund to one quarter of a million dollars by the close of 1900. We must raise more by annual offerings in September, and we urge that extraordinary effort be put forth to work up a generous and general offering for this important agency."

It is well to note that many preachers are engaged in following out this recommendation. On Tuesday, Sept. 20th, all the churches that sent in offerings either reached or exceeded their apportionments, with the exception of one church; and that one came within 85 per cent. of reaching its opportionment.

The board has asked no congregation for less than $3, and a vast multitude of poor and struggling churches that sent sums, formerly of $1.37, $1.89, $1.53 and odd sums like that have come up to their apportionment of $3 and in many instances gone beyond it. The only question now is this: Shall we have a sufficiently large number of churches who will put forth "extraordinary effort" to reach the reasonable proportion of the $20,000 asked of them by the board for this year.

It should be kept in mind that unless we reach the $20,000 from the churches this year we shall hardly make it up next year or the year following, and will therefore fail to reach the $250,000 by the close of 1900.

The board understands that September is an unfavorable month for collections in view of the fact that people have either not returned from their vacations, or having just returned are out of money, and that church life is not active during September as it is during other months. In view of this fact we trust that, for the sake of the work, churches will use October and November, if necessary, in order to reach their proportion asked by this board. It is too important to pass by with a light collection. Calls are pressing on all hands. About one-third of our congregations have no place to worship they can call their own. Over 500 new churches were organized last year, 43 were aided by this board to build, about 150 built without our aid, and 300 of last year's organizations are left houseless and homeless.

History of Hiram College.

PART II.—THE COLLEGE.

The board of trustees on February 20th, 1867, changed the name of the Eclectic Institute and clothed it with collegiate powers and responsibilities. As Hiram had become widely and favorably known as the seat of the Institute, the name now chosen was Hiram College. It was believed that this action would add to the usefulness and influence of the school and that a stronger financial basis could be secured thereby. June 19th, 1872, the board in pursuance of the statute for such cases made and provided, increased the number of trustees to twenty-four. It should be added that a convention of friends of the institute, held in Hiram, June 12th, 1867, endorsed the action by which it was made a college. The college began its work Aug. 31st, 1867.

The change in the name and rank of the institute did not essentially change its aims and spirit. The work formerly done has gone on all the same. It was the addition of a college to an academical and preparatory school. The announcement put forth in 1867 declared the aim of the college to be "to furnish a course of training as thorough as any in the country;" "to bestow careful attention upon the classical languages," and especially "to give a fuller course than is common in those branches which are modern and national."

The first president of the college was Dr. Silas E. Shepard, A. M., now deceased. He resigned at the close of one year, and was succeeded by J. M. Atwater, A. M. Pres. Atwater resigned after two years' service, and B. A. Hinsdale, A. M., was elected to the position in 1870. He had previously been a teacher in the Eclectic Institute and had served one year in the college as professor of history, literature and political science. Mr. Hinsdale continued to discharge the duties of president until the close of the college year 1882, and retained his nominal connection with the college until June 1883. At the beginning of the college year 1882, B. S. Dean, pastor of the church at Hiram, was elected vice-president of the college and empowered to act as president for the year. At the annual meeting of the board in June, 1883, G. H. Laughlin, A. M., who for some years previous had been president of Oskaloosa College, Iowa, was called to the presidency of Hiram. Pres. Laughlin resigned in 1886 and for one year Prof. Coleman Bancroft served as acting president of the college. In 1888 the board called Ely V. Zollars, then of Springfield, Ill., to the presidency, and he is the present incumbent.

The year 1878 was marked by the building of the tabernacle. For all ordinary public entertainments the college chapel was sufficient, but the commencement exercises had been held under a large canvas tent, erected on the grounds or in the neighborhood. The inconveniences attending this arrangement led to a discussion of the feasibility of erecting a building to meet the needs of the commencement period. With the aid of the board of trestees, the literary societies and the citizens of Hiram, such a building was erected, having a seating capacity of 1,200. The first exercises were held in it June 20th, 1878.

On the 11th of June, 1879, the board, then in annual session at Hiram, received a petition signed by forty-five ladies of the village and vicinity, that steps be taken for the erection of a ladies' boarding hall. The proposition was favorably considered and a building committee appointed. Further steps were taken at two subsequent special meetings. The property known as the Smith property on the north side of the campus was purchased and upon it was erected a substantial brick boarding hall, which was thrown open to students in December, 1879.

The commencement of 1880 was of unusual interest, owing to the presence of General James A. Garfield, who a few days before had been nominated for President of the United States. It was also the year for the regular meeting of the College Reunion Association. This meeting was held the day after commencement, and was presided over by the distinguished man. The news of his election the ensuing fall was received with great joy in Hiram. On the 4th of February, 1881, he made his last visit to the village, when he made a short but touching address to the citizens and students in the college chapel. It is safe to say that from no point on the continent was the ebb and flow of his life during the eleven long weeks of his sickness watched more closely than from Hiram Hill, nor was his death anywhere more deeply mourned.

As time went on, after the organization of the college the need of more room began gradually to be felt. In the earlier days of the Eclectic Institute three literary societies had been founded: The Olive Branch, in 1853; the Delphic, in 1854; the Hesperian, in 1855. The libraries of these societies, together with that of the college, rapidly increased. Recitation rooms had always served for society halls. Added to this the great advance made in late years in the field of the natural sciences demanded better facilities for teaching them than Hiram afforded. Rambling talk of a new building was heard at times, but the school was not financially strong, and the consummation of an end so much desired was thought to be far in the future. Notwithstanding, work was begun on this building on the 8th of June, 1886. It was pushed so rapidly that the corner stone was laid on commencement day, June 17th, with appropriate ceremonies. A large concourse of people was present on the occasion. The traditional box containing papers, coins, etc., was deposited under the stone. Speeches were made by Dr. I. A. Thayer, B. J. Radford and Wm. Bowler. Abram Teachout concluded the exercises in an appropriate manner. The contract called for the completion by Sept. 28th of so much of the building as would accommodate the regular classes, and the whole was to be completed by December 1st. The first classes recited in the new building Jan. 12th, 1887. On the 11th of January the structure was dedicated.

Begining with the year 1882, several important changes were made in Hiram's course of study. At a meeting of the State College Association, held at Denison University, Granville, O., in the last week of December, 1881, a resolution was adopted requiring all colleges that wished to retain membership in the association to make their course of study equal in point of time and amount of work done. This was the beginning of the extension of the curriculum and of the numerous and excellent courses of study that Hiram now offers.

With the administration of Pres. E. V. Zollars the third era of Hiram College begins. He began his duties with the fall term of 1888, and the history which follows is that of the very progressive and successful decade ending with the present year. P.

A Game of Childhood.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

When two years old, my little Fay
Had one game she loved best to play.
She'd hide her face upon my knee
And whisper, "Now you can't see me!"
When I pretended great surprise,
While still she hid her little eyes,
And cried, "Where-is-my-little-dear!"
She'd laugh and answer, "I am here!"
Or else she'd crouch behind the door
And—"You can't see me any more!"
Or, lay her little golden head
In deep, dark shadows of the bed;
Hard then my task, deep my distress,
To find her in her wilderness!

How strange the silence of the home
That echoed once a cherished tone—
A voice now hushed! I lived apart,
And bitter doubt crept in my heart.
Yes, I began to doubt that Power
Which strips earth of its fairest flower.

One night I wandered 'neath the stars,
Feeling grief press like prison-bars,
When suddenly upon my ear
A childish voice seemed to ring as clear
As in past days, as fresh, as free,
Crying, "Papa, you don't see me!"
I knew it was a fancy, born
Of hopes destroyed and a home forlorn,
But a hope dawned bright as a morning new,
As I whispered: "Darling, where are you?"
From above the stars I seemed to hear
A voice ring gladly—"I am here!"

DANGER IN THE SOCIAL GAME.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots.—Matt. 27:35.

"Dear, now that we are married and have a home of our own, wherein we may be a sort of law unto ourselves in a few social matters and customs, let us throw these into the grate," and my wife held a pack of cards over the blaze; but I caught her hand and took the cards, saying laughingly:

"Don't be extravagant, my dear. If you burn these I shall have to purchase more." And seeing how anxious she was, I continued:

"I think you are overscrupulous, my Mary. What harm can there be in these bits of pasteboard?"

"In themselves," she replied, "of course there can be no harm. But any game, whether played for amusement or otherwise, in which there is danger that it may lead to the gambling habit, ought not to be practiced. And to be a gambler!" She shuddered at the thought, but I laughed again and said:

"What an anxious little woman you are! Do you fear that your husband will become a gambler because he invariably carries off the prize at our euchre parties?"

Mary did not answer, but presently said:

"Henry, did you ever think of how it might look to outsiders to see a company of professed Christians gathered about a card table? More than half of the members of our euchre club have their names on the church record. Now what must the other members think of them? It seems to me there should be more distinction between the worldly and the professed Christian. How are we to recognize the Christian unless his fruits testify for him and distinguish him from the world? It seems to me that the professed Christian at the card table is simply lending his influence against the Christian life as it ought to be. You say you can play a social game with your friends, without wishing to go farther, and I sincerely hope you can; but there may be those that will seek to imitate your example who cannot resist the temptation of going farther and yet farther, until the habit has grown upon them to such an extent that all will-power is gone, or is not sufficiently strong to break off the habit. We—you and I—when we sit down to a social game of cards with our friends, are lending our influence to the wrong side, even though it may do us no harm."

But I would not listen, and said, jestingly:

"What a prudent wife I have! I only hope she will not convert her husband just yet, for he does enjoy a game of euchre; and, by the way, the club meets here next week; I hope you will bury your foolish scruples, my dear, and let us have a good time."

Mary said nothing, and as I was too selfish to take any heed of the quivering lip or the beseeching eye, the matter was settled. The club met on the following Tuesday evening, and we had a merry time. I won the prize, as usual, much to my delight and to the envy, real or pretended, of the other members. We had refreshments, and then spent an hour or two amusing ourselves in various ways. Miss Hill sang for us, and Jack Long told one of his famous stories—something that had happened to himself, as he always declared. To hear Jack's side of it, he had had more thrilling experiences and hairbreadth escapes than any other man on earth. We all knew that Jack drew largely upon his imagination, but it amused us, and we always encouraged him with our appreciative attention. We were too thoughtless to heed the fact that Jack was reaching a state wherein he hardly knew when he was speaking the truth—to such an extent had he drawn on his imagination. When the ladies were not present it was his custom to punctuate his remarks with profanity at times; and on this evening, in his excitement at a thrilling crisis in the narrative, he forgot the presence of the fair ones, and fell into his old habit. Somehow it was awkward getting on after that, and presently they went.

As the door closed on the last departing one, I turned to look into the eyes of my wife.

"It goes hand in hand with the rest of it," she said calmy. "Swearing, lying, gambling and drinking are boon companions. For my part, I have never been able to see anything amusing in Jack's stories. They are simply untruths, and an untruth is only a polite name for a lie. The Father of liars has many children, of which Ananias and Sapphira were not the greatest. This age is an age of liars. There is the business lie, the social lie, the unkept promise and the suppression of truth, which are but other forms of lying. The world is full of deception; and when we encourage any form of it, however innocent it may at first seem, we are paving the way for a soul to receive the heritage of the 'lake that burneth with fire and brimstone," of which God has said, 'All liars shall have their part.'"

"Gracious!" I exclaimed in mock surprise. Who would imagine that my wife is a preacher!"

"And I am not yet through," she answered, "but I wish I could say also to Jack what I feel on the subject of cursing and swearing. Cursing, it seems to me, is the expression of a wish that evil should befall something or somebody; then why use the name of God in such connection—God who is the kind Father to whom we owe life, health, strength, everything? He has given us this beautiful world; he sends the rain; we are his children, and are by far more dependent upon him than is the child upon the earthly parent, and he does not withhold his good gifts. In view of all this, how can we fail to lift up our hearts in praise and thanksgiving, rather than to use his name in a manner which is really a sort of prayer to Satan—if there could be such a thing? Swearing is to use this kind Father's name and the name of his Son, Jesus Christ, as well as other things sacred, in profanity. To the shame of Americans, be it said, they are particularly noted for this wicked practice—this disgusting and degrading habit, so offensive to the refined ear and sensitive soul. It is not only intensely vulgar, but altogether senseless. Never does a man seem more idiotic than when indulging in the profane use of God's name; never does he seem less a man; in fact no gentleman will stoop to this senseless evil, than which there are probably none more demoralizing to society. The swearer is of the same class as the drunkard, the liar and the gambler, all of whom are adepts in this senseless art. God has given us a voice that we may praise him, and as the Father of all mankind he certainly has a claim upon us."

I said but little now, for my conscience was ill at ease. My wife had not yet discovered that I was somewhat given to profanity when out among the boys. I acknowledged the truth of what she said, feeling exceedingly small. She continued:

"And, my husband, as the swearer has his seat with the gamblers and liars and drunkards, so must the gambler have his seat with the drunkards, the liars and the swearers; and the seemingly harmless game of cards may lead to gambling. I noticed to-night the flush of excitement that you could not force back when the crisis of the game was nearing. I cannot help seeing how the love of card-playing grows upon you. Oh! my husband, I beg of you to desist before it is too late!"

But I only laughed and, kissing her, assured her that she need have no fears for me; that I played only for amusement, etc., etc.

Ten years have passed. Is it only ten? Yes, it must be, but it seems centuries. I look at my hands, so weak, and white, and nerveless; I glance at my clothing and shudder, even yet, to see the stripes; I place my hand on my head to feel the short stubble that has for so long held the place of the brown waves that my Mary was once so prone to caress. The warden tells me my stubble is streaked with gray. I glance from my window, but the bars so mar the beauty of the view that I turn away shuddering. In a prison-cell! O, God! A convict! How vividly it all comes back; and with each fresh memory

I pray God—yes I have learned to pray—for strength to bear it all until he sees fit to release me. But before I go I could wish to impress upon the young men of this great land the urgent necessity of "calling out the sentinels of the soul," bidding them watch; of avoiding the appearance of evil; of trusting not in the arm of flesh. How sure I felt of myself in those old days; but the fascination grew. There is a fascination about cards which does get a very strong hold upon the player. Sin is very pleasant at first; its delusive charms are most alluring. Heedless of my wife's protests, sure of my own strength, and my ability to give it all up at any moment I chose, before I realized it the gambling habit was so firmly fixed upon me that I had not the will to turn from it. At least I had not the moral power to exercise it.

I saw my possessions grow less and less; I saw our home go; at last I saw the very furniture of the house we occupied taken away—all to pay gambling debts.

Then came a blow. A tiny babe had come to us during the first year of our married life, and—incongruous as it may seem that one so despoiled of morals could love—I loved that little piece of humanity; I would curse myself that I could bring my little one to beggary, and then go out to make such beggary more complete. Then God in his mercy took her to himself. As I stood by the casket that held the form of our darling I made a vow that henceforth I would live an honest life. My friends encouraged me, and as time passed, and I resolutely kept my pledge, I was entrusted with an office in which a large amount of public money passed through my hands; it was here that the old temptation came back. I fought against it, but it was a demon in strength, and I was but a poor, weak mortal, without the help of him who giveth strength to overcome the tempter. I yielded; the money entrusted to my care followed in the wake of my own money and my home, and I was imprisoned for embezzlement. Soon, very soon, my wife was laid beside our little one, and I knew I had broken her heart. I seemed a murderer in my own eyes, and would have ended my miserable existence had I had an opportunity; but I was closely watched, and thereby saved from a double crime.

Then followed days, weeks and months of such wretchedness as I trust none other may ever know. Finally, for lack of other reading-matter, I began a study of the Bible, and found that even the worst of sinners might receive God's pardoning love.

The memories of the past will ever sadden, and the thought of all the years lost when I might have been working in the interest of God's kingdom will ever cause me deepest regret; yet, if there may be in another world any way by which I can atone for the past, and make up for my ingratitude on earth, I trust the good Lord will permit me to serve him, even in the humblest capacity. I know my time here is short; I know I shall never see the light of day again in this world, save through these bars.

And the beginning of all this was the social game of cards, where I learned the first principles of prize-winning, which after all was but a form of gambling; and it seems to me that any game of chance may tend to cultivate the spirit of gambling. Is it not gambling? What difference is there in the principle of the thing, from the cold-hearted murderers who sat under the shadow of the cross and cast dice for the tunic of the dying Savior, to the belles and beaux of modern society who give progressive euchre parties and offer prizes to the winners. In either case it is getting something without giving in exchange an equivalent. No man has a right to a penny that he does not earn honestly.

The gambling habit has a most peculiar effect upon its victim. Like the drunkard, he becomes corrupt in morals; his finer sensibilities are blunted; he is robbed of his respectability; sooner or later he is clothed in rags, and his wife and children become beggared, broken-hearted, disgraced.

Young men, because I am interested in you, and know your temptations and your weaknesses, I want to say to you this: On the great battlefield of the human heart where the thought and the purpose may become your worst foes, put on the whole armor of God, and with Jesus as your Captain, fight. Put the low propensities of your carnal nature to flight; make them your servants. Do not waver in the conflict, for your success in life hinges upon your victory in these battles.

Choose with care your associates, for if you associate with the tippler you will likely tipple or look mildly upon the habit; if you associate with the curser or swearer you will likely curse and swear; if with a liar, you may become untruthful; if with the gambler, you are almost certain to be fired with the unholy desire for ill-gotten gains. But search the Scriptures; learn how rich is the life of the Christian as compared with that of the worldling; enlist with the cause of righteousness in the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, Young Men's Christian Association and other organizations of similar character; work; look up to Jesus as the model by which to fashion your life.

Finally, "fight the good fight of faith," and Jesus, your elder brother, will stand by you and help you; for he was tempted in all points like as you are.

Queer Salaries.

Probably few people to-day know that the original name of the state of Tennessee was "Franklin," or that in 1788 the salaries of the officers of this commonwealth were paid in pelts; but the following is a correct copy of the law:

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Franklin, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same: That from the first day of January, 1788, the salaries of the officers of this commonwealth be as follows, to wit:

"His excellency, the governor, per annum, 1,000 deer skins.

"His honor, the chief justice, 500 deer skins.

"The secretary to his excellency, the governor, 500 raccoon skins.

"The treasurer of the state, 450 raccoon skins.

"Each county clerk, 300 beaver skins.

"Clerk of the house of commons, 200 raccoon skins.

The Kidneys

are the seat or the starting point of many maladies, all of them serious, all more or less painful, and all of them tending, unless cured, to a fatal end. No organs of the body are more delicate or more sensitive than the kidneys. When symptoms of disease appear in them not a moment is to be lost if health is to be restored. The best way to treat the kidneys is through the blood, cleansing it from the poisonous matter which is usually at the bottom of kidney complaints. For this purpose there is no remedy equal to

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For many years I have been a constant sufferer from kidney trouble, and have tried a number of largely advertised kidney cures without benefit. At last a friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The use of eight bottles of this remedy entirely cured my malady."—MARY MILLER, 1238 Hancock Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Member of the assembly, per diem, three raccoon skins.

"Justice's fee for signing a warrant, one muskrat skin.

"To constable, for serving a warrant, one mink skin.

"Enacted into a law the 18th day of October, 1787, under the great seal of the state."—Christian Endeavor World.

Short Stories.

A Richmond pastor, who is fond of frolicking with children, recently encountered a six-year-old with the question: "What is the physical conditton of your corporeal organization, with reference to the matter of salubrity?" And the child at once replied: "I'm not German." That chap has a right to be smart; hisname is Montague. —Exchange.

Sunday-school class was on the ninth chapter of Acts, and the teacher asked one of the boys: "What is meant by the words in this thirty-first verse, 'Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria?'" And the youthful interpreter, who had not consulted Meyer, nor Hackett, replied: "I reckin they didn't have no preachin'." He was not a success as an exegete; but he was no failure as an observer.—Exchange.

They are telling the story that William M. Evarts was going up once in the elevator at the State Department, which was loaded with applicants for the ministerships and consulships. Turning to a friend who accompanied him, Mr. Evarts said: "This is the largest collection for foreign missions that I have seen taken up for sometime."—Exchange.

It is one of the school laws in Boston, as in other cities, that no pupil may come from a family any member of which is ill with a contageous disease. One day recently Willie K—— appeared before the teacher and said: "My sister's got the measles, sir." "Well, what are you doing here, then?" replied the teacher, rather severly. "Don't you know any better than to come to school when your sister has the measles? Now you go home and stay there until she is well." The boy, who is a veritable little rogue, went to the door, where he turned with a twinkle in his eye and said: "If you please, sir, my sister lives in Philadelphia."—Harper's Bazar.

The Father's Love.

GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

When God's children stand aloof,
Angry at His just reproof,
He must yearn to call us back,
Take us up, supply our lack,
Soothe our sorrows, make us well.
How we grieve Him, who can tell?
We may feel the barrier sore,
But I think He feels it more.
Greatest love feels greatest loss;
Human love is mixed with dross;
Men have turned from God, nor seen
Half the sorrow it may mean.
God, who loves and knows the cost,
Losing, grieves more than the lost!

Clara Barton.

MARY BLACK CLAYTON.

The gratitude of the whole country to the great woman, whose name is at the head of my page, should be given without stint in view of her able and conspicuous services in our recent calamitous war.

Her wonderful executive ability and her untiring devotion to humanity shine in bold relief against a background of governmental "mistakes" during this gloomy summer.

An account of her efforts to establish the Red Cross Society in the United States cannot be out of place.

The Red Cross once carried by the crusaders when they set forth to shed the blood of the infidel in the name of the Peaceful One has become an emblem of a better cause.

Wherever that sacred banner floats, aid is to be found for human beings in the extremity of distress. It no longer leads marching armies, but it follows their track after their bloody business has done its horrid work.

It is also the ensign of hope wherever floods, famine, pestilence or other overwhelming disaster prevails.

M. Henri Dumont, of Switzerland, is entitled to the honor of having first planned the modern confederation of the Red Cross. The idea came to him as he looked at the horror of the battlefield of Salferina in 1859. He proposed to ameliorate the condition of wounded by establishing relief societies in times of peace to prepare for the emergencies of war, and a system of neutrality between the nations by which hospital supplies, nurses, surgeons and wounded should be protected in time of war by wearing one uniform badge. He published a book setting forth his idea and most of the civilized world read and responded.

An international conference was held on the 26th of October, 1863, and fourteen governments were represented, including Great Britain, France, Austria, Prussia, Italy and Russia. The propositions then drawn were accepted as an international code by a congress which met at Geneva, Aug. 8th, 1864, and they were soon accepted by all civilized powers except the United States.

In every battlefield of the Franco-Prussian war the sacred standard was unfurled, bringing help and healing to the wounded and Christian comfort to the dying.

This glorious Christian Republic of ours waited to sign this human treaty until thirty-one other nations, more or less civilized, had given their sanction.

Their duty, plainly presented to our officials by accredited representatives of the international committee for the relief of wounded in war, was entirely neglected until the matter was taken in hand by Clara Barton, a woman frail in body, large of heart and brain, of immense executive ability and braver than all the generals of earth, past, present or to come.

She was sent to Europe by her physicians in search of the strength which she had lost by her humane exertions in the field hospitals of our civil war. In Switerland she was asked why her government declined to follow the good example of the rest of the world. She answered, "If I live to return to my country, I will try to make my people understand the Red Cross Treaty." She then gave a practical illustration of her own understanding of the matter by following the Red Cross through the war between France and Prussia, which was declared a year after she left America in the pursuit of health.

She returned to her country in 1873, apparently hopelessly worn out. After five years of suffering, during which, as she has said, she "forgot how to walk,"

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits, than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY is sound to the core and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

she went to Washington to try to carry out her promise of "taking the name of her native land from the roll of barbarians."

Her faithful work to this end totally failed with the Hayes administration, but Garfield appreciated the disgrace of refusal to sign the treaty and would have done so had he lived. The name of Chester A. Arthur is affixed to it, to his honor be it said. The Senate ratified it without a dissenting voice and Clara Barton was made president of the American National Association of the Red Cross. Twice has she been a delegate from her country to international conventions in Europe. There, in assemblages of men, selected as the wisest and most thoughtful from all parts of the world, she sat, the sole woman, her vote watched for upon questions of the gravest import to her race. She introduced resolutions stretching the prerogative of the societies to meet the needs of the sufferers from flood, fire, famine and pestilence.

I saw her in the midst of the horrors of the Johnstown flood, and she impressed me then as the best and bravest woman in the world.

It is unnecessary to touch upon Clara Barton's able and noble work in the war just over, for it has been so conspicuous that all the world is acquainted with its details.

The motives of politicians are often dictated by self-seeking. Officers may look toward promotion, but this delicate and elderly woman can surely rest when her work in this world is ended. "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, hath promised before the world began."

A Good Story.

The St. Louis Republic tells the following story on two of the prominent captains of the Santiago naval battle. The explanation of the mystery seems quite satisfactory, but it is at the expense of the captains:

"After all the poor Spaniards had been safely tucked away in the various ships of Uncle Sam and all the excitement of the famous battle was over, it was but natural that Captain Evans should call upon Captain Taylor on the latter's ship, the Indiana. Congratulations were exchanged in a manner befitting the occasion, and then the two began talking of their own experiences. It was in the cabin of the big battleship and several of the rescued Spanish officers were sitting disconsolate in the group.

'It strikes me as remarkable,' spoke up Evans, 'that during the first ten minutes of the encounter when I was on the bridge giving orders to my men I heard small shot and shell whistling all about my ears and occasionally would see a huge body of steel go sailing overhead, a discharge from one of the heavier turret guns of Cervera's fine fleet. Then gradually the excitement of the chase became intense, and the throbbing of the engines beneath me and the boom of our own guns finally made me oblivious to the fact that any shells were flying around the ship. It seemed as if we were at target practice and that there was no enemy at all. The smoke enveloped us for a time, too, but in the midst of it all there was no feeling of danger to the ship or the men.'

"'That is truly strange,' declared Captain Taylor, 'but do you know, Bob, I experienced precisely the same sensation? After the first eight or ten minutes of the battle I was not cognizant of the fact that steel missiles of death were flying all about us. The whistling of the shots I heard no more, just as you say. I suppose that is the way it should be in battle, and that a kind providence had made it so.'

"Just then a junior lieutenant of the Spanish line, who was an English scholar and had been taking in everything that was said, broke the silence he and his fellows had maintained since their capture:

"'I think I may explain that of which you have been talking,' he piped. 'We did not fire any shots after the first eight or ten minutes. You drove our men from the guns.'

"Captain Bob looked at Captain Taylor. They looked at each other. They changed the subject."

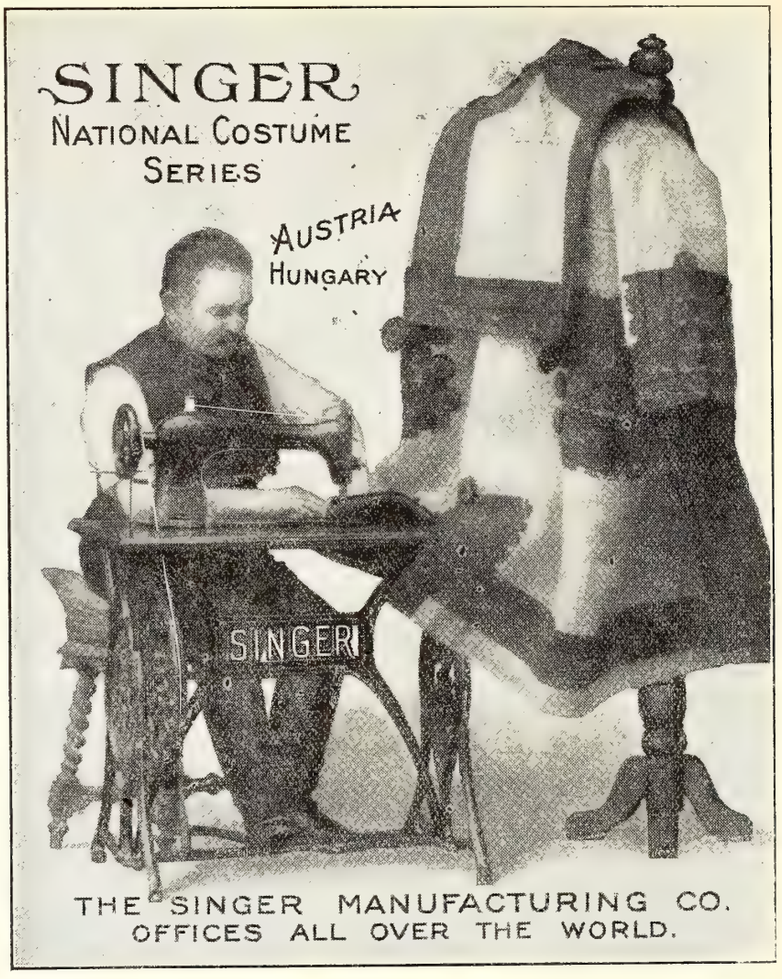
THE GOOD SON OF AN ABLE FATHER.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

It is not often the case that a father who has the qualities of an able and wise administrator is succeeded in the kingship by a son of equally good character. This was true in the case of Asa and Jehoshaphat. The long reign of the former had prepared his son to understand the effect of the king's policy, and happily he threw himself with ardor into the undertaking of still further strengthening the kingdom. Asa had been successful in his wars with the surrounding nations, including Israel, and usually it had been his custom to rely upon divine favor in the conduct of his plans. Jehoshaphat adopted the same policy and proceeded to take advantage of the forward movements which his father had begun by fortifying the cities of his kingdom and garrisoning them with royal troops. These included as well the cities of the Northern Kingdom, which had been taken in the intertribal wars.

But Jehoshaphat did not resemble his father merely in his able and statesmanlike administration of public affairs, but as well in his religious zeal. His ancestry did not terminate with Asa, but ran back to the great name of David, and this fact must have made its impress upon his mind. All that was inconsistent with the traditions of his house must be banished. He saw the evil effect of a departure from the norm of righteousness as witnessed in the affairs of the Northern Kingdom, where false worship and immorality crept in to overthrow the simple primitive worship as established by Moses and Samuel. He determined that his kingdom should be purged from all those influences which tear down rather than build up. The effect of this course was apparent in the prosperity which he enjoyed. His court became the center of admiration and wealth. He had sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all things else were added to him. A feeling of exaltation possessed him. He was borne up by a consciousness of his relation to God and had the satisfaction of seeing the influence of his wise course reflected in the conduct of his people. The tokens of evil worship seen in the groves and pillars of heathen worship were removed.

Perhaps the most notable contribution of Jehoshaphat to the moral upbuilding of his kingdom is to be seen in his campaign of education, which he inaugurated in his third year. Regarding this part of his work the earlier narrative in Kings is silent, but the testimony of the Chronicler is of interest, and the circumstantial form of the narrative which sets forth the names of those employed in the undertaking gives it additional value. It was from the earliest days the business of the priests not only to minister in the affairs of the sanctuary, but as well to be the religious teachers of the people. This had been the purpose in view when the tribe of Levi was set apart for the ministry of the sanctuary. Unhappily, it was not always the case that the Levites concerned themselves in the religious education of the nation. Too frequently they occupied themselves with the offices of the sanctuary to the exclusion of those duties which they owed to the intellectual and spiritual life of the people at large; but in this instance at least the true function of the order was revived, and with it was combined a ministry of the princes in the same direction, which must have been novel for the members of a court which could look back to the traditions of Solomon's time, when the characteristics of the courtiers were far removed from a religious tone. Jehoshaphat sent out the princes in company with the Levites and priests. These men were instructed in the law which formed the norm of Israel's religious and civic life—that law originally given by Moses, at least in its simplest form, and amplified through the growing life of the nation, needed to be brought to all classes; and these men went forth on teaching and preaching journeys, very much as the disciples of Jesus went in the days of his earthly ministry, and as the apostles went out into further regions in the later years of the first century. Theirs was a ministry of education in the highest sense; they traveled from place to place like friars in the Middle Ages, and gathered the people together wherever they could reach them, instructing them in the teachings of the prophets and sages who had interpreted the will of God. The results of this campaign were far-reaching; a new consciousness of the presence of God came to the nation; a sense of solidarity was fostered, and as Israel became more intelligent, it improved in ethical and religious life. Such a policy could not fail to make its impress upon the surrounding peoples. A trained nation is a power in war, as well as in peace, and Jehoshaphat found himself at the head of an organized and able body of people whose efficiency had been increased many-fold by their larger knowledge of the law of God.



One may question Jehoshaphat's wisdom in his later affiliations with Ahab, of Israel, but evidently the earlier years of his reign were keyed to the higher notes of national life and his influence in his own and other lands was great.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

Sons of a good father ought themselves to be good. The presence of God is as possible to us to-day as to the prophets and kings of old. The avoidance of the evil example of others is one of the ways of fortifying the moral life. Jesus promised what he knew would come to pass when he made the early seeking of the the kingdom of heaven the condition of obtaining all other needed blessings. Cleansing the heart of all impurities is as necessary as cleansing a city of defiling images. No permanent good can be reached until people are educated to true ideas of justice and righteousness. The work of providing teachers is fundamental to all national prosperity, and religious and political leaders may well cooperate in so holy a cause. The law of God is a collection of all the divine truth revealed through prophets, apostles and the Master himself. A nation that fears God is a nation that will command respect.

TOPIC FOR OCT. 9.

PATRIOTISM.

(Psa. 33:1-22.)

A wave of patriotic enthusiasm has but just swept over our country. Now that it has somewhat subsided, it is quite appropriate that we should pause and reflect whether this patriotism has been of the true sort or not. We are all well aware that a great deal of foolish extravagance and nonsense has been indulged in by yellow newspapers and yellower jingoes. But as to the great multitude of our people, has their patriotism been shoddy, or of a high grade?

To answer this we must ask, What is true patriotism? and the reply to this question will come, not so much from the Scripture lesson for this subject, although the reply is there in essence, as from the attitude of our Lord. What was Jesus' patriotism? He undoubtedly loved his people and came to the lost sheep of his own nation first. But was he a Jew above all things else? Was he for his country right or wrong? Did he not come to Israel first only as a means to a larger end? Had he not visions of a larger nation? The logic of his teaching quickly swept the hearer out beyond the confines of a single nation. His "whosoever" and his "all ye" were wider than Judaism. He came to seek and to save all the lost. His love was a love for all men. Ah, but you say Jesus is no real test for the patriot of to-day. Jesus is the test for men in all conditions and all positions. And the greatest, truest patriots that the world has known have followed Jesus in this, that they have loved their country for the sake of the world. Abou Ben Adhem loved his fellowmen and thereby loved his God. The true patriot loves his fellowman and thereby loves his country.

Immediately, then, we see by such a test as this, the absurdity of such cries as, "My country right or wrong!" Immediately we perceive that sometimes, for the good of our country, we must oppose our country. Some men have even quit their country for the good of their country—and not all of them criminals, either. Some have expatriated themselves because they loved their country and their countrymen. Tyndale became a voluntary exile from a country whose rulers hated him, in order that he might give to his countrymen the Scriptures in the English tongue. One may oppose, with might and main, the whole policy of his government and yet stand ready to die for that same country. Such a thing did Jesus, and such has many another patriot done. The man who loves his fellowmen is the man who loves his country. Lowell asks:

> "Where is the true man's fatherland?
> Is it where he by chance is born?
> Doth not the free-winged spirit scorn
> In such scant borders to be spanned?
> O yes, his fatherland must be
> As the blue heavens, wide and free."

Our nation, then, as an instrument of God! Our nation as a means of enlightening and of serving and of saving men! This is the object of our patriotic love.

How have we stood this test in recent months? Has our fervor been stirred simply because it was our own country that was concerned? The sober reflection that comes to us now cannot believe that we have failed of fulfilling in some small degree our Savior's ideal. It was not for our country that we went. It was for oppressed and suffering men and women. It was not love of our nation alone that blazed forth in indignation till it culminated in cannon-flame. It was not simply because our own ship had been sunk at Havana Harbor; but it was because a tyrannous government had made such outrages on Cubans or Americans possible, that our people rose as one man. It was love of men, love of right for man, that caused our nation, hitherto stigmatized as a money-loving, crafty, commercial people, to pour out money like water and blood, more precious than money, for an unselfish purpose. At all events, a true American is glad to believe that these were our high motives. If any possessed motives below these, such motives were not true patriotism.

And in the years that are just before us, in the difficult and strange responsibilities that rest upon us, the true patriot will not wish his country to draw back or shirk for its own selfish sake, but he will wish it to do, for the love of men everywhere, that which will best serve for their enlightenment and uplifting. In politics, home or foreign, let us never say that the Golden Rule has no place. In the years immediately before us it is ours to be actuated, not by what is best simply for these states, but for mankind.

FIELD.

Mrs. Weltha Sexton Field was born Nov. 1, 1811. After an illness of three months she died at her home, near Ballards, Mich., on Aug. 30, 1898. She had been a widow eight years. One son died in 1875; two sons and two daughters mourn her loss. She with her husband united with the Church of Christ in 1862, having formerly been a member of the Baptist Church. She was a woman whom to know was to love. Abby Field.

MOORE.

It is with the deepest sorrow, but sweetened with the brighest and strongest hope, I chronicle the transition of our dear Sister Eva Moore, wife of our beloved Bro. C. A. Moore. After an illness of some three weeks our dear sister quietly and peacefully fell "asleep in Jesus" at their home on Carroll Street, Nashville, Tenn. Her leave-taking was on the morning of August 30th, surrounded by the little family—her loving husband and dear little boy. Funeral services were held the next day afternoon in South Nashville Christian church. Almost the entire congregation was present, besides quite a number of visiting brethren and sisters, to share as best they could the sorrows of Bro. Moore. Sister Moore left a little babe—a sweet little girl—only about 10 days old. Oh, how sad for a child not to know the love, care and caresses of a fond mother! She leaves also a bright boy, Paul, about eight years of age. Sister Moore committed these two treasures, of course, to Bro. Moore, who will lovingly care for them and bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Some two years ago their then baby-boy, Van, was taken from them to join the great army of little children who are in heaven. Jesus loved little children while upon earth, and often pronounced a blessing upon them, and we are sure he loves them none the less in his heavenly home. Mother has gone to be with little Van, while father remains to care for Paul and the baby-girl. Sister Moore's maiden name was Thompson. Her mother died when she was but a child. Her father died last year, near Mt. Sterling, Ky. Sister Moore was 35 years of age, and had been been a member of the Church of Christ for 20 years. She was a member in the highest and truest sense. It has scarcely ever been my pleasure to meet one with all the Christian graces so beautifully developed as in Sister Moore. Her open expression and kindness drew every one to her. She was a close student of the Bible and ready for every good work in the church. She was a coworker with her husband in the ministry, in that she rendered him every possible encouragement, and often accompanied him in his visitations to the sick and other work of the church. She was a woman of strong and decided convictions, therefore matters in which she was interested she weighed well and reached her own conclusions, and was not swayed from them by every wind of doctrine. Her faith was strong in the Christ, and it was her greatest pleasure to attend the services of the church. Her faith never wavered, even in the greatest and strongest trials. Such an heritage left to the family, church and the world, is certainly to be prized. Let us imitate such a life, that when we are called we, too, can leave a similar heritage. We can but sorrow over the loss of one like Sister Moore, but our tears are sweetened with the thought that our great loss is her infinite gain. I am sure the entire brotherhood, and especially those who know Bro. Moore, not only in America, but also in Australia, his native country, will unite in love, prayers and sympathy for him. May God bless this dispensation of his providence to the good of us all!

A Serious Situation.

It concerns the brotherhood to know that the cause of Ministerial Relief is seriously embarrassed and that longer indifference to its claims invites dishonor. On account of falling off of receipts, we were obliged to reduce the July quarterly allowances twenty per cent., which was a serious matter to the worthy and needy brethren whose better care we seek to secure. I am advised that there is now on hand—available for present use—only $500. The quarterly allowance requires $1,000. Shall these claims be reduced one-half? The October payments are in many cases the chief reliance of their recipients in their slender preparations for the coming winter. Must they be disappointed and be allowed to suffer for the small comforts they so well deserve? Does not the situation appeal strongly to our sense of justice and honor? God grant that your answer may be prompt and generous! "I was hungry and ye fed me."

The Religious World.

According to the estimate of a writer in Blackwood's Magazine, there are 9,000,000 Jews in the world, of whom 5,000,000 are found in Russia, 2,500,000 in Eastern and Western Europe, 1,000,000 in America, 200,000 in North Africa and only 70,000 in Palestine.

At a session of two full Presbyteries, a few weeeks ago, at Birmingham, Alabama, it was decided to go over to the Northern Presbyterian Church at the earliest opportunity. It will be remembered that a separate Southern Presbyterian Church for colored people was organized at the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church at New Orleans some months ago. It would seem from the action of the two Presbyteries at Birmingham above noted that the colored people of the South do not think favorably of the separate church for colored folks plan and propose to seek more congenial quarters in the Presbyterian Church North.

The twenty-fifth annual convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet in the People's church, St. Paul, Minn., November 11 to 16, 1898. This will be the first convention of this great body of temperance workers since the death of its great leader and will be a memorial convention. A strong appeal has been issued by the acting president, L. M. N. Stevens, and corresponding secretary, K. L. Stevenson, calling for a large attendance and arousing the enthusiasm of the W. C. T. U. women to greater things in their divine mission. Let all women and mothers heed their call and pray for the success of their cause.

We had learned that Christianity was making rapid progress in Japan and exerting a wide influence over the people of that island, but we had not yet thought of its direct influence upon its government, and were quite surprised by an article in a recent number of the Independent, from M. L. Gordon, telling us of members of the Diet who were Christians. The president of the Diet, Mr. Kenkichi, Dr. Gordon says, is a well-known member of the Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Soroku Ebara, another member of this body, an earnest Methodist. In a recent election in Japan, Dr. Gordon says: "The Constitutional party have elected 258 out of 300 members of the Diet. For some local reason unknown to me Mr. Ebara was not re-elected; but in Mr. Kataoka's district only two votes were cast in opposition. And other Christians have been elected. One of these, Mr. Saibara, a trusted member of the Kumi-ai Church, was chosen by a large majority."

Archbishop Ireland has said that the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippine Islands will not oppose the plan of the new administration in those islands, but will conform to the new conditions, which of course means the separation of church and state. This will necessitate a readjustment of their affairs in those islands, but as the Roman Catholic Church has had considerable experience in such adjustments it will of course understand just what is necessary in the case. It will have to find its own finances for its bishops, priests and secular schools.

What seems like a successful if not a model church is the Bethany Church, Philadelphia, Pa., for which Wilbur Chapman preaches. The membership of Bethany church numbers over three thousand, and the Sunday-school has on its register over six thousand names. The last report states that for congregational purposes the sum of $32,500 was raised, and $12,000 in addition for miscellaneous benevolent purposes. And yet who but God knows the resources and responsibilities of such a body. Perhaps if the wealth of its membership was known and the amount of unused energy, idle factors, etc., its record might not look so brilliant. And yet we rejoice in what this church and its great preacher has done and is doing for humanity.

The present position of Evangelist B. Fay Mills in the religious world has raised a new question, which may yet assume considerable importance in the relative attitude of orthodox churches toward each other in the future, that of a membership in two or more denominations at the same time and on this question the Independent speaks as follows:

The carrying on of discipline and the removal of unworthy ministers is, we suppose, an ecclasiastical necessity. The duty occasionally has to be done. Yet it is the smallest part of ecclesiastical service. It is not what should control the government of a denomination; it is only occasional and subsidiary. Other things are of vastly more importance, the evangelistic work of the church, and the loving fellowship of its parts. If any evangelist, like Mr. Mills, or Dr. Pentecost, or Mr. Moody, working with equal delignt in different denominations, wished to be a member of two or more of them, the advantage to be gained thereby should not be prevented by the fear that he might by and by be disciplined for murder or slander. The double membership expresses beautifully the fellowship of the churches. It brings them together. It is a fascinating illustration of the worthlessness of the things which divide them, and of the importance of the things in which they are one; and it is a promise of closer fellowship in the future. This is a vastly more important matter than the consideration of discipline, which at the same time is not at all affected. Our business, as Christians, is not to bring people together, not to keep them apart; and a rule which forbids a member of one denomination to join any other comes very near being unchristian, in being exclusive. At any rate it makes that the chief consideration which should be the least.

While war is going on there must be court martials; but armies are organized for war rather than court martials, and who wants to bother with them when there is fighting to be done? With its sword of faith the Christian Church fights to achieve that placidam quietem which the motto of Massachusetts looks for, and which we love to call the millennium. It is for peace and good-will that the church must seek, for fellowship and union in its ranks; and the more intimate the interlacings that hold it together the closer and more blessed will be its unity. Let those that must organize its courts and be jury over its offenses; but its better work is to be teachers in its schools, and to cultivate the oneness of its citizenship, and the privileges of its common citizens in all its states.

Austria (Hungary).

The Magyars of Asiatic origin in the 9th century are to-day the dominating race in Hungary, consequently the Magyar is the official language. The Mongolian origin of the people is shown in their love for quick, passionate dancing, the accompaniment to which is familiar to most music-loving people. It is further shown in their fondness for bright colors and rich embroidery.

In another column is pictured a country tailor of the district of Heyduke as he sits at a Singer Sewing Machine applying heavy, bright-colored braid to the gala costume of a Magyar peasant.

Literature.

REMINISCENCES. By John Aug. Williams. F. L. Rowe, Cincinnati, O., Publisher. Price, 75 cents.

It is a real pleasure to open the pages of the above book. The style of the writer, the themes treated and the opportunities afforded for contrasts and comparisons in the progress of society combine to make it a book of more than passing pleasure. The author of this book has not only afforded his readers a literary treat in this volume, but much valuable information about the ways of society, its various freaks and forms in Kentucky during the first half of the present century, which may also be utilized as data from which to draw conclusions on ethical, civil and religious customs. One cannot help enjoying the book as he reads its pages.

"The Divided Church," is the title of a tract written by John Logan, Evangelist, Gatesville, Texas, and published by the Christian Courier Company, Dallas, Texas.

This tract claims to be a critical review of the "progressive" and "anti" controversy in the Christian Church. Evidently the tract was written to meet a condition in Texas. It meets the condition in that state admirably. But the positions and arguments of the writer have a much wider application.

The use that is made of Paul's conduct in Jerusalem, described in the twenty-first chapter of Acts, read in the light of Acts, fifteenth chapter, the decree of the Jerusalem council, is, so far as I am informed, new in this controversy about instrumental music, Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday-schools; but the position is impregnable.

A distinction is made between "union" and "uniformity" which ought more frequently to be made in our preaching and teaching. B. B. T.

The Whiting Paper Company, Holyoke, Mass., one of the largest manufacturers of fine writing papers in the world has published a booklet in very attractive and artistic style on "The Evolution of Paper," in which some very interesting facts are related. The booklet is for free distribution.

The Illinois Steel Company has published an outline history of their vast plant, at Chicago, in a most attractive and finely illustrated book. One who has not visited such a plant cannot realize the magnitude and complications of such an enterprise, and this book will be found useful in helping one to realize what a factor such a plant has become in our civilization. The book reveals some astonishing information in machinery and productions of this plant. A copy may be had free.

MAGAZINES.

John Kendrick Bangs' newest stories are to appear in the Ladies' Home Journal. They are called "Stories of a Suburban Town." There are several, and each will relate some droll incidents in the life of a small town which every "suburbanite" will instantly appreciate and enjoy laughing over.

"Causes Affecting Railway Rates and Fares" is the subject of a paper by Dr. Walter E. Weyl, which has recently been published by the American Academy of Political and Social Science, of Philadelphia, Pa. Dr. Weyl, has studied the subject of transportation, both at home and abroad, and his paper is an interesting and valuable contribution to the literature in this field.

"Oscillations in Politics" is the subject of a paper by A. Lawrence Lowell, Esq., that has lately been published by the American Academy of Political and Social Science. Mr. Lowell, who ranks among the foremost writers on political questions, shows in this paper that there is a tendency in democratic countries like the United States and England to an oscillation in politics, by which one great party succeeds the other in power at more or less regular intervals.

Publishers' Notes.

The Outlook, of New York, in its issue of Sept. 24th, 1898, gave a short review of Prof. A. Fairhurst's late book, "Organic Evolution Considered." The following is an extract from the above-mentioned notice: "It is admitted that there are objections to the theory of Organic Evolution, as there are to the theory of gravitation. To present these objections is the aim of 'Organic Evolution Considered,' by Prof. Fairhurst, of Kentucky University, who has marshaled them in formidable show." This work is a book of 386 pages, and the price is $1.50, postpaid.

Such authority as the Sunday-School Times, of Philadelphia, has the following to say concerning "In the Days of Jehu," by J. Breckenridge Ellis:

"The story traverses the history of Israel from the reign of Baasha to the death of Jehu. * * * * This book will be useful in enforcing upon the minds of the young the stirring quality of the history of Israel in those days."

"In the Days of Jehu" is hansomely bound in cloth, and contains 188 pages. The price is 75 cents, postpaid.

QUEEN ESTHER

By M. M. Davis, pastor Central Christian Church, Dallas, Texas, is now complete and ready for delivery. It comes from the press beautifully bound in latest style cloth, printed in clear type, and is appropriately illustrated.

This book contains the story of the life of this beautiful Bible character, told in an interesting and attractive style. The book brings to the mind of the reader the beoutiful traits in the character of this great and pure woman.

This book should be placed in the hands of the young men and women of our times, because of the good influence it will have on the minds and hearts of this class of readers. The book is 12 mo. in size, contains 136 pages and the price is 75 cents, postpaid. Send for "Queen Esther," and place it before your sons and daughters.

BEGIN NOW.

The season of the year is now at hand when people will begin to spend their evenings around the reading lamp. They will want good books to read, and will be ready soon to buy them. The agent must be prepared to meet this demand of the reading public. Many persons would be glad to use some of the approaching long evenings in carefully reading "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope," by John L. Brandt. The agent is the person to supply the demand for this book. The reader wants the book, and we can furnish them to agents at such a figure as will repay him for his labor in canvassing for it. We want an agent in every community. Write us for our terms on "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." A glance at the book is followed by a desire to read it through.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL LIBRARY.

It is the duty of each Sunday-school that is financially able to provide, in addition to the Bible, good books for use by the school.

The time of the year is now approaching when the minds of the young will eagerly take hold of reading matter. Nourishment for the mind should be selected with as much care as that for the body. Many Sunday-schools are able to purchase a few books which, kept circulating among their pupils during the winter, will do a vast amount of good.

A small, well-selected library, thoroughly read, will be a power for good in any community. We can offer special inducements to Sunday-schools and Endeavor Societies that want to commence this good work. A dozen or so good books will not cost a large sum and will do well for a beginning. Additions can then be made as your needs require. Prepare now to make room for these good companions in your school.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS.

Miscellaneous wants and notices will be inserted in this department at the rate of two cents a word, each insertion, all words, large and small, to be counted, and two initials stand for one word. Please accompany notice with corresponding remittance to save book-keeping.

TEACHER of Bookkeeping, Typewriting, Stenography, wanted. A lady teacher of the above subjects, a member of the Christian Church, who would like a position in a first class female school, is requested to communicate with,

On the Rock

OR,

Truth Stranger Than Fiction.

THE STORY OF A STRUGGLE AFTER THE TRUTH AS IT IS FOUND IN CHRIST.

By D. R. Dungan.

Many editions of this book have been sold, and the demand increases. It is the most popular book on FIRST PRINCIPLES ever published by our people.

This volume discusses no new themes, nor does it present novel ideas upon the old theme of Christianity. Its novelty is found in protesting against novelties in religion, and insisting upon the usages of the primitive Church. It adopts a method for the discussion of salvation from sin which is, it is hoped, adapted to the popular education on the religious issues of the day. It was written for the benefit of, and is dedicated to, the People, with the prayer and hope that it will be widely read, and that it will do them good.

The author has carefully avoided technical expressions and obscure phrases, in order that it might meet their wants. He has endeavored to take these questions from the exclusive hands of the theologians, and place them in the hands of the people for their own adjudication. Will they, like the Bereans, examine the Scriptures to see whether these things be so?

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.
